Now, in answer to the gentleman from Kansas, undertaking to say that this is a secret fund given to the President, I will say it is no such thing. It is an emergency fund given to the President by this Congress to utilize as he pleases, and the President has done nothing in secret as intimated by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL]. He has no secrets from the American people. He stands here doing what he believes is his duty, and I believe he did right, and I believe it is our duty in all fairness and all honesty to reimburse that fund. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, announced that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On April 4, 1918:

H. R. 5351. An act providing for the disposal of certain lands in block 32, in the city of Port Angeles, State of Washington;

H. R. 11123. An act to amend an act approved September 24, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize an additional issue of bonds to meet expenditures for the national security and defense, and, for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war, to extend additional credit to foreign governments, and for other purposes"; and

S. 2469. An act to authorize the change of name of the steamship Caldera to A. T. Kinney.

On April 5, 1918:

S. 3714. An act to provide further for the national security and defense, and, for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war, to provide credits for industries and enterprises in the United States necessary or contributory to the prosecution of the war, and to supervise the issuance of securities, and for other purposes.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, I merely wish to supplement what has been so well said by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CANTRILL] by submitting one or two observations.

If any gentleman has any doubt as to the necessity, the urgent necessity, of the action taken by the Secretary of the Treasury, indorsed by the President of the United States, I respectfully request that gentleman to send to the rooms of the Committee on Rules and get a copy of the brief hearing upon this proposition and read it. The hearing did not take up very much time, and every question that has been asked, I think, has been answered in the hearing by that committee. I understand the hearings had before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have not been printed. They are somewhat fuller and go more into detail than the brief hearing held by the Committee on Rules.

The records of the War-Risk Insurance Bureau at this time are kept at eight different places in the city of Washington.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Chairman, may I interrupt my colleague?

Mr. POU. Yes; I yield.

Mr. GLASS. Did it appear in the evidence before the Committee on Rules that the Secretary of the Treasury did write a letter to the President, and that the proposition did receive the indorsement of the President?

Mr. POU. At the time the hearing was had by the Committee on Rules that action had not been taken.

The records of the War-Risk Insurance Bureau are kept at eight different places, in all sorts of buildings, some of them in highly combustible buildings.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POU. I do.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think the gentleman has a copy of the letter. Does he intend to insert it?

Mr. POU. Yes. I am going to ask to have it inserted in the RECORD and consume part of my time in having it read to the House.

These records of the War-Risk Bureau, which can not be replaced, are, as I have said, distributed in eight different buildings; and, as the gentleman from Kentucky has said, they are guarded night and day. Ten additional buildings are occupied by the Internal-Revenue Bureau, making 18 in all. There is no other available place in the city of Washington except this Arlington Building wherein these two great bureaus can be housed. Their records can not be consolidated under one roof unless the Arlington Building is acquired, and in the circumstances the Secretary of the Treasury decided that the urgency was so great, that the danger was so great, he would not take the risk of destruction any longer, and he assumes the full responsibility for all that has been done.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question, entirely for information?

Mr. POU. I do.

Mr. REAVIS. I think all the Members of the House appreciate the necessity for the Treasury Department having more room. The complaint, if it may be called such, of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], as I understood it, was the alleged impropriety of purchasing this property out of the usual way. Ordinarily such things come on the floor of the House, where the necessity of the purchase and the price to be paid are debated and discussed. I wish the gentleman would state, if it will not interfere with his line of thought, what was there in the condition that would lead to the belief that Congress was not ready to act upon this and that would justify the President in making this purchase out of that fund and without waiting the action of Congress?

Mr. POU. The urgency, as I understand it, was simply this: If these records were to be put in a fireproof building and as nearly as possible under one roof, the Government must acquire this particular building, there being no other available building in the city; and the Secretary of the Treasury decided that the urgency was such that he felt it to be his duty to act; the urgency was such, the risk was so great, that he did not dare to wait longer upon the action of Congress. To him his duty was so obvious he felt he had the right to assume that his action would be ratified by Congress.

Mr. REAVIS. Just a word further.

Mr. POU. Yes.

Mr. REAVIS. That was the decision of the Secretary of the Treasury? What I want to know from the chairman of the Committee on Rules is this: Would the facts justify that opinion? I mean by that this: Is it not possible, and was it not possible, for the Committee on Rules to submit that measure to Congress, so that it could have been acted upon immediately and without unnecessary delay?

Mr. POU. The Committee on Rules was intending to submit the matter to Congress. The rule had already been authorized, but the Secretary of the Treasury decided that it was a matter that ought to be acted upon at once, and for that he assumes full responsibility. As a matter of fact, one option held by the Government on this property had expired on the 11th of March. The Secretary did not know how long the offer of the owners to accept $4,200,000 would be held open. He could not know that some private individual or corporation would not purchase the property. He simply knew it could be had now if proper action were taken. He had exhausted every effort to acquire space, and as the price was deemed fair and reasonable the Secretary decided he could not afford to wait.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield to me for a moment, I think I can help the whole situation by a plain recital of what occurred.

Mr. POU. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SHERLEY. There came to the Committee on Appropriations an estimate for the purchase of the Arlington site and the erection of this building in exact accord with the action that has now been taken, the price being the same; but the estimate coming after the hearings had closed on the urgent deficiency bill, it was impossible at that time to have a hearing and make the item a part of that bill. When the urgent deficiency bill came on the floor it carried provisions for buildings for housing other activities of the Government. The question was raised by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds as to the action of the Committee on Appropriations in carrying provisions for buildings that had not been authorized. The point of order was made by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK], and the provision in regard to the housing of other activities went out of the bill. Subsequently it was permitted to be restored without the obtaining of a rule to make it in order.

In view of those facts it did not seem to the Committee on Appropriations that it would be warranted in undertaking to act upon the Arlington matter until authorization had been made by the Congress. In the meanwhile there has been a legislative congestion in this House. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds some time ago reported a bill to authorize the purchase of this sight and buildings. If that bill were passed tomorrow there still would have to be an appropriation carried. Presumably the Secretary of the Treasury felt the need for either carrying out this project or undertaking some other, and as he believed this to be a desirable thing, and the action of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds confirming his judgment, he has felt warranted in going ahead without waiting for the authorization and appropriation by Congress, which would probably have delayed action a month or two further.

I think this also ought to be said in view of what has been said by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN]: The Committee on Appropriations has never functioned in this matter and has never turned down or approved this proposal, for the reasons I have stated.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit me to make an inquiry, if it will not interrupt him?

Mr. POU. I have but little time.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The gentleman can get more time if he wants it.

Mr. POU. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Having regard for the construction of a new building as a permanent building for the Government, is it not desirable that the building when constructed shall have certain architectural features that will make it a desirable public building and an addition to the city of Washington, especially in that location? The Fine Arts Commission has a plan, which has been carefully worked out, embracing the construction of a building on that site. Has any consideration been given to the kind of building to be erected on that site; and if so, does anybody know what it will look like and what it will be worth?

Mr. POU. That matter was taken up and was considered in the agreement that the Secretary of the Treasury has made in respect to the purchase of the property.

The situation in a word was about this: The Secretary of the Treasury did not know how soon Congress was going to give him authority to take over this building. Of course, he could not know for certain that authority would be given, but he assumed it would be. That is the truth of it, and he decided that it was so necessary to act in the premises that he was willing to take the responsibility without waiting. He has done it, and he submits willingly to any criticism that may properly be made.

Mr. DILLON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POU. In a minute or two I will yield. Now, as to the cost of the building, any gentleman can determine that by reading the hearings. So far as I am concerned, I think there can be no just criticism as to the cost. As to the necessity for prompt action, let us bear in mind that these records are scattered over seven or eight different places, and may be destroyed at any minute. Every available building has been considered by the Treasury Department. I want to emphasize that this is the only building in the city of Washington which can be obtained anywhere in the near future for the housing of the invaluable records of the War-Risk Insurance Bureau. I send to the Clerk's desk and ask that the Clerk read in my time the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Reserving the right to object, this is the letter which bears the authorization of the President?

Mr. POU. It is.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think this letter ought to go into the RECORD.

Mr. DILLON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. POU. I yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. DILLON. Will the gentleman tell how much has been paid down on this proposition by the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. POU. I do not know. I presume nothing has been paid. I think nothing has been paid up to this time.

Mr. SLOAN. Just for information, I desire to know if the depositing of these insurance policies in some place for the Government is a requirement of the statute, or simply a policy of the Government? Ordinarily, these policies are sent to the holders or somebody who may be designated by the man for whose benefit a policy is taken out.

Mr. POU. I understand that records are kept in the city of Washington which, if destroyed, could not be replaced, and the destruction of which would bring about endless confusion. That is the information I get from the War-Risk Bureau.

Mr. DILLON. That is true of the records of the policies; but the gentleman spoke of keeping these policies on deposit.

Mr. POU. No; I was misunderstood. I simply alluded to the records of the War-Risk Bureau. My information is that it is desired to keep these records in a fireproof building, because if destroyed they could not be replaced and that the confusion resulting therefrom would be practically endless. I ask the Clerk to read the letter.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the letter.

The Clerk read as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, March 22, 1918.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: You were good enough to approve, on February 12, an estimate, which was promptly submitted to the Congress, for the purchase by the Treasury Department of the Arlington Building, now under construction, involving a cost, including the proposed annex to it, and such changes and modifications as will make it suitable for Treasury needs, of $4,200,000. A bill was promptly introduced in the House, was reported favorably by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and is now pending. I am hopeful of early action by the House, but the calendar is somewhat crowded with other important matters and I do not know when this bill will be reached; and even after it has passed the House it must pass the Senate. How much time this will require I do not know. I am sure that there is every disposition on the part of the House and the Senate to expedite consideration of this matter, but at best it will take considerable time.

The situation in the Treasury Department is so exigent that I am deeply concerned about its ability to perform the vital work now required of it in the public interest unless immediate measures are taken to provide the amount of office space imperatively demanded. It is not only a question of amount of space, but also of the time within which it can be obtained. It is equally important that this space should be, as far as practicable, under one roof in order that efficiency and speed in the administration of important functions of the department may be secured. Not alone that, but the building should be fireproof in order that invaluable records, especially those in connection with the administration of the War-Risk and Internal-Revenue Bureaus, may not be imperiled by fire.

The Arlington Building is partly constructed. It will have sufficient space to fill the imperative needs of the Treasury, and if taken hold of immediately by the Government can be pushed to prompt completion. If taken hold of now, it can also be constructed with reference to the Treasury's particular requirements, and, in addition to that, the exterior treatment of the building can be greatly improved without large additional cost, so as to make it far more attractive architecturally than the building as now designed.

As you know, the War-Risk Insurance Bureau is now taking care of the dependent families of our soldiers and sailors who are at the front, is administering over $12,000,000,000 of insurance on the lives of our soldiers and sailors, and is performing the most prodigious task of its kind ever undertaken by any Government. This work is rapidly increasing, and of necessity must continue to increase with the growing list of killed and wounded and with the enlargement of the Army and Navy which must come with the progress of the war. The Internal Revenue Bureau must continue to grow as the war proceeds, in order to administer successfully the additional duties which will have to be imposed upon it. These two activities alone require more than 500,000 square feet of space in addition to the 96,000 square feet to be provided by the Treasury Annex soon to be erected on the corner of Pennsylvania Avenue and Madison Place. At present the War-Risk Bureau is being administered in 8 different buildings in Washington, the Internal Revenue in 10 different buildings. The inefficiency, delay, and unnecessary expense resulting from this scattering of the activities of these important bureaus are greater than I can describe. It is extremely hurtful to the public interest; in fact, it works an injustice to the dependents of our soldiers and sailors, and to our soldiers and sailors themselves, when the functions of the War-Risk Bureau are made inefficient because of inadequate office space in which to do the necessary work.

Not the least serious feature of this situation is the fact that the invaluable and irreplaceable records of the War-Risk Insurance Bureau and of the Internal Revenue Bureau are now in considerable part stored in nonfireproof buildings and might be destroyed, to say nothing of the possibilities of loss of human life from overcrowding in such buildings and the insanitary conditions under which the employees are now forced to work.

The activities of these two important bureaus are equaled in large measure by other bureaus of the Treasury, which administer the liberty-bond issues. It is impossible to describe the difficulties under which the Treasury is now laboring in its effort not only to raise essential money through the sale of liberty bonds, but to find room for the employees to work, in order to turn these bonds out promptly and deliver them to purchasers throughout the country. The corridors of the Treasury Building, where light and ventilation are poor, must be used from time to time for this service. It is an injustice to the employees and a reproach to the Government.

The railroad administration will require a large amount of space in order to efficiently manage the railroads of the United States now in the possession and control of the Government. The Interstate Commerce Commission has been good enough to give me as much space in their building as could be spared, but it is wholly insufficient. The railroad administration is seriously hampered even now for want of space, and that condition will grow more acute each day.

The War Finance Corporation, which will spring into existence as soon as the pending law is enacted and receives your approval, must have adequate space in which to do the important work assigned to it. This work will constantly increase with the progress of the war, and room must be provided for that purpose.

The responsibilities resting upon the Secretary of the Treasury are so numerous and important that it adds enormously to his burdens if the agencies under his control are unnecessarily scattered. Efficiency of administration will be greatly promoted by the consolidation, as far as practicable, of these great and responsible activities.

This is a war emergency of the most serious character. I can not overstate it. Every day of delay is aggravating the problem and imperiling the public interest. In these circumstances I am moved to beg you to allot to the Treasury $4,200,000 out of the war-emergency fund in your control, with authority to expend so much of it as may be necessary in the purchase of the Arlington property and the completion of the building now under construction and in the erection of the proposed annex thereto. This will enable the Treasury to get back of the contractor and expedite the work greatly. If the Treasury can take possession of this property immediately, it will be possible to complete a large part of the building and have it ready for occupancy in the early fall.

If you will grant this request, the war-emergency fund may be reimbursed when the Congress passes the pending bill for the purchase of the Arlington property. I am most reluctant to make this request, but the situation is so exigent that I would be derelict in my duty if I did not do so.

I inclose a list of the 18 different buildings, together with a map, upon which is indicated their location in the city of Washington, from which you can see how widely the business of these two bureaus of the Treasury is now scattered.

It is far more economical and far more advantageous to the Government to buy the Arlington property and complete the building than to erect temporary, combustible structures which would represent a large loss in the end and be wholly unsatisfactory for the purposes in view.

Moreover, the activities of the Treasury Department, even after the restoration of peace, will necessitate the use of the Arlington building for a long period of time, if not permanently.

There is no other opportunity in Washington which will meet the Treasury's imperative need within a reasonable time or at all, so far as I have been able to discover.

With the earnest hope that this request may receive your prompt and favorable consideration, I am,

Faithfully, yours, W. G. McADOO.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House.

Inclosure.

Approved and authorized.

WOODROW WILSON.

25 MARCH, 1918.

Mr. POU. The authority under which the President acted appears to be full and ample. After reading the law I submit there is absolutely no ground upon which any criticism of the President or of Secretary McAdoo can be based. The President clearly had authority to authorize this purchase of the property.

That part of the act of Congress approved April 17, 1917, under which the President acted reads as follows:

NATIONAL DEFENSE.

For the national security and defense, and for each and every purpose connected therewith, to be expended at the discretion of the President, and to be immediately available and to remain available until December 31, 1917, $100,000,000.

The act of December 15, 1917, continuing the appropriation reads:

EXECUTIVE.

The appropriation of $100,000,000 "for the national security and defense, and for each and every purpose connected therewith, to be expended at the discretion of the President," contained in the general deficiency appropriation act approved April 17, 1917, is continued and made available until June 30, 1918.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That letter carries the approval and authorization of the President?

Mr. POU. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Therefore out of the $100,000,000 fund the President has authorized the use of $4,200,000 for this purchase.

Mr. POU. Four million two hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Now, it seems to me that the question as to the propriety of the authorization is the question which concerns the gentlemen who have spoken.

Mr. POU. I am going to conclude by asking unanimous consent to have printed, along with the letter which has just been read, a letter of Secretary McAdoo, of March 9, addressed to myself, answering several questions as to why the Government does not acquire this building and why the Government does not acquire that building.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a letter addressed to him by the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. McAdoo. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letter is as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, March 9, 1918.

Hon. EDWARD W. POU,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I take pleasure in replying categorically to your three questions of the 8th instant indirectly bearing on the purchase of the Arlington property.

Question No. 1. Why doesn't the Government use the Poli Theater property?—Answer No. 1. Theater property is not at all suitable for departmental use. The lobby, auditorium, and stage occupy seven-eighths of the building and, being practically without natural light and ventilation, could not be utilized in their present condition. The cost of remodeling and reconstructing the building would be prohibitive, and even then the space would not be suitable for use by the Government nor would the amount of space be sufficient.

Question No. 2. Why doesn't the Government use the Oxford Hotel?—Answer No. 2. This building is in very poor repair and is cut up into small rooms, which would make the maintaining of an efficient organization impossible. The war-risk insurance and internal-revenue work require large spaces of from 5,000 to 10,000 square feet in one division. The building is also nonfireproof and of very light construction, so that it would not support the files in current use by these bureaus without strengthening the construction. Furthermore, the arrangement has been reached with the lessee of this hotel by which, in exchange for permission to keep the hotel in operation, he has turned over for Government use the four-story building No. 1209–11 Pennsylvania Avenue, containing 12,000 square feet of fairly satisfactory office space against 29,000 square feet in the Oxford Hotel of unsuitable space. Moreover, the demand for living rooms and space in Washington is so great that this property is more useful for hotel or boarding-house purposes than for any other.

Question No. 3. Why can't the Government utilize the G. A. R. Building?—Answer No. 3. A division of the Internal-Revenue Bureau is occupying this building with the exception of the hall on the top floor, the continued use of which has been granted to the Grand Army of the Republic.

There are several other buildings in the block bounded by Pennsylvania Avenue, E, Fourteenth, and Fifteenth Streets which are being utilized to such an extent as is possible, and one four-story building, No. 406–8 Fourteenth Street, has been repaired and an extension built thereto, thus supplying about 26,000 square feet, but these buildings furnish only a very small fraction of the space required by the Treasury Department. The War-Risk Insurance and Internal-Revenue Bureaus alone require 250,000 square feet each, or 500,000 square feet in all, which is half the size of the temporary building recently erected in Henry Park.

All these buildings are highly combustible and should not be used for valuable records.

I hope the above information will furnish you the data required.

Sincerely,

W. G. McADOO.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman have put into his remarks the law appropriating this $100,000,000 for the use of the President, so that we may see that he had the authority to use it for that purpose?

Mr. POU. The law is, of course, available. If I can do so conveniently, I will have it inserted.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I conclude with just this statement: Even after the building is erected adjoining the Belasco Theater, and even after this building is acquired, there will still be a deficit of some 20,000 or 30,000 square feet of necessary space, as I understand it. It will take every inch of these buildings in order to house those engaged in this Government work.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Young, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3400) to regulate the pay of retired chief warrant officers and warrant officers on active duty.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 9054) disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. GORE, Mr. SMITH of South Carolina, Mr. SMITH of Georgia, Mr. GRONNA, and Mr. NORRIS as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. SMALL. Will the gentleman from Iowa kindly allow me to yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK]?

Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa. You have used twice as much time on that side as we have used on this side, and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] desires to follow the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU].

Mr. SMALL. I am aware of that. I hope the remarks of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] will end this discussion about the acquisition of the Arlington Hotel building. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] is chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and desires to speak now.

Mr. FREAR. I am very desirous of finishing to-day.

Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa. Under the circumstances, I do not think the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] ought to ask that the gentleman from Florida speak now. You have used twice as much time as we have, and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] is a member of the committee.

Mr. SMALL. I assume that the gentleman from Wisconsin does not desire to discuss the Arlington proposition. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] desires to discuss that, and we hope to end the discussion on that subject with his remarks.

Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa. Would it not be just as well to have a little discussion on the bill?

Mr. FREAR. I do not inflict myself on the House very frequently. I would be very glad to listen to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK], but there may be others who may desire to be heard on the same proposition following him.

Mr. SMALL. The gentleman from Florida says he will be satisfied with five minutes.

Mr. FREAR. All right.

Mr. SMALL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to enter into any lengthy discussion of this matter. It has been pretty thoroughly discussed, and I do not care to take up the time of the committee. I want principally to ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a couple of letters, one of them being a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. McAdoo, of the same date as the letter that has been read, and in which he inclosed a copy of that letter to me. I also want to ask unanimous consent to put in the RECORD a letter from Secretary McAdoo of February 26 last on this same subject.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman if the letter of the Secretary is the same letter which bears the approval and authorization for the use of the $4,200,000 by the President of the United States?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. His approval is there?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Absolutely. Mr. Chairman, this building will contain 10 stories and an attic above ground and 3 stories below ground, which makes splendid space for the storage of records, and so forth. It is to be a building in keeping with the Treasury Department Building and buildings of that character. It is to be a magnificent building. It will save the Government about $104,000 a year in rent. The Secretary wants the building mainly on account of the War-Risk Insurance Bureau. The War-Risk Bureau had about $12,000,000,000 of insurance applications pending at the time of the hearings, and all of the papers are scattered about in fire traps liable to be destroyed at any time.

It occurs to me, Mr. Chairman, that under the law giving the President the $100,000,000 fund he had a perfect right to divert this much of it for this great war necessity. All of the men and women of this country who have boys in the trenches are interested in the preservation of these papers, which could not be replaced if they were lost. Therefore this arrangement has been made, and nothing has been attempted to be concealed about it. I understand that the Secretary of the Treasury wrote the same letter that he sent to me to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] and to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY], and there was absolutely no attempt at secrecy. If the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] had not heard of this transaction, he is perhaps the only Member of Congress who had not the information that this action had been taken. There was absolutely no purpose on the part of anybody to conceal it; it was open and aboveboard.

The Secretary of the Treasury had a right to ask it and the President had a right to do it, and they are both willing to stand on their rights to enter into this contract under the law which we enacted. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to insert these letters that I have referred to in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letters are as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 26, 1918.

Hon. FRANK CLARK,
Chairman Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. CLARK: Referring to your communication of the 23d instant, I take pleasure in transmitting herewith the following additional data regarding the Arlington proposition:

Estimated cost by the Office of Supervising Architect:

Main building	$2,262,848
(This includes $118,751 for changes required by the Treasury Department, such as modification in design, strengthening floor construction, etc.)
Extension to building	859,502
Site as valued by the Treasury Department	1,000,000
	4,122,350

The actual proposal of the Arlington Building (Inc.) is $4,119,072.

The estimate and the actual proposal are in very close agreement.

The Treasury Department has asked for $4,200,000, so as to have a contingent fund for changes incident to assignment, such as rearrangement of partition work, conduits, and wiring for addressograph and other machines, and also for awnings, shades, etc.

The cost per cubic foot is 40 cents for the main building and 44 cents for the extension. The higher cost of the extension is accounted for because as yet there are no subcontracts in force and consequently labor and material will have to be paid for at a higher rate.

The unit cost of the building and extension combined is 41½ cents per cubic foot.

The site has been included in the estimate at $1,000,000, which is based on the valuation of three real estate experts, as follows:

No. 1. Minimum value	$1,257,745
No. 2. District assessor's office	1,042,821
No. 3. $900,000 to $950,000, average	925,000

The average value of the three valuations is $1,075,188.

This appears to fully justify the valuation by the Treasury Department at $1,000,000.

The structural design of the building has been examined by engineers of the Office of the Supervising Architect and found satisfactory with the exception of the floor construction, which was considered too light for Treasury use, in consequence of which an agreement has been reached with the owners to strengthen the floors so as to make them safe for a live load of 100 pounds per square foot for offices and 120 pounds for corridors.

It is pertinent in this connection to call attention to the beams connecting the columns, which are very light in appearance. This has led to some criticism by people not conversant with the method of construction used in this building. However, these beams are not designed to carry the floor loads but serve to hold the columns in position during erection and in the completed structure become tension members of concrete girders. This method of construction has the approval of building bureaus of several large cities, among others, New York, Baltimore, and the District of Columbia.

I have previously shown the necessity of providing suitable quarters for the Internal-Revenue Bureau, and especially the War-Risk Insurance Bureau, and I believe your committee is fully convinced of this as an urgent war measure. The only two methods of providing space is by erecting a temporary structure or acquiring the Arlington Building, and that the latter is greatly to the advantage of the Government is shown by the following comparative figures:

The temporary buildings recently erected have cost from $2 to $2.35 per square foot of floor area. Assuming the cost at only $2, and the operating expense at 21 cents against 27 cents in the Arlington Building, and assuming the life of the temporary building to be four years, which is probably longer than it can be maintained, then the Government will at the end of the four-year period have expended $1,921,280 for the temporary building against only $1,648,640 for the Arlington Building, or $272,640 less. The following table gives this information in detail:

Life of temporary building assumed at four years—depreciation 25 per cent, interest 4 per cent, operating expense 21 cents, cost assumed at $2 per square foot gross floor area.

Arlington Building—depreciation 2½ per cent, interest 4 per cent, operating expenses 27 cents.

Temporary building.

Interest, 4 per cent on $1,216,000	$48,640
Depreciation, 25 per cent on $1,216,000	304,000
Operating expenses, 21 cents on 608,000 square feet	127,680
Total per year	480,320

Arlington Building.

Interest, 4 per cent on $4,200,000	168,000
Depreciation, 2½ per cent on $3,200,000	80,000
Operating expenses, 27 cents on 608,000 square feet	164,160
Total per year	412,160

At end of year.	Temporary building.		Arlington building.
	Per square foot.	Total.	Per square foot.	Total.
First	$0.79	$480,320	$0.67½	$412,160
Second	1.58	960,640	1.35	824,320
Third	2.37	1,440,960	2.03	1,236,480
Fourth	3.16	1,921,280	2.71	1,648,640

Temporary building	$1,921,280
Arlington Building	1,648,640
Saving in favor of Arlington Building	272,640

Considered on a rental basis, the temporary building costs 79 cents per square foot per year against 67½ cents for the Arlington Building.

It is now not possible to rent any more office space in Washington, but if it were obtainable it would cost not less than twice as much, and probably three times as much, as the Arlington Building.

It is evident that this is a first-class business opportunity that the Government should not neglect, especially as the price is considered reasonable.

Sincerely, yours,
W. G. MCADOO, Secretary.

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, March 28, 1918.

Hon. FRANK CLARK,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. CLARK: I inclose copy of a letter I sent the President in reference to the Arlington Building. The President has authorized me in the circumstances to acquire it out of the war emergency fund.

The exigency is so great that it is not possible to delay action further. I earnestly hope, however, that the bill now pending in the House and favorably reported by the Public Buildings and Grounds Committee, will be passed as promptly as possible, in order that the President's war emergency fund may be reimbursed.

Assuring you of my appreciation of all that you have done in this connection, I am, with warm regard,

Cordially, yours,
W. G. MCADOO.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I want to state one thing further, and then I am through. The testimony was not printed, at the special request of Assistant Secretary Love, who made statements which he said ought not to go to the public. The testimony has been transcribed, is in my office, and any gentleman of the House is at liberty to see it at any time he desires.

Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield 45 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR].

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I desire to digress from the river and harbor bill for a few moments. There is a matter of far more importance before the country at this time than the river and harbor bill. I desire to speak on the subject of Wisconsin's position before the country at large and to discuss matters of national moment that concern the whole country. My attention has been called particularly to an advertisement which I will read and may again refer to later. This advertisement was published in the Rockford Morning Star, a Democratic paper at Rockford, Ill. It could not be published in my own State without having attached to it the signature of the person authorizing it at that time. It violates the Wisconsin law, because it is unsponsored. It is an advertisement two columns in width and is addressed to Wisconsin soldier boys in the camp near Rockford, Ill., and is as follows:

TO THE WISCONSIN SOLDIERS AT CAMP GRANT.

Tuesday, April 2, you are entitled to vote for United States Senator from Wisconsin to succeed Paul O. Husting.

President Wilson, your Commander in Chief, desires all loyal Americans to vote for Joseph E. Davies for United States Senator.

Davies's election means joy at Washington and gloom at Berlin.

Davies's defeat means gloom at Washington and joy at Berlin.

Mr. Chairman, one of the ablest Democrats at either end of the Capitol recently said in public debate:

It will be conceded without argument that I have been, perhaps, as bitter a partisan Democrat as has sat in this Chamber for many years, * * * but when it comes to a question of loyalty to this Government, I deny that there can be drawn a line between a loyal Democrat and a loyal Republican.

I know as I look across the aisle—that I am looking into the faces of men whose sons are, some of them, upon the battle line, some of them in training camps, and some of them upon the blue waves of the ocean. * * * As I look upon this side I see men whose sons are engaged in the same loyal service. As I look into the hearts of all here I know that each man would give his last drop of blood that surges through his veins if he could bring victory to our armies and a glorious fruition to our hopes. * * * Let the election go on in Wisconsin. Let us go on with our business here. * * * I say as a Democrat that if either one of the leading candidates is returned, a loyal man will be sworn in at yonder desk.

Mr. Chairman, I have quoted the words of a distinguished Senator [Mr. REED], whose patriotism rises far above the plane of petty partisanship, and I do so for the purpose of making a brief observation on the same subject.

In opposition to this spirit of loyalty and patriotism the Democratic senatorial whip, Mr. LEWIS, declared in the New Hampshire special election last year that a vote for the Republican candidate for Congress was a vote for the Kaiser. His statement was repudiated by an intelligent electorate, and a Republican Member from New Hampshire was added to those on this side of the aisle, all of whom are supporting every war measure in the present world conflict. The same Democratic senatorial whip has recently presented his usual arguments to the people of Wisconsin in the senatorial campaign with like results, the election of a Republican. [Applause on Republican side.]

That partisan issue of comparative loyalty was attempted last election in Indiana, the home of Vice President MARSHALL, and a former Democratic Member of this body, Mr. Gray, sought reelection through a letter approving his candidacy written by President Wilson. Notwithstanding other active support, Mr. Gray was defeated and a Republican elected who has supported every war measure. [Applause on Republican side.]

Every measure for the prosecution of the war has been supported by practically every Republican and Democrat in the House. There has been no aisle between us in this expression of loyalty to our common Government, and we have not distinguished between upholding a Democratic or Republican President. Although we differ here on political questions, it is not a Democratic country or a Democratic war that commands our allegiance, but a common country and that country's cause which we unitedly support and will continue to support.

This much may properly be said at this time, because of partisan attempts outside of Congress to misrepresent those who are giving their boys on this side of the House and who have loyally contributed all that can be given to our Government in her hour of national crisis.

Ever since the beginning of the European war, nearly four years ago, demands for a united national spirit have been voiced by administration Members and the press. Since our own entrance into the war, legislative criticism of administration mistakes, inefficiency, or extravagance have been tabooed by Republicans and partisanship relegated to the rear. Republican Representatives have unitedly supported every war measure asked for by the President and have avoided criticisms of the party in power, which, on the other hand, has maintained close party supremacy in all matters. We will continue to uphold the President in the prosecution of the war, loyally and wholeheartedly. Our country's cause is greater than any party. [Applause.]

DURING A GREAT WAR CRISIS.

A senatorial election occurred in Wisconsin this week, and the political dogs of war let loose. Closely following claims of grave war inefficiency made to the country by the Democratic leader, Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, chairman of the Senate Military Committee, who startled the country with disclosures of lack of arms, clothing, and proper sanitary conditions for our soldiers; on the same day of a senatorial investigation, disclosing that $800,000,000 in appropriations by Congress for aeroplanes had not yet resulted in a single war plane being shipped to Europe or a single cannon sent to our troops abroad; on a day when important war measures were pending in both branches of Congress; on the day of the greatest battle in all history, with our own American troops engaged, in France; on a day when the world waited in breathless suspense for tiding from that battle—on that day the Vice President of the United States and the Democratic senatorial whip were reported by the press to be far away from their post of duty, demanding of the people of Wisconsin support for the Democratic candidate for the Senate under penalty of being denounced as against their country and for the Kaiser, and as a disloyal people, while the Democratic candidate for Senator, armed with a letter from the President, with its "acid test" of the same import, was repeating bitter partisan claims of superloyalty.

A startling two-column advertisement, presumably with authority from the Democratic National Committee, appeared in a Rockford (Ill.) paper prior to the Wisconsin election:

That advertisement I have already read to the House.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Will not the gentleman again read the advertisement of which he speaks?

Mr. FREAR. I have already read it, but I will read it again. It is as follows:

Tuesday, April 2, you are entitled to vote for United States Senator from Wisconsin to succeed Senator Paul O. Husting. President Wilson, your Commander in Chief, desires all loyal Americans to vote for Joseph E. Davies for United States Senator.

Davies's election means joy at Washington and gloom at Berlin.
Davies's defeat means gloom at Washington and joy at Berlin.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, one moment. I think the gentleman omitted to read the heading of the advertisement.

Mr. FREAR. It is headed, "To the Wisconsin Soldiers at Camp Grant." There we have several thousand Wisconsin soldiers, and I wish to refer particularly to the soldiers of Wisconsin before I have finished.

For extreme partisanship, nothing in American politics has ever equaled this infamous statement that Davies's defeat means gloom at Washington and joy at Berlin.

Who gives joy to Berlin? Who gives joy to the Kaiser? Those who make that false issue in New Hampshire and Wisconsin. [Applause on Republican side.] Those who sink all interests, State and National, through miserable appeals to prejudice in hopes of thereby securing partisan success. They, and they alone, have given to Berlin and the world a false issue. Those who printed that statement are more to be condemned than ignorant men who are misled and act on such palpable falsehoods.

Mr. Chairman, the soldiers will not be deceived, although a few may be improperly influenced. I served with the Wisconsin National Guard for 11 years in addition to 5 years' service in the Regular Army, and know the boys in service.

[NOTE.—The Camp Grant soldier vote for Senator was: Lenroot, 576; Davies, 403; Berger, 85.]

The boys of Wisconsin are intelligent and not easily misled, but the men who sought to deceive them by that wicked article have an account to settle with the American people. [Applause on Republican side.]

Democratic governors, Congressmen, Senators, and heads of bureaus by the score from Washington were called upon to join in this recent drive to make Wisconsin safe for partisan Democracy. The battle has been fought before an intelligent, discriminating electorate. The partisan methods are to be deplored, but the result is a triumph for the American spirit of fair play and high ideals, which refuses to measure loyalty by lip service or party labels.

Mr. Chairman, I do not care to discuss the unprecedented action of distinguished officials in seeking to advance interests of the Democratic candidate by charges of wholesale disloyalty against my State at a time when every ounce of energy should be joined in united effort here; when Wisconsin's sons are giving their full measure of devotion in France; and when every man, be he a Democrat or Republican, is first of all a loyal American. That slander has been publicly rebuked by the electorate of Wisconsin. I do say that the "acid test" of loyalty mentioned in President Wilson's letter and Vice President Marshall's speech on the McLemore and other prewar measures would empty the seats of one-third of the membership of this House, Democrats and Republicans alike, notwithstanding these same members have stood for and voted for every war measure presented to Congress.

That "acid test" of votes before the declaration of war would bar Congressman MANN, the distinguished leader of the House minority, whose loyalty and patriotism is unimpeachable. Even the veteran leader and eminently patriotic ex-Speaker CANNON [applause], the grand old man who sits before me, with his four score years and lifelong record of great public service and unrivaled loyalty, would fail the President's test. Congressman WOODS, chairman of the congressional committee, who enjoys the respect and high esteem of every House Member, and Representatives LENROOT, ESCH, HAUGEN, COOPER, HAYES, MASON, DAVIS, and scores of other strong, loyal Republicans, would be disqualified by the President for public service.

DEMOCRATIC LEADERS AND THE ACID TEST.

More remarkable, the President's "acid test" on votes cast prior to the war would remove from Congress the distinguished Democratic leader of the House, Mr. KITCHIN, of North Carolina, whose able direction of war measures has been loyally supported by Members on both sides of the party aisle. Representative Fitzgerald, the Democratic wheel horse from New York, and FOSTER, KEATING, SLAYDEN, SHACKLEFORD, General SHERWOOD, hero of over 40 battles during the Civil War [applause], and many other strong Democratic Members voted against measures that the President now declares in his letter are "acid tests" of loyalty when applied to a Republican candidate for the Senate in Wisconsin. All these distinguished men and loyal Americans are included in the indictment lodged against the State of Wisconsin. Wisconsin, indeed, is in good company. If acid tests apply in Wisconsin and New Hampshire, then surely they applied to Gray, of Indiana, who voted against the "acid-test" measures and yet received the President's written approval. Does not the test apply to Democrats in Missouri, Mississippi, Texas, and North Carolina? Can the President say, "One rule for northern Republicans, but another for southern Democrats"? If so, why?

More significant of present-day partisanship, the President's acid test, if applied to Abraham Lincoln, who actively opposed the Mexican War, would have disqualified our greatest American and martyred war President from reelection to this House or from any higher office, notwithstanding his unquestioned loyalty to his Government after war was once declared.

Senator Stephen A. Douglas, Gen. McClellan, both candidates for the presidency, and many Democrats whose names are high in history and who loyally supported their Government after war was declared in 1861, would not meet the "acid test" of present-day partisanship as now applied to loyal Republicans.

Is there any difference in the loyalty of the official, however high, and that offered by the humblest mother in the land who hoped and prayed against war, but gave her all when her country called?

Even President Wilson said to us in his messages prior to the war, "I am inclined to think that Germany had a right to sink belligerent ships without warning," and five weeks before entering the war he said he was "not contemplating war or any steps that might lead to it."

Who will question the right of utterance of such sentiments prior to the declaration of war, or the patriotism of the President, or of hundreds of thousands of fathers and mothers who anxiously prayed against war and for guidance from on High for the President in his hours of trial and responsibility. What proportion of the people of this country would have passed this "acid test" before the declaration of war no man can tell, and candidates who make claims of superloyalty now, must offer their own records of service for war and greater sacrifice in its prosecution. Silence in the past on the part of those without records will not meet "acid tests," though they bear a President's indorsement, for the same reason that Congressman Gray, of Indiana, who failed in the test and election, received that same high indorsement before defeat.

SELF-ANNOINTED AND SELF-APPOINTED PATRIOTS WILL BE TESTED IN THE CRUCIBLE OF FIRM AND TRIED AMERICANISM, NOT BY POLITICAL OR PARTISAN STANDARDS.

When Congress declared war, Representatives in Congress, Democrats and Republicans, unitedly gave loyal support to every measure that would help win the war, and their example has been emulated by every State and every community throughout the country. That must be the true test of loyalty.

WISCONSIN'S PROVED LOYALTY.

Wisconsin has been criticized by men high in authority. Let them bring forward the record of their own States, native or by adoption, for comparison. Evidenced by volunteer enlistments the official record shows 54 per cent, or proportionately more soldiers have volunteered from Wisconsin in this war than from any other of the 12 largest States drawn upon for our Army. Wisconsin has over 40,000 men under arms now in this war, and measured by the number of her soldiers in France, approximating 20,000, Wisconsin is second to none at the battle front.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Yes; certainly.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. I would like to say that in an article published in a newspaper just a few days ago the statement was made that for every 15 soldiers in France at this time there was 1 soldier from Wisconsin.

Mr. FOCHT. And let me say, in further tribute to the patriotism of Minnesota and Wisconsin, that, but for the troops from those States, when Meade rode up to Hancock on the slopes of Gettysburg and on that fateful day asked him for God's sake to hold those lines for five minutes, the Union would have been lost; but the troops from Minnesota and Wisconsin did rush up and they held the lines and gallantly helped roll back the tide of treason to defeat and brilliantly aided in rescuing the Union from destruction.

Mr. BRITTEN. And I would like to say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that my father was among those troops from Wisconsin.

Mr. FREAR. My father was in a Wisconsin Cavalry regiment, with three and one-half years' service, and I had two uncles wounded in the Battle of Gettysburg, which the gentleman from Pennsylvania so eloquently described, and I have a boy now in France. [Applause.] The remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT] and other gentlemen are greatly appreciated, for I was about to refer to the fact that Wisconsin furnished the greater part of the Iron Brigade that saved the day at Gettysburg and saved the Union, and a hundred thousand brave soldiers was my State's contribution to that war. In financial aid and quick support of her country's cause in this war and past wars Wisconsin's record for patriotism invites comparison with any State, North or South, none excepted.

New York, New Jersey, Indiana, Virginia, and Mississippi have given loyal support at different times in past history. Wisconsin's critics have arisen from such States, but in past wars and in this war not one of these States has been more consistently loyal or unflinching in tests of sacrifice, national love, and defense of country than my own State. History records the constant loyalty of her people and their glorious achievements. Wisconsin has never wavered in devotion to that flag.

However high the station, critics will find no State with better record for progress, legislative accomplishment, or steadfast patriotic support of our Government in peace or war.

MEN ARE NOT MISLED BY TRANSPARENT PURPOSES.

Attempts have failed to frighten men into the ranks of the Democratic Party either in New Hampshire, Indiana, Wisconsin, or any other State by raising a partisan cry, more to be condemned than the bloody shirt of old, and my distinguished colleague, Mr. LENROOT, one of the ablest Members of this House, whose record for loyalty is unimpeachable, has been vindicated by the people of the great State of Wisconsin.

By a vote of over 150,000 he has been selected by those who know him best for the highest honor in the gift of the State—to represent a people whose intelligence, discriminating judgment, and patriotism will meet every test of loyalty and service in the future as in the past, to represent Wisconsin, the State that is and always has been loyal to this Government. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Chairman, I have here a telegram from the adjutant general of the State of Wisconsin, to whom I applied for information respecting the Wisconsin troops to-day under arms. That telegram is as follows:

MADISON, WIS., March 31, 1918.

Hon. JAMES A. FREAR, M. C.,
House of Representatives:

To date Wisconsin has put into military service under draft act 14,690 men, the excess of 1,814 over draft quota requirement being result of voluntary induction. Credit for voluntary enlistment Wisconsin National Guard previous to August 5 not fully settled, but War Department offers total credit of 19,217 men.

War Department has also given credit for Regular Army enlistments, period of April 1 to June 30, inclusive, 1917, 1,586 men. Total known credit, 35,493. The foregoing takes no account of enlistments, Regular Army, except during those months named, National Guard since August 5 last, nor of any voluntary enlistment, engineers, forestry, or other special organizations, nor in United States Navy, since no official data as to these are available in this office, but indications are that total of these, including Navy, exceeds 7,500. It is known that the entire Guard except a few casuals is with the Rainbow and Thirty-second Division now somewhere in Europe. With Wisconsin men in other units, it may safely be stated that there are approximately 20,000 Wisconsin soldiers on or near the battle lines.

ORLANDO HOLWAY, Adjutant General.

I believe no State in the country in proportion to its population can offer such a splendid record. I state this on all the facts that have come to my hands.

When the Tuscania was sunk not long since, there were 89 men from my district alone on that boat. Wisconsin had more troops on the Tuscania than any other State. The first soldier boys killed in this war and in the Spanish-American War were from Wisconsin. Our boys are in France to-day, many of them with the State guard of which I was a member for many years, and among them is the company I organized over 25 years ago. They are fighting for this war with boys of parents on the Democratic side of the aisle of this House.

WISCONSIN'S SPLENDID RECORD FOR LAW AND ORDER.

I sent to the Attorney General of the United States for a statement regarding Wisconsin and the record of offenses in a State possessing nearly 3,000,000 people. You have understood, I suppose, that there have been mobs and lawlessness there like in other States recently, burnings, explosions, mob-rule, strikes and riots. The Attorney General's office, Washington, D. C., gives the following list of offenses in Wisconsin in both the eastern and the western districts. Remember this State has over 2,500,000 people within its borders, and practically 42 per cent of our boys who are at the front to-day, according to statements I will submit, are soldiers of German extraction. Here are the number of suits: Conspiracy in connection with the draft in Wisconsin, how many? One. Explosives act, how many suits were brought by the Government under that act in the State of Wisconsin? One. Trading-with-the-enemy act, how many cases have been brought—remember this is the official statement from headquarters? None.

The national-defense act, how many cases of violation of that act? None. The espionage act, how many cases under that act that covers practically every offense that can be suggested? Seven; all are pending; not one has been tried. No civil cases were brought by the Federal Government in the State. Selling liquor to soldiers, 37. That is the record. There have been no riots, no strikes, no mobs, or attempts to blow up or destroy either Government or private property; not one in the entire State of Wisconsin. Wisconsin is a lawabiding, loyal State. Gov. Philipp, of my own State, wrote me a personal letter recently, from which I read a brief extract. He says:

I am heartily tired of seeing our people abused every day by an element of the press and a class of men who seriously regard themselves as patriots, but who, as a matter of fact, do not now, nor will they in the future, render the State or the Nation any service that is worth while. I propose to make a fight against the men and the newspapers that engage in that sort of falsehood and at least show them up, if I can not do any more.

Mr. Chairman, that is about all we can do. Falsehoods and misrepresentation can not be reached by us under the espionage act. Everyone can take his fling at the people of a great State.

I have a brief statement received from one of my good Democratic friends in New York the other day about the New York City election, where over 150,000 plurality was given Hylan over Mitchel, who insisted on running as a loyalist or royalist candidate, better than his fellow citizens, as though we are not all loyal. The man who won out, Hylan, had for his father a Union soldier, as was mine. [Applause.] I understand Mitchel's was not. Every newspaper in New York City with one exception—I have a list here—was in favor of Mitchel, who ran on that platform. A vote against Mitchel was to be a message to the Kaiser that New York was disloyal; that was the miserable twaddle indulged in by reputable papers. Two million dollars was contributed to Mitchel's campaign. Were the people of New York disloyal? Only those who made the false issue; only those who stuffed the ballot boxes for Mitchel, of whom 36 officials were convicted out of 72 indicted.

The people of New York are loyal, although they defeated Mitchel over 2 to 1. They are as loyal as the people of New Jersey, Wisconsin, Tennessee, Louisiana, or any other State. They are loyal, and you can not make me believe otherwise. [Applause.] Their boys are going to the front to-day just as willingly and gladly as the boys of fathers who plume themselves on superpatriotism, and their fathers are back here in the factories, mills, offices, and workshops doing what little they can to help win the war. I will insert an exhibit relating to Wisconsin and then speak briefly on the river and harbor bill, which is the order of business. [Applause.]

WISCONSIN IS FIRST IN LOYAL SERVICE.

LOYALTY RESOLUTION BY REPUBLICANS OF WISCONSIN LEGISLATURE.

The following resolution, adopted by the Republicans of the Wisconsin Legislature at the last legislative session, gives a full and complete answer to charges of disloyalty registered against the citizenship of Wisconsin. The last paragraph is commended to the attention of those who engage in factional loyalty:

The people of the State of Wisconsin, represented in senate and assembly, hereby again renew their allegiance to the Republic, and pledge their loyalty and undivided support to the National Government in its prosecution of the present war to a successful end, and in this moment of struggle, which threatens the very existence of the Nation, will never shirk in their duty as loyal citizens of their beloved country.

The State of Wisconsin stands second to none in meeting the demands made upon it by the Federal Government for our national defense.

Wisconsin took the initiative in providing for the dependents of its soldiers, and has made the most liberal provision for them of any State in the Union.

Wisconsin placed its entire election machinery at the disposal of the United States in the first registration for selective service.

Wisconsin was the first State in the Union to file a complete return of its registration under the selective law with the Federal Government at Washington.

In Wisconsin less than 2 per cent of the men called under the selective-service law failed to respond to the call, while in the United States as a whole 8.2 per cent of those called failed to respond.

Wisconsin stands at the head of the list of her neighboring States in the percentage of volunteer enlistments, which numbered over 17,000, 45 per cent of which are of Teutonic blood. The percentage in Illinois was 34.8; Indiana, 41.6; Iowa, 50; Michigan, 31.1; Minnesota, 34.1; Kentucky, 35.8, while in Wisconsin our percentage was 54.5.

Wisconsin's troops when they left Camp Douglas were fully equipped, not by the Federal Government, but by the State.

Wisconsin's citizens have contributed over $125,000,000 to liberty loans, Red Cross, Young Men's Christian Association, Young Women's Christian Association, Knights of Columbus, and other war activities. Our subscription to the first liberty loan was $36,236,750; our subscription to the second liberty loan was $87,056,900. In the seventh Federal reserve district the subscription of this State was 155 per cent of its minimum allotment. In this loan Wisconsin stood at the head of all the States in this district. Illinois stood second, with a percentage of 152.8; Michigan third, with a percentage of 142.5; Indiana fourth, with a percentage of 122, and Iowa fifth, with a percentage of 111.4.

Wisconsin is proud of the foregoing record, and submits the same to the fair and impartial judgment of all loyal citizens of the Nation and pledges itself to even greater accomplishments in the future.

The people of the State of Wisconsin have and always will stand squarely behind the National Government in all things which are essential to bring the present war to a successful end, and we condemn as unpatriotic all activities which seek to breed the spirit of disloyalty among the people of our State.

EXTRAVAGANCE, PROFITEERING, AND TAXATION.

THE 1918 WATERWAY BILL IS REDUCED OVER $20,000,000, BUT CONTAINS MANY WASTEFUL ITEMS.

Mr. Chairman, I will now address myself to the pending river and harbor bill before us, which carries $19,227,900, or less than one-half the amount generally appropriated. At a time when war expenditures demand every dollar that can be spared that fact makes the bill an improvement over its predecessors.

The Army engineers have recommended some appropriations that seem to me inexcusable. I have mentioned them in my report, and I will speak briefly about them here, and in addition point out what are inexcusable and wasteful expenditures by new bureaus organized apparently for self-glorification, judging from newspaper accounts of their proposed labors, written by paid publicity agents.

The committee has reported only items urged by Army engineers at this time. No new projects, excepting two so-called Pacific coast war items, are included. As in the past, the minority report points out what seems inexcusable extravagance at this time, reaching many millions of dollars in the aggregate, as will be more fully set forth, while the right to criticize or oppose such items was reserved. It is realized, however, that many real waterways need improvement, and several large harbor projects are needed for war purposes, so the bill is not opposed as a whole.

Let me offer comparisons found on page 3 of the minority report, which speak for themselves and are indicative of others contained in the 1918 bill. They deserve the study of every Member, and are taken from the 120 river and harbor items that reach $19,227,900, as stated:

Amazing comparisons of water-borne commerce and cost.

Three harbors in Wisconsin handled 70,000,000 tons of commerce in 1916 (the last report), valued at about $700,000,000, and hauled on an average about 800 miles. Total appropriations for these harbors in past years reached $11,221,003; balances for 1918 were $519,265; and this bill carries $18,500 for 1919. Compared with this, three rivers—the Ohio, Mississippi, and Missouri—floated less than 5,000,000 tons of actual commerce last year, an average distance of only 28 miles, 90 per cent of which commerce was coal, valued at $2.40 per ton. Total appropriations for the three rivers in past years reached $251,611,060; balances for 1918 were $14,433,326; and this bill carries $7,712,000 more for 1919.

In other words, in 1916 three harbors in one State handled fourteen times as much commerce as our three greatest rivers and carried it twenty-eight times as far, or a ton-mileage of about 400 to 1 in favor of the harbors. On the other hand, the three rivers have cost the Government twenty-two times as much as the harbors, and the river balances on hand are twenty-eight times as great as for the harbors, while this bill carries appropriations for the three rivers four hundred times larger than that carried for the harbors.

The ton-mileage of the three harbors is four hundred times larger than for the rivers, and this bill carries four hundred times more money for the rivers than for the harbors, as stated, and the total appropriations for the rivers are twenty-two times as great as for the three harbors. Can the facts be made plainer?

NOT ONE PROPER TERMINAL ON THE OHIO.

From the minority report it further appears not one proper river terminal exists on the Ohio; only one on the Missouri and three or four on the Mississippi, which are more ornamental than useful. Similar comparisons can be made on other harbors and rivers showing how wasteful and prodigal we have been with the people's money. Hog Island scandals are not the only scandals that need to be probed.

Every river contractor, every private land reclamationist, every private water-power interest, and every other beneficiary is on the job during these war times, as I propose to show, while every farmer and laborer in the fields, shops, mines, and offices is shaking down the old stocking in order to help win the war.

In the bill before us Government engineers have over $14,000,000 on hand for three rivers with a comparatively small commerce, and yet recommend $7,712,000 more for the same three rivers. In order to get appropriations for New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Norfolk, San Francisco, and other harbors that are handling commerce for the war, we must give nearly $8,000,000 in this bill, or 40 per cent of the whole bill, for three rivers that have been improved for 40 years or more with a decreasing commerce, that have a total navigable length of over 4,000 miles, with only 28 miles average haul.

War grips the world by the throat, and we are calling on every capitalist, every banker, every farmer, and every laborer to do his bit toward winning the war, and any man who is able to contribute and fails to do so is a slacker. All are patriotically doing their part in this great national crisis, and those who divert the money collected for war purposes, in order to prosecute questionable enterprises unrelated to the war, will be called to account by an outraged people. I have no personal quarrel with the man who disagrees on the subject of Government expenditures, but any man who at this juncture fails to disclose public extravagance of which he is cognizant fails to do his duty.

Waterway improvements for actual commerce are necessary in peace as well as war and can not be neglected now or at any other time without hampering legitimate war operations. This applies to waterways that carry actual commerce and includes maintenance of all channels on the rivers used for commerce. It does not include extravagant canalization or dam operations, or land reclamation schemes that have no immediate or early use or possibly any future use, and every dollar so wasted now is indefensible.

THE OHIO RIVER EXTRAVAGANCE.

Five million dollars contained in this bill for the Ohio River is recommended by Government engineers. It is not directly or indirectly related to war purposes. Over $59,000,000 has been appropriated by the Government for 1,000 miles length of the Ohio River, and during the same time the actual river commerce has greatly diminished, the average lock-and-dam haul is only 28 miles, or one thirty-fifth of the river's length, and apart from coal near the headwaters the commerce is insignificant. A balance of $7,550,000 was on hand at time of the last report, and according to experience not 5 per cent of that amount is needed for open channel work, the remainder being used for extravagant locks and dams, and yet all these millions will be expended by Government engineers in 1918 and $5,000,000 more will be filched out of the pockets of taxpayers in order to continue this carnival of waste on a stream that has not a single municipal terminal along its 1,000 miles of lengh. The following extract, taken from the report of Maj. John Stewart, Army engineer, dated December 22, 1917, filed with the committee, states:

> There are no municipal water terminals along the Ohio River. All terminal facilities are privately owned and are inadequate to properly provide for water transportation of any magnitude and are not constructed or equipped for joint rail-and-water transportation.

Again, he says of a stream that varies 70 feet at different stages:

> The towns and cities have sold the privileges of their water gates for a very low rental—some for nothing. In a number of cases the business of the water carrier has been shut off by the municipalities granting unrestricted franchises to the railroads to the right of way along the river front.

Terminal facilities are inadequate and privately owned, practically all river frontage has been sold to railways or other interests and a 28-mile canalization haul is the net result on a few shaky relics of bygone river glories.

A St. Louis paper takes umbrage because a contract proposed by the Government with Edward F. Goltra, Democratic national committeeman from Missouri, is discussed in the minority the Ohio River after Army engineers have expended over $50,000,000 in its "improvement."

With seven and a half millions on hand for the Ohio, this bill carries five millions additional that must be extracted from taxpayers during these war times.

Army engineers recommended the amounts contained in this bill, and the Rivers and Harbors Committee has adopted their recommendation in order consistently to follow their advice as to new projects, and Congress is expected to pass this bill as recommended. Not one ton more will be hauled during the war by reason of the $5,000,000 expenditure, so far as any evidence has been offered. Not one nickel now exacted from the public will be struck from the price of coal.

Private interests have corralled the coal situation on the upper Ohio as elsewhere throughout the country, yet in these days of strict private and public economies we are called upon to carry out the extravagant recommendations of engineers whose predictions of future commerce have not been realized on 2 per cent of the rivers of the country.

THE MISSOURI AND MISSISSIPPI RIVER EXTRAVAGANCES.

I will not discuss in detail the Mississippi or Missouri Rivers, but $6,883,000 was the balance on hand for these two rivers for 1918, or twelve times the balance reported for the three Wisconsin harbors previously compared, while in 1916 these harbors handled two hundred times as much commerce as the two rivers, and hauled it on an average fifty times as far.

In this bill the Mississippi and Missouri receive $2,912,000, or one hundred and fifty times as much as the three harbors that handled two hundred times as much commerce.

The cost to the Government, I have demonstrated, is $60 a ton for Missouri River commerce, which includes floating cordwood valued at $3 per cord, or about $1.50 per ton.

It would pay the Government twenty times over to pay all railway freight bills for handling the river commerce, and yet this bill carries a half million dollars more for the Missouri 500,000-acre private land reclamation project that is back of the improvement.

GOVERNMENT PAYS FOR PRIVATE LAND RECLAMATION.

In the minority report it is disclosed that out of $1,699,000 spent by Government engineers in Missouri last year, 85 per cent was used for private bank protection and 5 per cent for "experimental dredging." That is the purpose for which tax payments are levied during these war times and given to the Missouri River, not for channel work to accommodate the insignificant commerce, but for private land revetment at Government expense. The official report is undisputed.

We are going to test the navigability of the Mississippi River. Eight years ago we gave $500,000 to the Army engineers with which to make tests of experimental boats. We have never received any intelligible report from the engineers since that day as to what has been accomplished on this deserted river, but many millions of dollars have followed other millions every year, and our river advisers have been content to squander money for useless dams and other extravagances that are monuments to their skill in wasting money.

About $120,000,000 has been appropriated for the Mississippi River below the mouth of the Ohio. It is the finest river channel in the world—it has been for years—from St. Louis to New Orleans, but it is a deserted waterway without a single boat line running between the two cities. Only a little local river traffic now remains, and the loss is estimated at 95 per cent compared with the traffic of a half century ago before river improvements were begun.

Fifty million dollars more has been appropriated by Congress for that part of the Mississippi above the mouth of the Ohio, or $170,000,000 thus far for the greatest inland waterway in the world that is deserted commercially from St. Paul to New Orleans, excepting for an insignificant local traffic carried by report. Mr. Goltra personally appeared before the Rivers and Harbors Committee and explained his proposed contract. The Government is to build for him a couple dozen or more boats at an estimated cost of $3,360,000—it may cost much more—and turn the boats over to him for his private use on the river at a nominal rental. The boats can not be completed before 1919, possibly not for years, and are not directly or indirectly for war purposes. Mr. Goltra testified before our committee—page 48 of the hearings—that the boats will cost double ordinary prices through being built at this time of high prices, but if he can make a profit by them, he expects to buy them from the Government at half price. If not profitable, they may be scrapped.

HELPING OUT A ST. LOUIS STEEL PLANT.

Mr. Goltra has a steel plant at St. Louis and needs ore, so he proposes to bring ore from St. Paul down to his steel plant and incidently carry coal up the river, aided by a railroad which he "controls"—page 48 of the hearings. His application, out of many received by the committee, is the only one approved. The only experiment he ever made on the river was last year when he used Government steamboats for towing, for which a small charge was made. The trip cost him $11,384, over and above receipts, according to his own statement; but he now asks the Government to spend $3,360,000 for new boats, and he is willing to experiment again for his private steel plant at Government expense.

Hundreds of men and hundreds of interests on the different inland waterways of the country would welcome such a gift from the Government. How and why does it go to Mr. Goltra? What chance has a profiteering concern on Hog Island to make profits compared with a steel plant that "controls" a railway, controls the only contract on the Mississippi, and makes the Government pay the bill? Mr. Goltra has frankly presented his case, but the contract can not be justified, excepting on the ground that his company wants it—and is able to get it.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. I will.

Mr. MADDEN. How much money was expended out of the Treasury, for the construction, of the funds that were turned over to Mr. Goltra?

Mr. FREAR. There is to be expended $3,360,000. That is the authorization as stated by Mr. Goltra in the hearings.

Mr. MADDEN. What excuse is given for that?

Mr. FREAR. I have been reading about that. The justification is that he can make an experiment in order to see whether or not he can make a success of it for his business.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman mean to say to the House of Representatives that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors has proposed an item——

Mr. FREAR. No; it was not proposed by the River and Harbor Committee. Mr. Goltra voluntarily came before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. We have nothing to do with the contract or appropriation. It is the Shipping Board and this new Waterways Committee that is undertaking to make the contract. His object in coming before us was to satisfy us as to his proposition.

Mr. MADDEN. I have not got it in my head, then. Three million three hundred and sixty thousand dollars is to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States for the construction of boats——

Mr. FREAR. At this time.

Mr. MADDEN. To be turned over to some private individual?

Mr. FREAR. This private plant; Mr. Goltra's; yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Who is to own the boats?

Mr. FREAR. He is to run them, with the privilege of buying them at half price, according to his proposal.

Mr. MADDEN. He is to operate the boats?

Mr. FREAR. He is to operate the boats. They are to be turned over to him for his use exclusively.

Mr. MADDEN. And what does the Government of the United States get?

Mr. FREAR. Two per cent on the investment is the proposition that he made when he came to my office. Four per cent is the suggestion to the committee. He hopes to buy them at one-half price.

Mr. MADDEN. And what would be the interest charge on the money invested?

Mr. FREAR. Two per cent he proposes on the basis of $3,360,000.

Mr. MADDEN. The cost is to be $3,360,000, and he will be given an opportunity to buy them at $1,700,000?

Mr. FREAR. He says that after the war is over they will depreciate in value, and he expects to buy them at $1,700,000. That is the statement in the hearings.

Mr. MADDEN. Boats in use a couple of years ought to be better than they were the day they were put in the water.

Mr. FREAR. I will leave that to experts like my friend from Illinois.

Mr. MADDEN. We have had boats in service now for 15 years that are better to-day than they ever were before.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for 15 minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] asks unanimous consent for 15 minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MADDEN. Is that provided for in this bill?

Mr. FREAR. No. It is not related to this bill. Mr. Goltra was before our committee.

Mr. MADDEN. What fund does it come out of?

Mr. FREAR. It comes out of the Shipping Board fund, as I understand. Out of the $500,000,000 fund I have understood.

Mr. BOOHER. Is it not a fact that the building of those barges and running them to-day is a public matter, and that Mr. Goltra's offer was to run those boats a certain length of time and see if they could be made profitable?

Mr. FREAR. I will read what the Army engineer says about it.

Mr. BOOHER. I am talking about what Mr. Goltra said about it.

Mr. FREAR. I would rather trust the judgment of an Army engineer instead of Mr. Goltra, who is a party in interest.

Mr. BOOHER. Did any Army engineer ever report anything of the kind about that matter?

Mr. FREAR. Yes. I have read that in the RECORD, and I want to finish another point before concluding. I have read that to the House. I want to finish another point now.

Mr. BOOHER. I want to get this right. The Rivers and Harbors Committee has had nothing to do with that contract.

Mr. FREAR. I stated that repeatedly.

Mr. BOOHER. It was done by the Shipping Board.

Mr. FREAR. Yes.

Mr. BOOHER. In an effort to determine whether or not barges could be run on the Mississippi River.

Mr. FREAR. No. It was given by the Shipping Board to Mr. Goltra for his own private interest. There has not been any attempt to do it generally. The engineer says it can only be a test for his business.

Mr. BOOHER. Where do you get the authority for that?

Mr. FREAR. I have got it in the hearing.

Mr. BOOHER. Was there any such evidence as that adduced before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors?

Mr. FREAR. In that hearing the engineer said it was given for Mr. Goltra's special interest, and that no other business, in his judgment, on the upper Mississippi could be made profitable.

Mr. BOOHER. I want to set the gentleman right on that matter.

Mr. FREAR. Oh, I have already quoted the book and the page.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. FREAR. In a moment.

Mr. BOOHER. You did not quote from Col. Keller's testimony?

Mr. FREAR. Yes; I quoted from Col. Keller's testimony.

Mr. BOOHER. You say he said that was the only one?

Mr. FREAR. I said he said Mr. Goltra was the only one who was given the opportunity to make the test, and that in his judgment he was the only one who could make it profitable.

Now, I can not yield more unless you give me more time. I have made my statement fairly, and I have repeated it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is it not a fact that the Shipping Board has also recommended an appropriation of $20,000,000 to buy barges to take coal from the Alabama mines on the Black Warrior River, which is to furnish power on the Muscle Shoals to New Orleans?

Mr. FREAR. Yes. I wanted to refer to that. I was going to talk about Muscle Shoals, but the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] who has just spoken has referred to Muscle Shoals. He presented it so strongly last night that all I ask is to add a brief word in regard to it later.

MILLIONS OF DOLLARS FOR QUESTIONABLE CONTRACTS.

But these extravagances are modest compared with others. By a singular coincidence another $21,000,000 has been recommended by Charles Montecon and A. J. Mason, special examiners for the Shipping Board, who urge the building of 100 steel barges and towboats by the Government for the Warrior River to accommodate parties interested in Alabama mines. The announcement was made by the press during the present month. Private capital refuses to put boats on the Warrior just as it refuses to put boats on the Mississippi, Missouri, and Ohio, so the Government is advised by its own agents to give $21,000,000 for boats for the Warrior, in addition to $12,000,000 for dams and locks already spent through the River and Harbor Committee on a deserted river. The same amount—$21,000,000—was the estimate of Hog Island's carnival of money waste. The actual cost is nearly double. Underestimates are sure to follow in every case.

Why put $33,000,000 in the Warrior River, way down in the wilds of Alabama, and not one dollar in the New York Barge Canal? Who pays the $42,000,000 that is to be extracted from the Federal Treasury in 1918 for the Mississippi, Missouri, Ohio, and Warrior Rivers, and why?

THE MUSCLE SHOALS ALSO GOES OVER THE TOP.

Yesterday the Muscle Shoals lock and dam proposal, also in Alabama on the Tennessee River, was agreed upon out of some of the numerous funds Congress has provided for war activities. This item first appeared, recommended by Army engineers, in the river and harbor bill of 1915 for $18,700,000, with an initial appropriation. When exposed, the project was stricken out of the bill by the House and never dared again to invite disaster through that committee recommendation.

Like a crafty shell game, it has been practically impossible to keep trace of this elusive power scheme, which has been stricken out of bill after bill, but, through the cooperation of Government agencies, finally bobs up again serenely. Its estimated cost now is from $20,000,000 to $100,000,000, a mere bagatelle; the time to build is several years, and after having been urged for navigation, nitrates, fertilizer, and always for power, we find its power of pull is finally supreme. By a coincidence it is also down in Alabama, where the powerful Muscle Shoals and profiteering warriors grow.

SMALL RIVER EXTRAVAGANCE.

It may be absurd to point out in detail comparatively small extravagances in this bill, like the $500,000 item for a deserted $6,000,000 section of the Norfolk-Beaufort Canal, or $343,000 carried in this bill for locks and dams on the Tennessee in addition to $1,087,743 balance on hand, according to the Engineer's reports, or to the $500,000 item for locks and dams on the Allegheny, and other items unrelated to the war or present commerce found in the river and harbor bill before us.

Why question hundreds of thousands of dollars here or there throughout the bill when over $60,000,000, largely of wasted money, not related to the prosecution of the war, is to be filched from the Public Treasury for five rivers? Why permit profiteering for every conceivable purpose, from shipbuilding contracts and shoddy-uniform contracts down to private fleets, private-land reclamation, and water-power schemes, all at Government expense?

Mr. Chairman, we are engaged in a great war. Practically every man, from the stripling in school to the battle-scarred veteran of the Civil War, is pulling to win the war. Only a few profiteering or political patriots or egoists are promiscuously slandering the loyalty of their fellow countrymen, while practically every man, woman, and child is engaged in Red Cross or other war service, and all are rigidly observing rules of self-denial, down to wheatless, meatless, and heatless days.

PATRIOTISM VERSUS PROFITEERING.

War is a serious business, and the American people are putting every ounce of strength into the war. They are subscribing to the limit for liberty loans and war certificates. Mothers are sending their most precious treasures, their own sons, to France to help win the war. All are doing nobly and all are terribly in earnest. We have passed the time for lip loyalty or political patriotism, and sacrifice is the keynote of every community and every household.

SOME ACID TESTS ON EXTRAVAGANCE.

Ringing denunciation against extravagance comes from the lips of an able Democratic leader, Mr. SISSON, of Mississippi, who said on the House floor in debate:

I must apologize to you Republicans for having ever used the words "criminally extravagant" in criticizing the appropriations that you made, for if that expression "criminally extravagant" was proper to apply to you, my God the English language has never found an adjective strong enough to apply to Democratic extravaganee.

Mr. SISSON was not questioning war appropriations, but waste.

Again, a heart-stirring denunciation against Treasury looting from the distinguished Democratic leader, Mr. Fitzgerald, of New York, rings in our ears:

Whenever I think of the horrible mess that I shall be called upon to present to the country on behalf of the Democratic Party, I am tempted to quit my place. * * * If I placed my political fortunes above my sworn duty under the law, I would not attempt to carry out the promises of the Democratic platform, but I should place myself at the head of this band of Treasury looters upon every occasion.

Pursuant to that threat Mr. Fitzgerald resigned from the House, and on the day he bid good-by—December 14, 1917—Chairman KITCHIN, leader of the Democratic majority, feelingly said of pork appetites:

I sometimes fear that too many of our colleagues set up as the true measure of service here the amount of money which they can filch out of the Treasury into their districts and States for creeks or rivers or public buildings.

Let the record of public extravagance, unrelated to war measures, rest with the testimony of prominent Democratic administration leaders of the House, either in opposition to unfair division of pork on the one hand or against "Treasury looting" on the other, according to statements submitted. And these three fearless Democratic leaders voted against the prewar "acid tests" offered by the President.

OVER $100,000,000 STRICKEN FROM BILLS.

In opposition to the votes and protests of some of these same leaders, a vigorous onslaught has been made year after year, beginning with 1914 against pork-barrel bills, with the result that over $100,000,000 has been saved to the taxpayers of the country through defeat or reductions in these vicious bills.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. No.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I think I will ask for a quorum.

Mr. FREAR. All right. You can call for a quorum if you want to.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

Mr. FREAR. I refuse to yield, whether the gentleman does that or not.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. You can not do it unless there is a quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes the point that there is no quorum present.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I desire to continue my remarks.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The gentleman can not break in while the gentleman from Wisconsin has the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Texas is in order in calling for a quorum.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentleman that he withdraw his point of no quorum.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. The object I had in view was that inasmuch as the gentleman from Wisconsin had such a large audience at the beginning of his remarks he ought to have a quorum at the close. I have no disposition to curtail the remarks of the gentleman, and I therefore withdraw my point of order. [Laughter.]

Mr. FREAR. I thank the gentleman. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and will then continue.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, the bill before us is little better in character than its predecessors, although it has $20,000,000 to $25,000,000 carved off from the usual hogshead dimensions. Only about $8,000,000 of the present bill is for the five rivers described. The remaining $54,000,000 is through the Shipping Board or other new agencies.

Not one of the $60,000,000 to $100,000,000 extravagances on the five rivers pointed out in the foregoing statement is for war purposes. At a time when selfish interests are concealing their purposes by shouting their loyalty from the housetops, we need many Fitzgeralds, SISSONS, and KITCHINS to scourge the money changers from the temple, not alone from the Capitol but wherever unconscianable profiteering exists under the Government. Let the slogan be, "Billions to win the war, but not one penny for profiteering."

Against this striking record we find only nominal taxes placed on great wealth, although we have repeatedly promised to conscript wealth even as we have conscripted the youth and man power of the land to win the war.

WE MUST MORE THAN DOUBLE WAR-PROFITS TAXES.

Great Britain levies a tax on war profits of 80 per cent, while our own tax of 30 per cent is abnormally modest. I have confined my remarks to wasted millions in 1918 on five rivers, without discussing general extravagance, but I annex a brief statement of enormous profits made by a couple of score of business interests out of hundreds that could be named as an appropriate supplement to a Government gift for a specially favored steel plant owned by Mr. Goltra, Democratic committeeman.

With this statement I leave responsibility for present extravagances, which, according to Representative SISSON, can not fitly be described by the English language.

Public expenditures are being met by bond issues or taxation. It is estimated that American corporations in 1917 made in war profits in excess of their average profits during prewar years approximately $3,600,000,000. During a time when our boys are fighting at the front and every citizen at home is called upon to contribute liberally to the support of the war these unconscionable profits can not be defended and should be reached by rigorous taxation to help meet war expenditures. It would serve to curb extravagance and inflation that thrives on bond issues. I append a few specific cases of war profits in 1916 which convey their own argument:

War profits of a few concerns out of thousands reported.

Mr. SMALL. I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN].

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I think under the circumstances that it was proper for the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] to make some remarks about his State, and I agree that Wisconsin is a great American State. The gentleman, however, has charged up to the Democratic administration a mysterious and unsigned circular published over in the State of Illinois and floating about somewhere for political purposes.

Mr. FREAR. If the gentleman will yield, I do not believe that the President of the United States knew anything about that. I am sure of that.

Mr. HEFLIN. I am glad to hear the gentleman say that.

Mr. FREAR. Why, certainly.

Mr. HEFLIN. I do not know who issued that appeal to the soldiers, but I do know that it is not necessary to make an appeal to the American soldier to cast a loyal vote, because he can be counted on to cast a loyal vote; and whether Members in this House or the other branch measure squarely up to the standard of American loyalty, the soldier can not pass upon that question effectively until he is called upon to vote. The Bible tells us that "by their fruits ye shall know them." A man may say that he is a patriot, but he may do things and say things that do not square with his statement. Now, there are gentlemen in this House and some in the other branch of Congress who, according to my judgment, have not measured fully up to the standard of complete loyalty.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MADDEN. Does not the gentleman think it would be wise to let other people decide what they should do, and each man be responsible for his own actions, without some one man trying to become the critic of the actions of every other man?

Mr. HEFLIN. That is not my purpose. I have the right to criticize the conduct of Members here, and I invite their criticism of my conduct. Last year, Mr. Chairman, after this Government had solemnly declared a state of war to exist, after the President of the United States had called the boys of our country to the colors, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] introduced in this House a measure which would have tied the hands of the President and left him without authority to use our military forces against Germany on the battle fields of Europe. When the battle was raging in Europe, when the greatest enemy of mankind was in the field with his forces, struggling to overcome Europe and then to come and invade this country, I repeat, the gentleman from Illinois introduced a measure in this House which would have stopped the President with his Army at the ocean side and left this Government puny any helpless, humiliated and ridiculous before the world. I did not think that his conduct on that occasion was in keeping with the spirit of true Americanism. We had declared war and we had laid down a war program, we were mobilizing our forces and moving to the battle field to meet the bloody-handed monarch of the Old World. I was disposed, gentlemen of the House, to let that un-American act go by; and when this Congress reassembled, after stating here last year that some gentlemen's conduct did not square with my idea of their duty as patriotic Members of Congress, and I discussed the matter with Members of the House and decided to let that matter rest unless something else was done or said which needed attention. But on the 7th day of February, in this House, this same gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] made a speech of 30 minutes and then extended his remarks in the RECORD, all in criticism of this Government and its position in the war. There was not one word of abuse in it for Germany. There was criticism in it of our allies, but nothing against Germany, the arch enemy of mankind. About the only thing that he said in which I could locate him definitely was, "For God's sake, let us quit quarreling among ourselves and fight the Kaiser." But strange to say, after that he branched off and said, "Since the secret peace treaties have been published"—and I thought he was speaking by authority, that he was about to disclose to us facts that he had obtained at the State Department. I did not know that he was bringing here and putting into this RECORD stuff published by the hired agents of Germany and the bolsheviki, their hirelings in Russia. I made investigation at the State Department, and they said, "No; we have nothing about any such secret treaty except from that source" that I have mentioned. But the gentleman says, "That according to these so-called secret peace treaties we find that our English cousins and our French allies and Russia were going to slice up Germany." That suggestion is in his speech. I know that it passed the notice of many patriotic Republicans on that side as it passed the notice of many patriotic Democrats on this side. And I want to say here in passing that there are some as brave and patriotic Republicans on that side as ever stood beneath the flag. I pay you that compliment, because you are entitled to it. There are but few on either side who do not stand square up to the standard in either branch. But the gentleman criticized the position of our Government. He talks here about these mysterious secret treaties, while our boys are over there fighting to preserve democracy and liberty, to preserve the American Republic. We are trying to make the world safe for America to live in, and for our children to live in long after we are dead. The gentleman insinuates that the secret treaties between our allies, which they deny, disclose the fact that they have a bargain between themselves, and that they are fighting to slice up Germany. No, gentlemen, I do not propose that this RECORD shall become the vehicle to carry over the country the propaganda of the enemy. This RECORD should not be used for that purpose, and I have a right as you have to pass upon things said here to see whether or not they square with true Americanism. Now, what else? The gentleman makes a fling at Japan. About that time Japan, it is said, was here asking our Government what she could do to aid the great forces of civilization in this war. But the gentleman's speech is a fling at Japan, and accuses her of having a secret treaty with somebody to fight America at some future time. At a time when we ought to have been sounding every word that suggested harmony and unity that would bring to our aid every force that sympathized with us, a Member stands on this floor and antagonizes a nation in sympathy with the allies and speaks in this solemn place that which can be circulated by German agents in this country who will say, "See what you Americans are fighting for; you are not fighting to preserve the Republic, you are fighting to help England, France, and Russia slice up Germany."

What else? Why, in another place in that speech the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] said that we would not have any riots in this country, that the people have not had a chance to speak on the question of life and death, and the reason that there will be no riots is that they know that in the cool, quiet days of November they will speak. What does he mean by that? That the American people are not with their Government; that this Congress has instituted a program and is backing up the leader of this Nation in a way contrary to the wishes of the people? What does he mean when he says that they will not riot, because they know that in the cool and quiet days of November they will speak? Is that an insinuation that they are going to indorse the program? No, gentlemen, it is an insinuation that they will repudiate it. What else can you make of it? Further on in that speech the gentleman says that our mothers are interested in this matter—and they are, God bless them—they are giving their sons heroically to the cause of their country; and following that statement the gentleman says that no woman who has been through the high school ever knew boys conscripted before to settle the title to real estate in Europe. What does he mean by that? Before what time? Now. What are they doing now? Fighting to settle the title to real estate in Europe? That is the inference obtained from the statement of the gentleman from Illinois. "No girl who has been through the high school ever saw boys conscripted before to fight abroad to settle the title to real estate in Europe." God of our fathers, move upon the State of Illinois! She has some as brave and patriotic Representatives here as ever lived. Fighting to settle the title to real estate in Europe! This Nation that we love never drew the sword except in the cause of right and liberty; she has no ancient hate to gratify and no lust for power impelled her to the battle field, but it was the love of right, of liberty, and justice that caused her to draw the sword; and yet the gentleman from Illinois would throw her cause lightly aside and say that our boys are being conscripted to settle the title to real estate in Europe.

In another place the gentleman says, "Let us look this thing squarely in the face; no dodging. The only thing that stands between us and honorable peace," he continues, "is the disposition of Alsace-Lorraine." Ah, gentlemen of the House, I regret that those words have been uttered by one honored with a seat in this body. We never thought of Alsace-Lorraine when Germany shot down our flag, destroyed our commerce, and murdered our citizens. No, gentlemen, the disposition of Alsace-Lorraine never entered our minds. When France sent her brave and heroic army to fight that immortal battle at the Marne she was not thinking of Alsace-Lorraine; she was thinking and fighting to save the life of the French Republic. The gentleman suggests that the truth is that the disposition of Alsace-Lorraine is the only thing that stands between us and honorable peace. Why? Because he says that we have achieved what we wanted when we entered the war—a free sea, that the belligerents have agreed to. Germany agreeing to it? Did not Germany come and lay her hand upon the open Bible, as it were, and tell the President that she was not going to murder any more of our women and children or sink any more ships without giving them warning, and that she would help us to keep an open sea, and also that she would not disturb noncontraband commerce between neutral nations? And did she keep the faith? No. Did she break it? Yes; she said it was a mere "scrap of paper"; that she did not regard it as binding upon her honor; and now, with her hands dripping with the blood of women and children of America, France, and Belgium, with all the crimes and cruelties committed against France and Belgium, with all these crimes at the door of Germany, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] would have us say to the Kaiser, "Do you agree to give us a free sea?" and that murderous monarch should answer "Yes," then he would have us lay down our arms and go home, and then the Kaiser would wake up next morning and start his bloody butchery afresh, finish up the European countries, and come and fight us when there would be no ally to stand and help us fight.

That is not all, Mr. Chairman. The gentleman goes on in that speech and suggests that we discuss peace. Discuss peace now. For three years the President talked peace all the time. He had an olive branch in one hand and the dove of peace in the other, but the Kaiser brushed him aside with his mailed hand and would not listen to him. Then the Kaiser drew this Government into war by his own brutal and murderous act, and this Government, under its matchless leader, said to the American people, "Go and conserve the food supply, go tell the good housewives of America that we must conserve the food supply, go tell the farmers that we must make a bumper crop to feed ourselves and our allies," and the agricultural army is in motion; "take over the railroad lines of the country," and that was done; "appropriate billions for war purposes," and that is done; "summon 10,000,0000 of men and put them on the roll, this the fighting force of the country," and that is done; and the President says, "The flag and the battle field now." But the gentleman from Illinois says, "Halt your forces; it is barbarous not to stop and discuss peace terms. Here stands this war-mad monarch, who wants to talk peace with us; let us stop and parley with him." The President says, "He did that in Russia; that was his propaganda there," and poor, distracted Russia stands humiliated and despoiled before the world. But still the gentleman insists that "it will be barbarous not to stop and discuss peace terms with Germany." God of our fathers! What are we coming to in this body? Do you know what was done with that speech? It was printed in the RECORD and then put into pamphlet form and circulated over the country. There is not a clear-ringing American note in it; there is nothing in it that exalts the American cause; there is no tribute to the merit, the virtue, and courage of the allied armies. There is in it no stricture upon the brutal German horde, not one. What was the purpose of that speech? Was it intended to help America? If the gentleman, when making that speech, was standing for our cause, "then cast me back into pagan night, to take my chances with Socrates for bliss than be the Christian of a faith like this!" But that is not all that the gentleman said. Talk peace! Yes; and the Kaiser suggested that we talk peace. The gentleman says in another part of his speech that there is a party that says no peace without victory. He did not even tell us that it was the Kaiser who said that recently. The Kaiser not only said no peace without victory but no peace until it is achieved by German arms and acknowledged by our allies. That is the substance of his statement, and yet this Hall is the forum for the delivery of such a speech and this RECORD the vehicle to carry it over the country. All this, Mr. Chairman, while our boys—God bless them—are going forth to fight and to die for our country. Gentlemen, I serve notice on you now, on both sides of the aisle, I am a humble Member of this body, but I do not intend, as long as I serve here, that this body shall become the forum and this RECORD the vehicle to spread German propaganda through the country.

Mr. Chairman, there is another gentleman here from Illinois, Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. BRITTEN introduced a resolution or an amendment which exempted boys of German and Austrian blood from service in the United States Army against Germany.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, that is absolutely false. The gentleman does not recall correctly my statement.

Mr. HEFLIN. The gentleman will not apply any such epithet to me inside of this House or outside of it. I stated that the gentleman introduced a measure which gave to boys of German blood, every one of them, and every boy of Austrian blood an opportunity to get out of the service in a foreign country in the war against Germany. Is not that so?

Mr. BRITTEN. I do not recognize the gentleman in the House or in the street, but I will say to the chairman of the committee that his last statement is correct.

Mr. HEFLIN. I do not permit the Member from Illinois to interrupt me in this manner.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman asked a question and I supposed he wanted an answer.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. HEFLIN. I do not yield to the Member from Illinois, that is my language. Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman introduced a bill or measure putting it in the hands of every boy of German blood to come up to the President and say, "I do not want to fight in this war against Germany. My father came over here to live, it is true. I was born here, my father has accumulated this world's goods here, and I am an American citizen, but I do not want to fight for the United States against Germany." Mr. Chairman, is not that an awful thing? My God, in all the glorious history of this Republic that anybody from anywhere should want exemption from her service is more than I can understand. If George Washington had said, "Exempt me from service against the mother country, I am an Englishman," we might have no Republic to-day. Now, the gentleman from Illinois introduced this bill that I am telling you about. There is a copy of it here somewhere; I thought I had it, some of the Members had it yesterday. It exempted boys of German and Austrian blood from service in the war against Germany. They were not to go out of this country if they did not want to go. Other boys could go, but Germany and Austria, the deadly enemies of our country, are favored especially by a Member of this House. I would not have been surprised if that bill had been introduced in the German Reichstag, but I was surprised that it was introduced in the American House of Representatives. I hold here a statement issued this year by Mr. Harre, of the Council of Defense, or the American Defense Society, who talks about this bill and said that Viereck, the traitor in New York, who was the editor of the Fatherland, notoriously against this Government, notoriously in sympathy with Germany, that—

On the afternoon of June 25, the day upon which this bill was introduced by Congressman BRITTEN, of Illinois, Mr. Viereck read to me the text of the bill proposing that citizens of German or Austrian birth or descent upon their request should be exempted from military service in foreign lands.

So then——

Mr. SWITZER. Will the gentleman yield? By whom is that issued, what society?

Mr HEFLIN. By T. Everett Harre, and these extracts are signed by the secretary of the American Defense Society. Now, gentlemen, what do you think of that—that Viereck wrote that bill. Did he send it to the Member from Illinois? How came that bill here? How came it to be introduced in this body? Those are questions that we must consider; while our boys are fighting at the front we must not fail to do our duty here. [Applause.] If our boys have the courage to go over yonder and fight for the flag, let us have courage to do our duty here, it matters not how unpleasant it may be. I recall that this same Member from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN] said here last year that Members of Congress would not speak to me when they met me on the street. There is not one word of truth in that statement. No Member of this House that I care to speak to has ever failed to speak to me, and I speak to the most of them, I am glad to say. I stand well with most of them and they with me, and if any man does not want to speak to me he compliments my patriotism by not speaking, because I stand square to every wind that blows about that flag. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have just received a copy of the Britten bill. It says:

Citizens of German or Austrian birth or descent, selected for draft in the military service, may, upon their own request, under rules and regulations prescribed by the President, be assigned to military or naval service on American soil or in American waters, or directed for duty in such industries including agriculture—found to be necessary to the maintenance of the military establishment or the effective operation of the military forces or the maintenance of national interests during the emergency.

Oh, yes, God bless them, service out in the field of agriculture—

God of our fathers, I repeat, "Germany and Austria," American boys of that blood may be excused from service, but come on you boys of Scotch or Irish origin, of French, Italian, Hebrew, or English extraction, and all of the other brave blood of our country and go to the front. But these citizens of German and Austrian blood are the chosen. They are the objects of our special favor, because they do not want to fight against their kindred who are trying to destroy the Republic.

Gentlemen, if that is Americanism, I can not subscribe to the doctrine. If that is loyalty to the boys at the front and to the flag, then I am not loyal myself.

And, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois got up here yesterday and told the world where all of our boys in the marine service were located, just how many were down here, 9,000 of them, and so many yonder, and so many over yonder. Germany has been trying to find out how many men we have moved across the sea and how many are still at home. The gentleman did not intend to give out that information, of course. German spies have tried to find out where our Cavalry horses were located. They found 500 of them in Kentucky and they poisoned them.

If you have criticism to make, gentlemen, go to the President, to the Secretary of War, to the Secretary of the Navy, and make known your complaint to them, where no German spy will get hold of it. Do not let spies get hold of something that they can use to the injury of our country.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] quoted Mr. REED, of Missouri. Mr. REED, of Missouri, is an able man, but he is not my guide either in democracy or patriotism. [Applause.] Another man over there said the other day that we had not sent any aeroplanes abroad. That very day we were shipping them to France, and that very afternoon three American boys were shooting down three German aeroplanes above the battle lines in France. That is what is going on. Some men are hindering us and helping the enemy. And in God's name they ought to quit it.

Let me say this in conclusion. I am trying to do my patriotic duty, although it is an unpleasant thing to do sometimes. I rejoice that Wisconsin has shown to the world that she is loyal. I never had a doubt about that. There are some people in that State, however, who are not loyal. Do not tell me that a bunch that will march up to the polls behind that fellow Berger, indicted by the court for seditious conduct and wanting us to call our Army home and crawl before the Kaiser, is loyal. [Applause.]

I will tell you another thing, gentlemen; I know a body that is not a mile away from here which would render great service to itself and to the country if it would expel a Senator that I know. [Applause.]

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN] by his speech on yesterday caused me to bring the Britten bill, to exempt boys of German and Austrian blood from service, to the attention of the country. The Bible tells us that "by their fruits ye shall know them," and that "as a man thinketh in his heart, so is he." And also that "out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." So I must judge these men by what they do and say, and if I believe them to be wrong I am going to call their names.

Now, let me say in conclusion, God bless this great American Union. Gentlemen, we are a peculiar people. God Almighty gathered here under this flag the persecuted men and women of every clime and country, and America does not ask anybody from what country he comes. She only asks whether he is a loyal American citizen. Citizens of German blood, and there are thousands of them here who are as loyal as anybody, and brave boys of German blood are fighting under our flag in Europe to-day, owe it to their children to repudiate all acts on the part of public men that put them in the attitude of crawling around and wanting to be exempt from the service of their country in the hour of its peril.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. HEFLIN. I would like to have two minutes more.

Mr. BOOHER. I yield two minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. HEFLIN. Now, gentlemen, let me say in conclusion, let us stand together and all together by the President, this great American, the Commander in Chief of our Army and Navy. [Applause.] Away with the things that divide us. Honest criticism is all right; but I want to tell you this: I do not care whether the man is a Democrat or a Republican, the Member will not speak here two minutes before I know where his heart is. He may say, "I am with the President and I am with the country, but, and if." Do you know what President Lincoln said about that, gentlemen? He said, "Beware of the fellow who says, 'I am with you, but, and if'; he is not right down here in his heart." That is what Lincoln said. In this trying time let there be nothing here but real Americanism. Let us make true Americanism the paramount issue and complete American loyalty the supreme test. [Applause.]

And, now, let me say of Illinois, God bless that historic old State. In her soil sleeps the sacred dust of the martyred Lincoln. God knows, if he could have been spared, the South would have been spared the horrors of reconstruction. No section of the country suffered as much as the South on account of the blow of the assassin's bullet. Some months ago Gov. Lowden, of Illinois, said to the legislature of that State: "It is my duty and yours and the duty of the people of Illinois to get whole-heartedly behind our Commander in Chief." God bless the patriotic governor of Illinois. [Applause.] I served with him in this House, and he is my personal friend. He was the first governor in our union of States to call the State legislature to the standard of the Nation. How fitting and appropriate, gentlemen, that the governor of the Commonwealth of Illinois, in whose bosom sleeps the dust of the martyred Lincoln, should be first to come forward with the colors of his State entwined about the standard of the Union. [Applause.] This is the centennial year of the great State of Lincoln; 100 years ago she took her place in the great sisterhood of American States. Illinois, bright daughter of the Nation, well may you lift up your voice and be glad when on this proud anniversary of your birth time he who holds the highest office within your gift crowns you with the glory of unadulterated Americanism. [Loud applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, the Member who just preceded me [Mr. HEFLIN] said, "By their fruits, so shall ye know them." It makes me weary, this canned and pickled patriotism that the House is subjected to from time to time by a certain number of gentlemen who are continually winding themselves about with the American flag for fear that the country will not know that they are patriotic.

"By their fruits, so shall ye know them." If I had voted in past years against every naval appropriation and against every military appropriation that was intended to put our country in a state of preparedness I also would want to stand around on this floor and continue to wave the flag about myself to convey to the people of the country the idea that I am patriotic at last, notwithstanding the fact that I had attempted to throttle every increase in the Army and the Navy during my term of service in Congress. I would continue to yell "flag" and "patriotism" and "loyalty" until the very heavens reeked with my voice and the people of my country had forgotten my misguided conduct. I would be ashamed of having voted the way I had in times gone by. I would continue to bray, and bray, and bray about patriotism and about that flag, and then crow like a barnyard rooster about what I was going to do, now that we have gotten into this war.

It is not necessary for a Member of Congress to continually roll himself in the American flag in order to induce people to believe that he is patriotic, that he is loyal. He is known by his fruits, as the Bible says, and as the Member who just preceded me repeated.

In the annual Navy bill of 1912, before I was a Member of this House, a motion was made to build but one battleship, notwithstanding that the Navy General Board, presided over by the late Admiral George Dewey, had recommended to the Congress that four first-line battleships be built that year. Is it not quite ridiculous to recall that these very spellbinders of patriotism, these wasters of valuable time telling of their own loyalty while the House should be considering important war legislation, including the Member from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], voted against even one first-line fighting ship; and there was none authorized that year.

On February 26, 1913, the self-styled patriots of to-day voted to reduce a two-battleship bill to only one battleship, and again, on March 3, 1913, their votes permitted the building of but one battleship, notwithstanding the Navy General Board's recommendation of that year for six first-line ships.

I could go down the line and recite vote after vote for military as well as naval preparedness up to the very moment that we entered the war and these new patriots are always found on the side opposed to real preparedness. If they had had their way, we would to-day have no first-line fighting ships, and our military, small and weak as it was a year ago when we entered the war, could not have been found with a microscope.

Perhaps I am inconsiderate and it is necessary for them to bray their patriotism whenever possible. Their conscience may bother them now that they see the folly of their votes and we are into a world's war, with every ounce of our capabilities about to be taxed.

They habitually refused to vote for preparedness legislation recommended by the Navy General Board, the General Staff of the Army, the Navy League, the Security League, and other purely patriotic societies. It will take a lot of talking and wasting of valuable time to bring our people to recognize the sincerity of these noisy flag wielders.

The speaker who just preceded me tried to ridicule a resolution which I introduced last year that would exempt, upon their request, certain American citizens who still had warm and fresh blood ties in Germany and Austria from going across, under certain rules and regulations to be prescribed by the President. What the speaker said in opposition to my resolution also applies in opposition to the order sent out by the President on March 22 to the Secretary of War, telling him that certain rules should be provided for conscientious objectors to combatant service abroad. The President said they should be given a wide range of military duties from which to select, that were not combatant, in order that they might be used to the very best of their ability and their efficiency in the National Army. And, gentlemen, that is exactly what my resolution intended—to increase the efficiency of the Army, to make our soldiers at the front more dependable; and whatever the previous speaker just said in opposition to my resolution applies equally against the order just sent by the President, the distinguished gentleman at the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue, to the Secretary of War. So much for that.

The previous speaker referred to a statement having been issued by the Council of National Defense, which he afterwards corrected and said it was the American Defense Society.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BRITTEN. May I have five minutes more?

Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa. I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. BRITTEN. The American Defense Society did send this statement out, a copy of which was forwarded to me by my clipping bureau, and one from Mr. Vierick, of New York, the gentleman referred to as having boasted of writing my bill, to Mr. T. Everett Harre, the author of the article. Mr. Vierick said the statement was a complete falsehood and he was ready and willing at all times to take oath to that effect.

This society is composed of such gentlemen as Col. Roosevelt, Dr. David Jayne Hill, former ambassador to Germany, Hon. Robert Bacon, Mr. Hudson Maxim, and many other equally distinguished Americans. It did me the honor of placing my name on its public "roll of honor" because of my consistent endeavor in the direction of "preparedness," alongside of such names as our dear former colleague, the late "Gussie" Gardner, and Capt. Richmond P. Hobson, from your side of the House.

We have stood for preparedness measures at all times, whether they were for the military or the Navy. And the Lord knows, five or six years ago it was lots of trouble to pass even a one-battleship program bill through this House, because of men like you, who wanted no preparedness of any kind.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. That is, the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. BRITTEN. Oh, I do not care to mention the gentleman's name.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, what does the Member mean by that last remark?

Mr. BRITTEN. I have my own way of designating you.

Mr. HEFLIN. You will do it in a respectful way as long as you are in this House.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is well taken. The gentleman should not interrupt without rising from his seat.

Mr. EAGLE. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order that no speaker has a right to point his finger at anybody and refer to him as "you."

Mr. BRITTEN. My friend is correct. I was about to withdraw that; I do not wish to be disrespectful of the rules of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is well taken by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes, Mr. Chairman; and I am sorry that it occurred. Of course, I immediately realized that a mistake had been made, and that the society would rectify it to its fullest ability. I exchanged several letters with the society, with the result that a statement is about to be issued which will clear the entire matter. Certainly Vierick had nothing to do with my bill, which was prepared without the slightest outside assistance. Mr. Harre's article referred to me as "one of those willful men" referred to by the President more than a year ago, who in the Senate of the United States had talked to death the bill (S. 8322) authorizing the President to supply American merchant ships with arms. This reference to me was in complete error, as was another paragraph of the article, which suggested by indirection that I was the author of a bill to repeal the draft law. The official RECORD shows that I voted favorably on each of these laws. Naturally the American Defense Society is but too pleased to remedy the injustice which has been done to me, and they will shortly issue a public statement, disassociating me from any connection with Mr. Vierick, as far as its article applies, and at the same time correcting the mistakes I have just referred to.

I do not want to be disrespectful to any Member of this House. We all choose our own friends, and if any of us care to disregard others when we meet them on the street that is our privilege. But I can not help recalling that these gentlemen who are continually throwing the American flag around themselves are the very gentlemen who opposed real preparedness on the floor of this House for these many years past. I have their votes in my pocket, and I am prepared for a dozen of them, particularly on that side of the House, who are continually saying that we on this side are giving aid and comfort to the enemy every time we offer constructive criticism. They aim to prevent honest criticism by accusing us of disloyalty. It will have to be stopped. We all are heart and soul for our Government, and there should be no division on necessary war measures.

I require no apology for my patriotism. My father fought and suffered for that flag [pointing], and that is more than many of these new self-styled patriots can say. I love it as I love my life. [Applause.]

Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FRANCIS].

Mr. FRANCIS. Mr. Chairman, on February 25 of this year I received a letter from one of my constituents which was unusual. It consisted of two newspaper clippings pasted on a sheet, with a brief written comment by the sender. The first clipping was an editorial entitled "Congress sound asleep," and which began "Alone of all the great nations engaged in this conflict we are making no preparations for the revolutionary conditions that will prevail at its close." The second clipping was a news item about one of our great powder companies. It featured a statement of its president that "the men who so successfully met the recent emergency are engaged with equal energy and foresight in working out plans for the use of these vast works after the war." The comment of the sender was, "Your attention is respectfully directed to these items."

My first reaction to this communication was that we had problems enough on hand to get the war going, and that to talk about reconstruction was premature. Reflection, however, led me to determine to give the subject an hour in the Congressional Library. To make a long story short, in that hour I found such an avalanche of material on present reconstruction activities in England, France, and Germany, covering every phase of social, political, and economic life, that I realized that the matter was of vital importance. Moreover, in addition to the foreign material, I found numerous domestic references, indicating that the subject was already coming to the front at home. Since that time, only four weeks ago, constantly accumulating news items have shown that it is definitely before us, and it is my opinion that it is time for Congress to give it earnest consideration. True reconstruction is as much a war as a peace problem, and the time to face it is while we are yet in the midst of war.

A brief view of the reconstruction work abroad will show its extent and importance.

GREAT BRITAIN.

On August 21, 1917, Parliament passed an act known as the new ministries act. This created a ministry of reconstruction. It gave the minister full power to consider the problems which might arise out of the war, and to institute such inquiries and prepare such schemes, and to make such recommendations as he might think fit. It gave him an ample salary and staff and power to sit in Parliament. Under this ministry a great number of commissions and committees have been created to deal with questions already arising, and to arise at the close of the war, and many existing committees were gathered under its jurisdiction. A list of these committees, of their duties, and their personnel was published in England at the first of the year. It made up a large-paged pamphlet of 30 pages. A synopsis of this vast scheme was published in the Official Bulletin of March 14, 1918. In brief, under the minister, all reconstruction work is divided into 15 divisions. These 15 divisions cover the subjects of trade development, finance, raw materials, coal and power, intelligence, scientific and industrial research, demobilization and disposal of stores, labor and employment, agriculture and forestry, public administration, housing, education, aliens, legal questions, and miscellaneous.

Eighty-seven separate committees are doing the work. It would take too long to recite the names of these different committees and their respective fields. Suffice it to say that their greatest activity is on questions of trade development and in scientific and industrial research, but they reach into such questions as electricity, coal, horse breeding, local government, and mine-rescue apparatus, which gives us an idea of their inclusiveness. These many committees might seem enough, but one of my friends, who is investigating this work for himself, informs me that there are upward of 250 reconstruction committees at work to-day in Britain, including, for instance, several of the British Labor Party. Many have already made important interim reports. They are recommending the creation of a vast commercial structure with a trade bank, enjoying the support of the Government. Without going further it is superfluous to comment upon the value of this tremendous preparation. It not only forecasts the continued greatness of Great Britain, but it means that she has lost no time in preparing to recast her life and industry. This item of time alone is worthy of particular notice.

FRANCE.

In France the problem of reconstruction is particularly affected, if not overshadowed, by the problem of rebuilding her invaded territories, which, of course, are yet to be recaptured. An interparliamentary committee for the reconstruction of these lands has the problem in charge, and has working with it a subcommittee for the purchase of materials for the restoration. There is also a national institute for the care and reconstruction of disabled soldiers. In general, it may be said that there are upward of 300 laws which have been passed solely to aid in reconstruction. France desires to become economically independent. She has purchased great quantities of machinery abroad. She contemplates establishing a trade bank with ample capital. The State has already entered into contracts to turn over munition plants to various industries after the war, and expects to loan money to aid her shipbuilders. The Paris Chamber of Commerce is also working on the problem, and plans are being made to take an industrial census of the entire nation at the close of the war. I can not pretend to give a thorough outline of the reconstruction work of this nation. Not all the material on this subject is available and much of the available material remains untouched. It is evident, however, that France has started a thorough and practical consideration of the question.

GERMANY.

The information that comes to us from Germany has become limited of late. An Imperial Ministry of Economics was created October 21, 1917, and this has charge of the social, economic, and trade questions after the war. Germany and Austria have already entered into an extensive customs union. From such reports as we have it appears that there will be a national central organization for the purchase and distribution of all raw materials used in the nation upon the arrival of peace. A syndicate is to be created for the cotton trade to eliminate all commission houses. There is a scheme on foot to establish German manufacturing companies in foreign lands with German capital, but with French and English names to defeat any prospective boycott.

A vast workmen's relief committee has been organized, and there are reports of huge trans-Atlantic liners already on the ways, to restore the lost commercial position. The German Government has always fostered trade and may at the close of the war take over the entire cargo space of its fleets. The British Trade Journal of January 31, 1918, gives a history of these new activities, and says that "the component States of the Empire have been honeycombed with committees appointed to investigate and report on the future of their respective industries or territories." While such information as I have found reflects chiefly upon the commercial side of the life of Germany, it points to a vigorous policy of reconstruction, and we may justly believe that it is being carried into other fields.

Let us now turn to our own country.

UNITED STATES.

When I started to inform myself about the situation in the United States I found it exceedingly difficult to do so. There was nothing available but a most miscellaneous lot of information consisting of clippings and items and articles from all kinds of publications dealing with totally uncorrelated activities. There were plenty of evidences of interest and preparation, but none of order and organization. It all reminded me of the opening days of the great war in Europe before our entry into it, when hundreds of charities sprang up overnight and importuned us daily for contributions. Though eager to give, we could not tell where to give most wisely, and could not have given to all if we had given ten times more than we would. Our reconstruction situation to-day is about as chaotic as the charity situation was then.

Certain activities are at the present time outstanding.

The American Red Cross is studying the rehabilitation of wounded and crippled soldiers.

The Surgeon General is at the head of a movement to create reconstruction hospitals in large cities, which will include shops for vocational training.

The Federal Board for Vocational Education is studying the vocational rehabilitation of disabled soldiers and is training teachers for the work.

The Secretary of the Interior is agitating the question of eradicating illiteracy and teaching Americanization.

The educators of the blind are preparing to make their charges self-supporting.

Conferences at the University of Illinois and elsewhere have been studying the labor problem.

Numerous chambers of commerce are studying trade conditions after the war.

I am sure there are many more which have not been brought to my attention, because they are so rapidly developing. Valuable as these activities are, however, they are to-day almost uncorrelated. All about us charities and societies and communities are plunging into this work for themselves and going ahead independently, with few exceptions.

If left alone these organizations will develop into hundreds of separate committees throughout the country, overlapping in their fields, duplicating in their work, promoting disorganization and wasting a vast amount of energy. While our immediate reconstruction problem is simple and is chiefly to take care of our wounded, by a year from now it is going to be a tremendous one. If we are going to be forehanded we must prepare ourselves immediately to grapple with the tremendous and complicated problems of trade, finance, banking, tariff, food, labor, shipping, immigration, taxation, housing, and education that are going to perplex us as they have the foreign nations.

CONCLUSION.

What, then, is Congress going to do to meet this situation? Is Congress sound asleep, as the editorial said? On January 16 of this year a resolution to provide a commission to inquire into the advisability of establishing national insurance against unemployment, invalidity, and sickness came before the House. It carried an appropriation of $50,000. The enacting clause was stricken out and the bill was defeated. Does that mean that Congress was not ready to face the problem of reconstruction? I do not think so. I think it was merely unwilling to authorize a pretentious committee to take such a small bite at so large a problem. I think that it realizes that something has got to be done, and would gladly consider some plan of wider scope to absorb and organize our reconstruction activities. I have confidence enough in Congress to feel that if the question were presented to it in a practical way it would respond with a generous appropriation.

The practical way has been indicated in England, France, and Germany, and we should profit by the experience of these countries. We should either have a secretary of reconstruction, who shall sit in the President's Cabinet and supervise all this highly necessary work, or we should have a commission of Congress, with a permanent organization to investigate and report on necessary legislation. Congress should face this great need promptly and should belie in this crisis the repuation of democracies for unpreparedness. [Applause.]

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 10069, the river and harbor appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to see now if we can not agree upon some time to close general debate upon the bill.

Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, how much time has been consumed by each side?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina has used 2 hours and 32 minutes and the gentleman from Iowa 1 hour and 50 minutes.

Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I would say to the gentleman from North Carolina that I have requests for 2 hours and 50 minutes more time.

Mr. SMALL. So far as I can now tell I have requests for an hour and 50 minutes. Could we agree on general debate closing at the end of four hours to-morrow, say at 4 o'clock?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest that there are two or three or four conference reports to be taken care of to-morrow, and if a fixed time is set gentlemen are liable to get into trouble.

Mr. SMALL. Then we can fix it at so many hours, say four and a half hours more of general debate.

Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa. That would not give me 2 hours and 50 minutes.

Mr. SMALL. Make it 4 hours and 40 minutes, the gentleman to have 2 hours and 50 minutes of that time.

Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa. That is satisfactory.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, to-morrow is the day for the opening of the third liberty loan drive. Public announcement has been very generally made, and the Secretary of the Treasury is very earnest about the matter of inviting Members of Congress to participate in the movement wherever they may be available. I know a great many Members will be called away from the House to-morrow on that patriotic duty, and many of them would like to be here when the reading of the bill begins. They will be unable to participate in general debate, as they desire to do, because of the necessity of keeping these engagements made for this patriotic day. Can we have an understanding that after general debate is concluded and the first section of the bill is read there will be no further proceedings?

Mr. SMALL. That seems reasonable, and yet I am mindful of the fact that we are urged to conclude the bill as soon as possible. If much time is to be occupied to-morrow on conference reports there will be small opportunity to reach the bill under the five-minute rule. I hesitate to agree that we will not begin the reading of the bill if there is opportunity to make progress.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Four hours and forty minutes, if you start at 12 o'clock, will take us to 4.30 and after on Saturday afternoon.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania apply very strongly to Members on this side and particularly myself. I have engagements to talk in the liberty loan drive throughout the State of New York, and I can not possibly get back here before Monday. It would please me if we could agree not to start the reading of the bill until Monday.

Mr. SMALL. May I ask the Speaker unofficially if it would be safe to agree to that?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is inclined to think so. There are three or four of these conference reports and one can never tell what may happen about a conference report. If Members get to disputing about it it may consume an hour on each one.

So the Chair would think that the chances are that if you should run debate for four and a half hours plus the time that is taken up by preliminaries in the morning and these conference reports it will be time to "take out," as Col. Kilgore used to say.

Mr. SMALL. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that we conclude general debate to-morrow, and having concluded general debate on the bill that it will not be taken up under the five-minute rule until Monday morning.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That will be entirely satisfactory.

Mr. SMALL. So we will complete general debate to-morrow with that understanding.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Does that mean the gentleman expects the bill will be taken up on Monday, making it in order on Monday?

Mr. SMALL. That was my intention, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Of course, if the Committee on the District of Columbia has important business that is their day, but the gentleman might talk them out of it. The request, as the Chair understands it, is that general debate on this bill be limited to four and a half hours to-morrow, of which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KENNEDY] shall control 2 hours and 50 minutes and the gentleman from North Carolina control the rest of it, but the bill shall not be taken up to-morrow under the five-minute rule.

Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I think the last suggestion made by the chairman of the committee was 4 hours and 40 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Yes; 4 hours and 40 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to state I am in hearty accord with what Mr. KITCHIN said this morning about rushing matters. I have not taken up the time of the House, and the chairman has just stated that he wants to push this bill rapidly to passage. I am also in accord with that, but I have a very important amendment I shall offer at the proper time, and I would rather discuss it and have a reasonable length of time on the amendment. I would like to know of the chairman what will be his policy of allowing a little extra time when we reach the amendment stage, as much of the debate to-day has not been on this bill? I do not care to discuss my amendment and mix it up with other matters.

Mr. SMALL. Of course, I can not control the time, and I can only say I would make no objection to any request for a reasonable time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, the understanding is that we close general debate to-morrow before adjournment——

The SPEAKER. Yes; and not take it up under the five-minute rule to-morrow. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following letter:

The Clerk read as follows:

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: Having agreed to take part in the liberty-bond campaign, I ask permission to be excused from attendance in the House for two weeks.

Cordially, FREDERICK C. HICKS.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON S. 383, TO PUNISH DESTRUCTION, ETC., OF WAR MATERIAL, ETC. (H. REPT. 470).

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, on the part of the House conferees I desire to present a conference report on the bill S. 383, together with a statement on the part of the conferees, and ask that it be printed under the rule.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 383) to punish the destruction or injuring of war material and war transportation facilities by fire, explosives, or other violent means, and to forbid the hostile use of property during time of war, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Ordered printed under the rule.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 3994. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize condemnation proceedings of lands for military purposes," approved July 2, 1917, and for other purposes; and

S. 3400. An act to regulate the pay of retired chief warrant officers and warrant officers on active duty.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 3388. An act to amend the emergency shipping fund provisions of the urgent deficiency appropriation act approved June 15, 1917, so as to empower the President and his designated agents to take over certain transportation systems for the transportation of shipyard and plant employees, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, was there objection to the unanimous-consent request?

The SPEAKER. No.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, April 6, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the chief clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of the court in the case of Elizabeth B. Beal, administratrix of the estate of George L. Beal, deceased, against The United States (H. Doc. No. 1017), was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. TIMBERLAKE, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 8004) authorizing the resurvey or retracement of lands heretofore returned as surveyed public lands of the United States under certain conditions, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 463), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. RAINEY, from the Committee on Ways and Means, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 9830) providing for the disposition of opium, its salts and derivatives, coca leaves, their salts and derivatives, and any other drugs seized by the United States Government, in the enforcement of the provisions of the act of October 1, 1890, as amended by the acts of March 3, 1897, February 9, 1909, and January, 17, 1914, or the act of December 17, 1914, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 466), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. GLASS, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 9457) authorizing national banks to make contributions to the American National Red Cross, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 469), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. WELLING, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 8509) for the relief of Paul Guenther (Inc.) and Paul Guenther and Olga Guenther, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 464), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. STEAGALL, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 2013) to reimburse J. B. Patterson, postmaster of Lacon, Morgan County, Ala., for certain postage stamps stolen, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 465), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. DAVILA: A bill (H. R. 11243) providing for the establishment of the port of San Juan, customs district of Porto Rico, as a port of entry for immediate transportation without appraisement of dutiable merchandise; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. ESCH: A bill (H. R. 11244) to amend section 5 of an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," as amended, relating to the authority of the Interstate Commerce Commission to allow ownership of certain vessel lines by railroads; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. SIMS: A bill (H. R. 11245) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, and an act in amendment thereto approved October 6, 1917; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. RAKER: A bill (H. R. 11246) to prescribe the personnel of the Army Nurse Corps, the qualifications for appointment, and the method of appointment therein; the method of discharge, removal, and relief from duty; the rank, pay, allowances, and leave of absence of members of said corps; and the conditions under which they may be retired; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WEBB: A bill (H. R. 11247) providing for the protection of the uniform of friendly nations, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. FRENCH: A bill (H. R. 11248) amending section 2 of an act entitled "An act to pension the survivors of certain Indian wars from January 1, 1859, to January, 1891, inclusive, and for other purposes"; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CURRY of California: A bill (H. R. 11249) to amend section 19 of an act to prohibit the manufacture, distribution, storage, use, and possession in time of war of explosives, providing regulations for the safe manufacture, distribution, storage, use, and possession of the same, and for other purposes, approved October 6, 1917; to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

By Mr. FLOOD: Resolution (H. Res. 303) requesting the United States Food Administration to furnish to the House of Representatives information relative to its activities; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. DAVILA: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 276) extending the operation of the act providing for the promotion of vocational education in the several States of the Union to Porto Rico; to the Committee on Education.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

By Mr. KING: A bill (H. R. 11251) granting a pension to Joseph J. Johnson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. RAMSEYER: A bill (H. R. 11252) granting an increase of pension to Charles J. Smith; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RUBEY: A bill (H. R. 11253) granting an increase of pension to William T. Abel; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11254) granting an increase of pension to Lafayette Murry; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11255) granting a pension to Lucinda Hewkin; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin: A bill (H. R. 11256) granting an increase of pension to Charles A. Wilson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. DALE of New York: Memorial of Tacoma (Wash.) Business Women's Club and executive committee of the Authors' League of America, opposing the zone system as to second-class mail matter; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. DAVILA: Communication from the Teachers' Association of Porto Rico, expressing appreciation and gratitude to the President and Congress of the United States for conferring a larger measure of self-government and full citizenship upon that island and pledging loyalty and support of the Government in the world war; to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

By Mr. DILL: Petition of Sherman Grange, No. 421, of Kettle Falls, Wash., relative to regulating food prices; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. DOOLING: Petition of the American Game Protective and Propagation Association, opposing the second-class postage rates of the war-revenue act; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HILLIARD: Resolutions adopted by the Albuquerque (N. Mex.) Woman's Club, protesting against increased postage rates on periodicals; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of T. D. Cobbey, Charles H. More, Thomas E. Gray, and 14 others, all of Denver, Colo., praying for immediate war prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: Petition of members of the Pierce County Medical Society, Tacoma, Wash., favoring House bill 9563; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, resolutions of the board of trustees of the Tacoma Commercial Club and Chamber of Commerce, Tacoma, Wash., favoring House bill 9286; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of various citizens and members of the United Spanish War Veterans of Tacoma, Wash., favoring the passage of House bill 1736; to the Committee on Pensions.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, April 6, 1918.

Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer:

Our Father, upon this anniversary day, so fateful in our national and international history, we would again set up our banners in the confidence of the righteousness of our cause and in the belief that our God is on our side. Grant, we beseech of Thee, in these days of renewed sacrifice and enlarged patriotism, that there may be an increased devotion on the part of the people to meet the demands of the hour. May Thy blessing rest upon those high in authority and in all the various phases of governmental responsibility. Hear our prayer. Bless also those beyond the seas who represent us, and may the grace of Thy wisdom be imparted to all in this hour. We ask for Thine own name's sake. Amen.

The Vice President being absent, the President pro tempore assumed the chair.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. OVERMAN and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by G. F. Turner, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 4102) granting the consent of Congress to the county commissioners of Bonner County, Idaho, to construct a bridge across the Clark Fork River in Bonner County, Idaho.

The message also announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9314) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919.

The message further announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2316) to promote export trade, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 383) to punish the destruction or injury of war material and war transportation facilities by fire, explosives, or other violent means, and to forbid hostile use of property during time of war, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill

(H. R. 9504) to amend section 4067 of the Revised Statutes by extending its scope to include women.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 10843. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 10850. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war; and

H. R. 10924. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

S. 3400. An act to regulate the pay of retired chief warrant officers and warrant officers on active duty; and

S. 3994. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize condemnation proceedings of lands for military purposes," approved July 2, 1917, and for other purposes.

THIRD LIBERTY LOAN.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I have here a short statement denominated "Nation's pledge for liberty day, indorsed by the President." It appears in this morning's Washington Herald. I should like to have it printed in the RECORD, together with a short statement of Secretary McAdoo, showing the importance of the campaign for the third liberty loan.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE PRESIDENT TAKES THIS OATH—WHY NOT YOU?

On the anniversary of America's entry into the great war I affirm my undivided loyalty to the cause for which we fight—the cause of justice and human liberty. I gladly lay upon the altar of the Nation's need my material possessions, my bodily strength, and my mental powers to serve and to save America and those ideals for which it stands, and to keep the Stars and Stripes on high with honor, I pledge my hand, my heart, and my life. (Nation's pledge for liberty day, indorsed by President Wilson.)

URGES PATRIOTIC RESPONSE TO DUTY'S CALL.

[By William G. McAdoo, Secretary of the Treasury of the United States.]

The campaign for the third liberty loan will be opened to-day, the first anniversary of the declaration of a state of war between the United States and Germany.

This date will forever be a consecrated day in American history, and it seems peculiarly appropriate that the opening of the second year of our participation in this war for the honor and rights of America and the freedom of the world should be celebrated with a nation-wide drive for another liberty loan.

The campaign should begin with great demonstrations of patriotism in every city, town, and hamlet in the country that will truly express the spirit of aroused America.

On this date every American should pledge anew to his Government the full measure of his resources and resolve to make every required sacrifice in the same fervent spirit that impels our gallant sons in the trenches of France and on the waters of the Atlantic to shed their blood in America's sacred cause.

To carry forward America's essential part in this war for righteousness and justice, every man and woman in the country must lend their available means to the Government; and I know of no more fitting time for such a patriotic response to the call of duty than the beginning of the second year of the war.

W. G. MCADOO.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. LODGE. I present sundry resolutions of the Legislature of Massachusetts, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

The resolutions are as follows:

THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS, IN THE YEAR 1918.

Resolutions requesting Congress to provide for public ownership and operation of coal mines.

Whereas the inhabitants of this Commonwealth have suffered severely from the exactions of the present operators of the coal mines, who have frequently driven their employees to desperation by their inhuman treatment, have failed to provide sufficient coal when it was greatly needed by the public, and have charged exorbitant prices for such coal as has been procurable; and

Whereas it is the opinion of the General Court of Massachusetts that public ownership and operation of coal mines would be of great advantage to the citizens of this Commonwealth: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the General Court of Massachusetts respectfully requests the enactment of legislation by Congress providing for public ownership and operation of coal mines; and

Resolved, That the Senators and Representatives from Massachusetts in Congress are hereby earnestly requested to make every proper effort to secure the quick passage of the legislation aforesaid; and that copies of these resolutions be sent to them, and also to the clerk of each branch of Congress, by the secretary of the Commonwealth.

In house of representatives, adopted, March 21, 1918.

In senate, adopted, in concurrence, March 26, 1918.

A true copy.

Attest:

ALBERT P. LANGLEY,
Secretary of the Commonwealth.

THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS, IN THE YEAR 1918.

Resolutions in favor of free railroad transportation for soldiers and sailors in the service of the United States.

Resolved, That the General Court of Massachusetts hereby expresses its opinion that the War Department should furnish free transportation on the steam railroads of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts for all soldiers and sailors in the service of the United States; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent by the secretary of the Commonwealth to the Secretary of War and to each of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this Commonwealth.

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Boston, March 26, 1918.

A true copy of resolutions adopted at the present session by the Senate and House of Representatives of Massachusetts, in general court assembled.

Attest:

ALBERT P. LANGLEY,
Secretary of the Commonwealth.

Mr. LODGE presented a petition of the Boston Surgical Society, of Massachusetts, praying for the enactment of legislation providing advanced rank for officers of the Medical Corps in the Army, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. NELSON presented resolutions adopted at a mass meeting of sundry citizens of Fergus Falls, Minn., favoring universal military training, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

LANDS IN POINSETT COUNTY, ARK.

Mr. ROBINSON. I desire to submit a telegram from the Chamber of Commerce of the city of Jonesboro, Ark.; a letter from A. B. Jones Co.; a letter from E. C. Barton; a letter from the president and secretary of the Chamber of Commerce of Jonesboro; a letter from Gordon Matthews, and another from H. A. Elder, and still another from Hon. J. F. Gautney, relative to a bill introduced by the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], on April 6, 1917, to relinquish and quitclaim to the trustees of the Hatchie Coon Hunting and Fishing Club title to certain lands in Poinsett County, Ark. I ask that these communications be referred to the Committee on Public Lands, to accompany the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the papers will be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I send to the desk the bill (S. 3911) authorizing national banks to subscribe to the American National Red Cross, with a favorable report from the Committee on Banking and Currency. It proposes that the directors of national banks shall have the right to subscribe to the Red Cross if they see fit to do so. I think it will be an unobjected bill, and I would be glad to have it acted on now.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That during the continuance of the state of war now existing it shall be lawful for any national banking association to contribute to the American National Red Cross, out of any net profits otherwise available under the law for the declaration of dividends, such sum or sums as the directors of said association shall deem expedient. Each association shall report to the Comptroller of the Currency within 10 days after the making of any such contribution the amount of such contribution and the amount of net earnings in excess of such contribution. Such report shall be attested by the president or cashier of the association in like manner as the report of the declaration of any dividend.

SEC. 2. That all sums so contributed shall be utilized by the American National Red Cross in furnishing volunteer aid to the sick and wounded of the combatant armies, the voluntary relief of the Army and Navy of the United States, and the relief and mitigation of the suffering caused by the war to the people of the United States and their allied nations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	France	Jones, N. Mex.	Norris
Beckham	Frelinghuysen	Jones, Wash.	Overman
Chamberlain	Gallinger	Kellogg	Owen
Colt	Gore	Kendrick	Page
Culberson	Hale	King	Phelan
Cummins	Harding	Lodge	Pittman
Curtis	Hardwick	McKellar	Poindexter
Dillingham	Henderson	McNary	Pomerene
Fall	Hitchcock	Martin	Ransdell
Fernald	Hollis	Myers	Reed
Fletcher	James	New	Saulsbury

Shafroth	Smith, S. C.	Thompson	Wadsworth
Sheppard	Smoot	Tillman	Walsh
Sherman	Sterling	Townsend	Warren
Shields	Stone	Trammell
Smith, Ariz.	Swanson	Underwood
Smith, Ga.	Thomas	Vardaman

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (Mr. SAULSBURY). I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. WOLCOTT] on important public business.

Mr. HENDERSON. I wish to announce the absence of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. NUGENT] from the Chamber on account of illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. BECKHAM. I desire to announce that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] is detained on official business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-five Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The question is on the passage of the bill reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The bill was passed.

PUNISHMENT OF SEDITIOUS ACTS AND UTTERANCES.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I send forward several telegrams, which I ask the Secretary to read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

ST. LOUIS, MO., April 5, 1918.

Senator OVERMAN,
Chairman Judiciary Committee, United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.:

I feel it my duty in view of the lamentable happening in Collinsville last night to urge upon your committee the necessity of the enactment of more stringent laws and their more vigorous enforcement with respect to disloyalty along the lines of the measure reported by your committee. The lynching of Robert Prager was the direct result of a widespread feeling in this community that the Government will not punish disloyalty, and although I depreciate the existence of this feeling, it is nevertheless not without some foundation. We have repeatedly reported to Federal authorities cases of disloyalty where no action has been taken, and probably could not be taken, by reason of the inadequacy of the law. Such a case occurring in this community last Sunday contributed directly to Thursday night's tragedy. This spirit is not confined to Collinsville but is universal in this section; all local officers are opposed to such lawlessness; but its spirit can be overcome only by such legislation and its enforcement as your committee proposes.

J. H. SIEGEL,
Mayor of Collinsville, Ill.

ADRAIN, MICH., April 4, 1918.

Hon. LEE S. OVERMAN,
The United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The State War Committee for Lenawee County earnestly urges the enactment of legislation embodying the substance of Senator POINDEXTER'S amendment regarding disloyal acts and utterances. Many exasperating cases of disloyalty have arisen in this county, but local public officials and patriotic workers can get no action from Department of Justice at Detroit, owing to weakness of existing law. This will surely result in acts of violence unless legal redress can be obtained.

LENAWEE COUNTY WAR COMMITTEE,
By STUART H. PERRY, Secretary.

ADRIAN, MICH., April 4, 1918.

Hon. LEE S. OVERMAN,
The United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The patriotic league of Lenawee County most heartily approves the amendments of Senator POINDEXTER and Senator KING touching disloyal acts and utterances and German publications, and urges that such legislation be speedily enacted and rigorously enforced.

ROBERT DARNTON, President.
R. C. ROTHFUSS, Secretary.

STATEMENT BY THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I saw an article in the Washington Post this morning headed "Roosevelt denounces provision in the pending disloyalty bill." I read one paragraph from that article:

The Senate Judiciary Committee has just recommended the passage of a law in which, among many excellent propositions to put down disloyalty, there has been adroitly inserted a provision that anyone who uses "contemptuous or slurring language about the President" shall be punished by imprisonment for a long term of years and by a fine of many thousand dollars.

Mr. President, every Senator here will bear me out that that statement is not true. It is a false statement, and if Mr. Roosevelt has the courage and the love of truth that he formerly had he will apologize publicly to the Judiciary Committee and to the people of the United States.

Mr. HARDWICK. I am not an apologist nor a defender of Mr. Roosevelt, but my impression is that the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] introduced an amendment which was pending before your committee which would have done just that.

Mr. OVERMAN. No; the article says "the bill now pending before the Senate."

Mr. HARDWICK. I think he probably fell into a very natural error on account of the Senator from Washington introducing the amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have quoted the words, and the Senator from Georgia knows they are not true.

Mr. HARDWICK. Undoubtedly, but the Senator from Washington offered such an amendment in the committee, if I read the press report correctly, which provided exactly that.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not think it did.

Mr. HARDWICK. I never rely on newspaper reports, but——

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not either.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; I want the Senator to tell the truth about this matter.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I want to correct the apprehension of the Senator from Georgia, or rather the newspaper report that he refers to. I did not see the newspaper report, but I never proposed or conceived any such amendment as that referred to. The amendment that I offered was in substance a provision to punish those who support and favor the cause of Germany in this war, and that is about all there is to it, and I think that that is about all that is necessary. This country is filled with people who are going about spreading German propaganda, eulogizing Germany, the German Army, the German Kaiser, and the German cause in this war.

Not very long ago, for some strange reason—I suppose through misinformation—there was an effort here to get the Senate to make a man a brigadier general in the United States Army who had gone about the United States saying that the Germans were justified in sinking the Lusitania; that the United States had no reason to enter this war; and that the American people would find out how big a mistake they had made in going into it as soon as their maimed and crippled soldiers began to return from the battle field.

My amendment is not only to prevent a man from being put in command in the Army of the United States who entertains those views but to put him in jail. That is where he ought to be.

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the Senator from Washington be good enough to present to the Senate during this debate the amendment exactly as he offered it in committee?

Mr. POINDEXTER. These are the words, beginning at line 16, page 3:

Whoever shall by word or act support or favor the cause of the German Empire or its allies in the present war or by word or act oppose the cause of the United States therein, shall be punished.

Mr. HARDWICK. Was that the only amendment the Senator offered? It went no further than that?

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; that was not all the amendment that I offered. It went further than that, but it was very similar in its nature to this.

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the Senator do me the kindness and the Senate the justice of printing in the Record the entire amendment he did offer?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Oh, yes; I shall take pleasure in doing that. I should like to see the entire amendment adopted, but it has no relation whatever to the suggestion that the Senator spoke of a while ago.

The amendment in full, which I would like to see adopted as offered, but which was only reported in part, though I think the part reported will, if properly enforced, accomplish the object in view, is as follows:

Mr. POINDEXTER submitted the following amendment: Page 2, line 12, before the words "shall be punished," insert the following: "or whoever shall by word or act support or favor the cause of Germany in the present war or by word or act oppose the cause of the United States in the present war against Germany, or whoever shall make any statement or do any act which in its probable effect upon public opinion, or otherwise, shall tend to aid Germany or to be of disadvantage to the United States in the conduct of said war."

Mr. OVERMAN. None whatever, Mr. President. I want here to print the bill, and every Senator here will bear me out that there is not a word of truth in the statement Mr. Roosevelt has made.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Before the Senator passes from that I want to inquire of him whether at any time an amendment was offered in the Judiciary Committee such as was suggested by the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. OVERMAN. Never at any time. The committee considered the matter and discussed the question whether the bill might not be construed that way and decided to narrow it so that it could not be done.

Mr. WALSH. That is not the question. The question is whether such an amendment was ever offered or considered by the committee.

Mr. OVERMAN. It was never offered and never considered.

Mr. WALSH. Let me ask the Senator another question. The statement of Col. Roosevelt just spoken of refers to a bill which has been reported by the Senate Judiciary Committee. It is perfectly obvious that the bill which is now the unfinished business contains no such language, but I ask the Senator if any other bill reported from the Judiciary Committee contains such language?

Mr. OVERMAN. No bill of that kind was ever reported or ever considered by the Judiciary Committee, but Col. Roosevelt denounces the pending bill, and I want him to see that he has made a false statement; probably he has been misinformed. I say now, again, that if he has his old-time manhood and is a lover of truth and courage he will apologize to the people of this country; and I give him the opportunity by sending the bill to the desk and asking that it be printed in the RECORD, so as to let him see it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that a copy of the bill now under consideration be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The bill referred to, as reported by the Committee on the Judiciary, is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of title 1 of the act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 15, 1917, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. Whoever, when the United States is at war, shall willfully make or convey false reports or false statements with intent to interfere with the operation or success of the military or naval forces of the United States or to promote the success of its enemies, or shall willfully make or convey false reports or false statements, or say or do anything except by way of bona fide and not disloyal advice to an investor or investors, with intent to obstruct the sale by the United States of bonds or other securities of the United States or the making of loans by or to the United States, and whoever, when the United States is at war, shall willfully cause or attempt to cause, or incite or attempt to incite, insubordination, disloyalty, mutiny, or refusal of duty, in the military or naval forces of the United States, or shall willfully obstruct or discourage or willfully attempt to obstruct or discourage the recruiting or enlistment service of the United States, and whoever, when the United States is at war, shall utter, print, write, or publish any disloyal, profane, scurrilous, contemptuous, or abusive language about the form of government of the United States, or the Constitution of the United States, or the soldiers or sailors of the United States, or the flag of the United States, or the uniform of the Army or Navy of the United States, or any language calculated to bring the form of government of the United States, or the Constitution of the United States, or the soldiers or sailors of the United States, or the flag of the United States, or the uniform of the Army or Navy of the United States into contempt, scorn, contumely, or disrepute, or shall utter, print, write, or publish any language calculated to incite or inflame resistance to any duly constituted Federal or State authority in connection with the prosecution of the war, or shall display the flag of any foreign enemy, or shall by utterance, writing, printing, publication, or language spoken, urge, incite, or advocate any curtailment of production in this country of any thing or things, product or products, necessary or essential to the prosecution of the war in which the United States may be engaged, with intent by such curtailment to cripple or hinder the United States in the prosecution of the war, and whoever shall advocate, favor, teach, defend, or suggest the doing of any of the acts or things in this section enumerated, and whoever shall by word or act support or favor the cause of the German Empire or its allies in the present war or by word or act oppose the cause of the United States therein, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000 or imprisonment for not more than 20 years, or both."

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Carolina yield to me for a moment?

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. I think we are making altogether too much out of a comparatively trivial incident. In all probability the only result will be to place the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] in the Ananias Club. [Laughter.]

Mr. OVERMAN. Somebody else also may go there.

Mr. REED and Mr. LODGE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. REED. It looks to me very much more like an attempt on the part of Col. Roosevelt to qualify for membership in one of his own clubs. [Laughter.]

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. Of course, the Senator from North Carolina states the truth. There is no such provision in the bill, and none such has been reported. I think the mistake arose from the fact that it was printed in the Washington Post, where I saw it, and I have no doubt in other newspapers all over the country, that the Judiciary Committee had adopted an amendment containing the precise sentence on which Col. Roosevelt comments. I know no such amendment was ever adopted by the committee; but that was given out by the press. I saw it myself.

Mr. OVERMAN. I said in my remarks that I thought Col. Roosevelt had been misinformed, and I want him to see that he is. I say again that if he has any manhood or any truth left in him, he will apologize, because he says the Judiciary Committee had adroitly put it in, and he quotes the words. I say probably he is misinformed. I am not denouncing him. I will wait and see what he does.

Mr. BORAH and Mr. KELLOGG addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Senator from North Carolina, of course, is entirely correct in his statement that no such language as is quoted in Col. Roosevelt's article was ever considered by the committee, and certainly not to my knowledge was it ever reported out of the committee in any bill; but, Mr. President, I did read in one of the New York papers that precise language, and I went myself and reread the bill after reading that report in the newspapers.

Mr. LODGE. So did I. That was stated specifically.

Mr. BORAH. I knew there must be an error.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. I think the error crept in by—well, the way the language was framed in the report, it read as if the President was specifically named; but it might have been simply the conclusion of the reporter.

Mr. KELLOGG and Mr. GORE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. KELLOGG. The Senator from Idaho has stated substantially what I was going to state. I saw this in the press, and it was stated so specifically as an amendment which had been reported by the Judiciary Committee that I supposed it was in the bill until the bill was brought before the Senate for discussion the other day. I think the Senator from North Carolina should not accuse Col. Roosevelt of falsehood under those circumstances.

Mr. OVERMAN. I did not do so. I said that I would have the bill printed in the RECORD for him to see; that I thought he had been misinformed; and I said that if he had been misinformed I believed he would not want to mislead the American people.

Mr. KELLOGG. I do not think he does.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not think he intends to make a false statement, and, therefore, I bring to his attention the bill and will let him see that he has made a mistake, probably unwittingly. I do not charge that he did it wittingly.

Mr. KELLOGG. I am sure he did not.

Mr. GORE and Mr. SMOOT addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I was trying to obtain the floor either while the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] or the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] was on the floor.

It is certain that the language quoted by Mr. Roosevelt is not contained in the bill; and I was intending to inquire whether or not the fact that the President is Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy would, by legal implication, bring him within the terms of the bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. Certainly not. That is understood by every one. That has not been contended by anybody who has read the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, not only have the people in the East seen the same statement in the press generally, but the people of the West have also seen that same statement published in newspapers there, for I have received a number of letters complaining of the bill and quoting the exact language as quoted by Col. Roosevelt in this article.

Mr. OVERMAN. Therefore what I am asking is that Col. Roosevelt may have an opportunity to see the language of the bill. I again repeat that if he has got the courage I always thought he had and his love of truth, as I think he has and as he used to have, he will state the truth about it.

Mr. STONE. Will the Senator from North Carolina permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. OVERMAN. I will.

Mr. STONE. I read former President Roosevelt's statement; and I desire to say there is no such language in the bill as stated by him; but I wonder—and I express that wonderment now—whether the former President merely wanted to get out of the zone of danger himself and leave everything else and everybody else subject to criticism, to arrest, and to indictment.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think we had better have the whole article put into the RECORD with the quotation marks around what ex-President Roosevelt said was in the bill, so that he may understand what our contention is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Carolina request that the matter he refers to be printed in the RECORD?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post of Apr. 6, 1918.]

ROOSEVELT DENOUNCES PROVISION IN THE PENDING DISLOYALTY BILL.

KANSAS CITY, April 5.

The Kansas City Star to-morrow will publish the following editorial:

CITIZENS OR SUBJECTS.

(By Theodore Roosevelt.)

In a self-governing country the people are called citizens. Under a despotism or autocracy the people are called subjects. This is because in a free country the people are themselves sovereign, while in a despotic country the people are under a sovereign.

In the United States the people are all citizens, including its President. The rest of them are fellow citizens of the President. In Germany the people are all subjects of the Kaiser. They are not his fellow citizens, they are his subjects. That is the essential difference between the United States and Germany, but the difference would vanish if we now submitted to the foolish or traitorous persons who endeavor to make it a crime to tell the truth about the administration when the administration is guilty of incompetence or other shortcomings. Such endeavor is itself a crime against the Nation. Those who take such an attitude are guilty of moral treason of a kind both abject and dangerous.

WHERE LOYALTY IS DUE.

Our loyalty is due entirely to the United States. It is due to the President only and exactly to the degree in which he efficiently serves the United States. It is our duty to support him when he serves the United States well; it is our duty to oppose him when he serves it badly. This is true about Mr. Wilson now, and it has been true about all our Presidents in the past. It is our duty at all times to tell the truth about the President and about every one else, save in the cases where to tell the truth at the moment would benefit the public enemy.

Since this war began the suppression of the truth by and about the administration has been habitual. In rare cases this has been disadvantageous to the enemy. In the vast majority of cases it has been advantageous to the enemy, detrimental to the American people, and useful to the administration only from the political, not the patriotic, standpoint.

The Senate Judiciary Committee has just recommended the passage of a law in which, among many excellent propositions to put down disloyalty, there has been adroitly inserted a provision that anyone who uses "contemptuous or slurring language about the President" shall be punished by imprisonment for a long term of years and by a fine of many thousand dollars. This proposed law is sheer treason to the United States; under its terms Abraham Lincoln would have been sent to prison for what he repeatedly said of Presidents Polk, Pierce, and Buchanan. Under its terms President Wilson would be free to speak of Senator-elect LENROOT as he has spoken, but Senator LENROOT would not be free truthfully to answer President Wilson. It is a proposal to make Americans subjects instead of citizens. It is a proposal to put the President in the position of the Hohenzollerns and Romanoffs.

GOVERNMENT BY THE PEOPLE.

Government by the people means that the people have the right to do their own thinking and to do their own speaking about their public servants. They must speak truthfully, and they must not be disloyal to the country, and it is their highest duty by truthful criticism to make and keep the public servants loyal to the country. Any truthful criticism could and would be held by partisanship to be slurring or contemptuous. The Delaware House of Representatives has just shown this. It came within one vote of passing a resolution demanding that the Department of Justice proceed against me because in my recent speech in Maine I "severely criticized the conduct of our National Government." I defy any human being to point out a statement in that speech which was not true and which was not patriotic, and yet the decent and patriotic members of the Delaware Legislature were only able to secure a majority of one against the base and servile partisanship of those who upheld the resolution.

CALLS IT UNCONSTITUTIONAL.

I believe the proposed law is unconstitutional. If it is passed, I shall certainly give the Government the opportunity to test its constitutionality, for whenever the need arises I shall in the future speak truthfully of the President, in praise or in blame, exactly as I have done in the past. When the President in the past uttered his statements about being too proud to fight and wishing peace without victory and contending that we had no special grievance against Germany, I spoke of him as it was my high duty to speak. Therefore I spoke of him truthfully and severely, and I care nothing whether or not timid and unpatriotic and shortsighted men said that I spoke slurringly or contemptuously. In as far as the President in the future endeavors to wage this war efficiently and to secure the peace of overwhelming victory I shall heartily support him, but if he wages it inefficiently or if he should not champion a peace without victory or say that we had no grievance against Germany, I would speak in criticism of him precisely as I have spoken in the past. I am an American and a free man. My loyalty is due to the United States, and therefore it is due to the President, the Senators, the Representatives, and all other public servants only and to the degree in which they loyally and efficiently serve the United States.

[Copyright, 1918, by the Kansas City Star.]

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I should like the attention of the Senator from North Carolina on the pending bill. As I understood the Senator in charge of the bill——

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. NORRIS. I think the Senator from Minnesota is probably laboring under a misapprehension, or else I am. Has the morning business been finished?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Reports of committees are in order under the morning business. There is no pending bill.

Mr. NORRIS. But the Senator speaks of the pending bill. I should like to have the morning business finished.

Mr. KELLOGG. I should like to make an observation in connection with the statement of the Senator in charge of the bill on Col. Roosevelt's editorial, if the Senator will permit me.

The Senator from North Carolina has said, as I understood him, that no such bill had ever been introduced or ever been before the Judiciary Committee or considered by the Judiciary Committee. The Senator from North Carolina is mistaken. On the 17th day of August, 1917, the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] introduced exactly such a bill, from which I read:

That when the United States shall be engaged in war it shall be unlawful for any person or persons in the presence or hearing of others to utter any disloyal, threatening, profane, violent, scurrilous, contemptuous, slurring, abusive, or seditious language about the Government of the United States, or the Constitution of the United States, or the President of the United States, or the Army or Navy or soldiers or sailors of the United States, or the flag of the United States, or the uniform of the Army or Navy of the United States, or the good and welfare of the United States, or any other language calculated to bring the United States or the United States Government, or the President of the United States, or the Constitution of the United States, or the Army or Navy or soldiers or sailors of the United States, or the flag of the United States, or the good and welfare of the United States into contempt, scorn, contumely, or disrepute—

And so forth.

Now, undoubtedly that was published. The Senator from North Carolina was entirely mistaken in his statement.

Mr. OVERMAN. Oh, Mr. President, I did not say that it had not been introduced. I can not tell, out of 3,000 bills, what has been introduced. I intended to say that such a bill has never been before the committee or considered by the committee. There are hundreds of bills there that have never been read and have never been considered.

Mr. KELLOGG. If the Senator will let me complete my statement, I am informed by a member of the Committee on the Judiciary that the bill was before the Judiciary Committee and was considered——

Mr. OVERMAN. I have no recollection of it.

Mr. KELLOGG. And that the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] appeared before the committee.

Mr. OVERMAN. I was not present then. The Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] has never been before the committee while I was present.

Mr. MYERS and Mr. STERLING addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to anyone?

Mr. MYERS. Will the Senator yield to me or to the Senator from South Dakota? I do not care which. I want to be heard before this matter is laid aside.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota has the floor.

Mr. KELLOGG. Now, of course, Col. Roosevelt was mistaken in his editorial. No such language was ever reported by the committee.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KELLOGG. I yield.

Mr. HARDWICK. But the press of the country generally carried the news that it was being considered and about to be adopted.

Mr. KELLOGG. It did.

Mr. OVERMAN. What—this bill?

Mr. HARDWICK. This proposition.

Mr. KELLOGG. I thought the language, when I saw it in the paper, was most remarkable, and I was very glad to see afterwards that it was not in the bill.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. KELLOGG. I yield.

Mr. STERLING. Since the Senator from Minnesota has referred to it, I think perhaps I am his informant in regard to the bill which he has just read, and which was before the Judiciary Committee. The Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] appeared before that committee, I think, at least two months ago. I think the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] was not present at that meeting of the committee. Only three or four members of the committee were present. They heard the statement of the Senator from Montana, and no consideration has been given the bill by the committee since that time. That is my recollection.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, on the 15th day of August, 1917, I introduced in the Senate the bill, a part of which has been read to the Senate by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG]. That bill was aimed at the same object—had the same purposes—as the bill which is now pending before the Senate and embodied very largely the same identical language, only there was more of it. It was more comprehensive, covered more ground. My bill was referred to the Senate Committee on the Judiciary. It was never considered by that committee; that is, not by the full committee. After being referred to the Committee on the Judiciary it was referred by the chairman of the committee to a subcommittee, consisting of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], and the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING].

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, if the Senator from Montana will permit me, I stand corrected in one respect, and that is, it was before the subcommittee that the Senator from Montana appeared rather than the full committee.

Mr. OVERMAN. Ah! I am glad the Senator corrected it, because I thought I had been present at every meeting of the committee.

Mr. MYERS. If I may be permitted, so long as this matter is under discussion, I should like to give a complete and correct chronological history of my bill, which has never seen the light of day since it was referred to the Judiciary Committee.

At my suggestion it was referred to a subcommittee, consisting, as I have said, of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], and the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING]. A little later—a few days or a week later—at my urgent request, made of all the members of that committee, the subcommittee held a meeting in the committee room of the Judiciary Committee, and I there appeared before that subcommittee, consisting of those three gentlemen, all of them being present, and I made what I considered and intended to be quite an extended argument in favor of my bill, and urged many reasons why it should be favorably reported by the subcommittee to the full committee. But while I think the necessity for such legislation was almost as great then as now, I was apparently unable to interest the members of the subcommittee in the bill; and, notwithstanding I urged action, the subcommittee apparently put the bill to sleep with the slumber that knows no awakening. It is still slumbering, I am informed, in the files or archives or keeping of the subcommittee. It may be in the pocket of one of its members. No action was ever taken upon it by the subcommittee. It was never reported to the full committee.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. MYERS. With pleasure.

Mr. KELLOGG. May I put the full bill into the RECORD?

Mr. MYERS. With pleasure; because I am proud of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the bill referred to, offered by the Senator from Montana, will be printed in full in the RECORD.

The bill S. 2789, introduced by Mr. MYERS on August 15, 1917, is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That when the United States shall be engaged in war it shall be unlawful for any person or persons, in the presence or hearing of others, to utter any disloyal, threatening, profane, violent, scurrilous, contemptuous, slurring, abusive, or seditious language about the Government of the United States, or the Constitution of the United States, or the President of the United States, or the Army or Navy or soldiers or sailors of the United States, or the flag of the United States, or the uniform of the Army or Navy of the United States, or the good and welfare of the United States, or any other language calculated to bring the United States, or the United States Government, or the President of the United States, or the Constitution of the United States, or the Army or Navy or soldiers or sailors of the United States, or the flag of the United States, or the good and welfare of the United States into contempt, scorn, contumely, or disrepute; or any language calculated to incite or inflame resistance to any duly constituted Federal or State authority in connection with the prosecution of war; or to threaten the good or welfare of the United States or the United States Government; or to advise, urge, or incite any curtailment of production in this country of any thing or things, product or products, necessary or essential to the prosecution of the war in which the United States may be engaged, with intent by such curtailment to cripple or hinder the United States in the prosecution of such war.

SEC. 2. That any person duly convicted of any such foregoing offense shall be for each such offense punished by a fine of not less than $500 nor more than $5,000 or by imprisonment for not less than six months nor more than five years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Mr. MYERS. I have inquired recently of the chairman and clerk of the Judiciary Committee if any action was ever taken by the committee on my bill, and I have been told by both that no action was ever taken, so I am satisfied that my bill was never brought before the full committee. I have been so informed repeatedly by the clerk of the committee, and I am satisfied that it was never considered by the full committee; that it was never even before the full committee; that the full committee knew nothing of it and knows nothing of it now, save what has been here said to-day. I am satisfied that it was never offered as an amendment to the pending bill nor any other bill. The clerk of the committee tells me it was not; and therefore any assertion or idea that my bill was offered as an amendment to the pending bill or any other bill, or was considered by the Judiciary Committee, or was before the Judiciary Committee, I am satisfied is wholly incorrect. I do not think any member of the Judiciary Committee, aside from the three who composed the subcommittee, which is supposed to be still considering the bill, ever heard of the bill until this morning.

Mr. CUMMINS rose.

Mr. MYERS. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. I did not rise to interrupt the Senator.

Mr. MYERS. I want a few minutes, probably four or five minutes longer.

Mr. CUMMINS. I intend, as soon as the Senator from Montana finishes, to demand the regular order, because I think it is a great deal more important that the Senate shall give its consideration to the bill that was before it yesterday than it is to discuss Col. Roosevelt or anything that he may have said.

Mr. MYERS. I am not discussing Col. Roosevelt. I have nothing to say about him. I thank the Senator for allowing me to proceed a few minutes longer. Having been drawn into this matter, I think I am entitled to be fully heard on it.

So those are the facts, just as I have related them, because I have taken pains to keep in touch with my bill and to make inquiry about it and know what the facts are. As I say, the bill apparently slumbers where it was put to sleep. A few weeks ago the Montana Legislature apparently took the greater part of my bill and embodied it verbatim in a statute of that State.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Montana yield to his colleague?

Mr. MYERS. With pleasure.

Mr. WALSH. I rise to correct my colleague.

Mr. MYERS. I would be very glad to be corrected if I am incorrect.

Mr. WALSH. The language attributed to the Judiciary Committee by Col. Roosevelt is not found in the Montana statute.

Mr. MYERS. Oh, the Senator is correct about that. I was going to get to that in a second. Just let me make a complete statement, please. I want to follow it up. It will take only a very few minutes.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. MYERS. I yield, with pleasure.

Mr. FALL. Apparently, while Mr. Roosevelt was premature, he was correct in his statement, because the Senate is considering it.

Mr. MYERS. Well, Mr. President, if I may have three or four minutes without interruption, I will finish this statement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will protect the Senator if he desires not to be interrupted.

Mr. MYERS. I can decline to yield, of course, though I know that any Senator to whom I may decline to yield can call for the regular order. If I may be permitted, I will finish in a few minutes.

As I say, a few weeks ago the Montana Legislature took literally a large part of my bill—not all of it; it rejected some of it—it apparently took literally a large part of the language in my bill and enacted it into a statute of the State of Montana; but that part which was enacted into a statute of the State of Montana has no reference to the President of the United States. That part of my bill which had reference to the President of the United States was eliminated by the Montana Legislature, as well as other portions of my bill; while the rest, I am told, was taken and enacted into a statute of the State of Montana. I am so informed by officials of Montana. Then it appears that the Judiciary Committee of this body took the Montana statute and made some changes in it and some additions to it and offered it, with those changes and additions, as an amendment to the pending bill. Neither the Montana statute nor the amendment to the pending bill, however, contains that part of my bill which made reference to the President of the United States.

I made some comparison yesterday, and the following language in the pending committee amendment appears to be practically identical with the language in the bill which I offered last August:

Whoever, when the United States is at war, shall utter any disloyal, profane, scurrilous, contemptuous, or abusive language about the form of government of the United States, or the Constitution of the United States, or the soldiers or sailors of the United States, or the flag of the United States, or the uniform of the Army or Navy of the United States, or any language calculated to bring the form of government of the United States, or the Constitution of the United States, or the soldiers or sailors of the United States, or the flag of the United Sates, or the uniform of the Army or Navy of the United States into contempt, scorn, contumely, or disrepute, or shall utter any language calculated to incite or inflame resistance to any duly constituted Federal or State authority in connection with the prosecution of the war, or shall urge, incite, or advocate any curtailment of production in this country of any thing or things, product or products, necessary or essential to the prosecution of the war in which the United States may be engaged, with intent by such curtailment to cripple or hinder the United States in the prosecution of the war.

That language appears to be identical with language in my original bill and to have been taken therefrom. The remaining language in the committee amendment was put in either by the Legislature of Montana or by the Committee on the Judiciary of this body. It emanated from one or the other of those sources. So that part of my bill which referred to the President of the United States, it appears, was not considered by the Judiciary Committee nor was it before the Judiciary Committee in any way whatever, for I particularly inquired about the matter.

As for my bill, which contains some language to which Mr. Roosevelt objects, I will say that I am proud of it. I think it a far better bill and a more effective one than the provision which is now before this body as a committee amendment to the pending bill. I believe it covers more comprehensively and effectively the object to which this amendment is aimed to remedy than does the committee amendment to the pending bill. When I introduced my bill I showed it to a number of Senators, especially some from the Western States, and consulted with them about it, and every one of them approved it and promised to give it their support, but as it made no headway in the committee they had no opportunity to do it.

These are the facts, Mr. President. I have correctly narrated them, and they cover the entire subject that seems to have thrown the Senate into a turmoil this morning.

Mr. CUMMINS. I demand the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is reports of committees.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 9641) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 360) thereon.

BILL INTRODUCED.

A bill was introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 4283) to add certain lands to the Crater Lake National Park, Oreg.; to the Committee on Public Lands.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 2d instant approved and signed the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 133) authorizing the granting of insurance under the act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, as amended by the act approved October 6, 1917, on application by a person other than the person to be insured.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

H. R. 10843. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 10850. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war; and

H. R. 10924. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

REMOVAL OF ALIEN ENEMIES—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. OVERMAN. I submit a report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9504) to amend section 4067 of the Revised Statutes by extending its scope to include women. I ask that the report go over until next week.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will lie on the table for the present.

The conference report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9504) to amend section 4067 of the Revised Statutes by extending its scope to include women, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 3.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1 and 2, and agree to the same.

LEE S. OVERMAN,
DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
KNUTE NELSON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

E. Y. WEBB,
C. C. CARLIN,
A. J. VOLSTEAD,
Managers on the part of the House.

PROTECTION OF WAR MATERIAL AND TRANSPORTATION FACILITIES—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. OVERMAN. I submit a conference report on Senate bill 383, for the protection of war material, and so forth. Any Senator on the floor may object, and it will then go over; but I am going to ask unanimous consent for its present consideration. I desire to have read the telegram which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the telegram will be read by the Secretary.

The Secretary read as follows:

TUCSON, ARIZ., April 2, 1918.

ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C.:

Please advise under what law we can indict person for mixing glass in bread. Only law we can find applicable is prohibition against unlawful engaging in deceptive and wasteful practices or devices provided by section 4, food-control bill, for which, apparently, no penalty provided. Grand jury now in session. Probably will adjourn Wednesday. Desire to have your advice in matter before adjournment of grand jury. Reply Tucson.

FLYNN.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, we have no law against putting glass into bread or poison into candy, or the poisoning of stock, or the burning of elevators, or the destroying of war materials, or the destroying of great munition plants. The Senate passed a bill about six months ago that we thought might cover such a case. The House of Representatives has at last passed that bill with some amendments. Your conference committee met and agreed on the conference report, which I am going to make. Right here in the city of Washington a Representative's daughters are now suffering from having eaten bread with glass in it. I think there is no more important bill than this.

Mr. LODGE. There is none.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not know what the conference report is, but from the Senator's preliminary statement I am satisfied that I agree with him about the importance of its adoption, and I merely wish to take occasion to express an idea that I have had for some time in regard to the punishment of people guilty of the acts the Senator has described. The Senator says that there is no law for the punishment of people who put glass in bread and no law for the punishment of a man who burns an elevator.

Mr. OVERMAN. I mean no Federal law.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I saw the other day an article in a newspaper purporting to have come from the Department of Justice, which said that there was no such law. That article was written by one of the busy newspaper correspondents who write signed articles in one or two newspapers, always defending everything that the administration does and criticizing and denouncing everybody who undertakes to say that any part of the administrative machinery of the Government is not perfect. He said that the Attorney General could not prosecute a man for putting a bomb on board of a ship for the purpose of sinking the ship. I assume that what the Senator from North Carolina has said and what this correspondent—defender and apologist of all the different administrative bureaus, who is so busy every day defending them—has said represents the idea and attitude of the Department of Justice of the United States.

That is one thing that is the matter with the country to-day, that we have a Department of Justice which says there is no law for punishing men who, in the most diabolical way that the human mind can conceive of, undertake to destroy valuable property and take human life. Mr. President, there is not a law student who has studied the first volumes of criminal law who ought not to know that that is not the situation. There are ample laws on the statute books of every State in the Union——

Mr. OVERMAN. I said Federal law.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I did not understand that the Senator limited it to Federal law.

Mr. OVERMAN. Oh, yes.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Whether or not there are Federal laws under which such men can be punished, there are ample laws in the States, and I am satisfied that the State authorities would cooperate to the fullest extent with the Department of Justice in using the State jurisdiction and the State judicial machinery to punish the men who are guilty of such crimes and relieve the country of the spectacle of that department of the Government which is responsible for the protection of life and the preservation of order spreading abroad the statement that men can commit these acts with impunity, and that there is no law to punish them.

I say that there is a law to punish them, and, if there were a proper administration and execution of it, very soon we could put a stop to this sort of arson, murder, and treason in the country.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, there are such laws, probably, in every State, but they are not being enforced. This has been a peaceful country and we have passed very few criminal laws on this subject. I will tell what has fallen under my observation. To-day a German is walking the streets who has confessed that he found defective rods in airplanes which were under construction, and instead of rejecting them, he being the inspector, he ordered that they be varnished over so that they could not be discovered; and so there were put in airplanes defective rods. That man has confessed, and yet he is walking the streets because there is no law to punish him.

Mr. STONE. Why?

Mr. OVERMAN. There are plenty of State laws, but no Federal laws covering such crimes.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President——

Mr. HARDWICK. Take the proposition the Senator makes——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. OVERMAN. If there is going to be debate on it, I will ask that the conference report be printed and go over.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I suggest that it be read.

Mr. OVERMAN. I asked unanimous consent for the consideration of the conference report, the conferees of both Houses having concurred in the report; but if there is going to be debate on it I will let it go over.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Who has objected?

Mr. GALLINGER. Nobody has objected.

Mr. OVERMAN. It seems there is objection to it.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not think there is any objection, and I suggest that the Senator ask that the report be agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair desires to know what is the motion of the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. OVERMAN. I asked unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of the conference report, not thinking there would be any objection; but, if there is objection, I will ask that it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina has submitted a conference report and asks unanimous consent for its present consideration. Is there objection?

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the conference report be read.

Mr. HARDWICK. I ask that it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the report.

The Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 383) to punish the destruction or injuring of war material and war transportation facilities by fire, explosives, or other violent means, and to forbid hostile use of property during time of war, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House striking out all after the enacting clause, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"That the words 'war material,' as used herein, shall include arms, armament, ammunition, live stock, stores of clothing, food, foodstuffs, or fuel; and shall also include supplies, munitions, and all other articles of whatever description, and any part or ingredient thereof, intended for, adapted to, or suitable for the use of the United States, or any associate nation, in connection with the conduct of the war.

"The words 'war premises,' as used herein, shall include all buildings, grounds, mines, or other places, wherein such war material is being produced, manufactured, repaired, stored, mined, extracted, distributed, loaded, unloaded, or transported, together with all machinery and appliances therein contained; and all forts, arsenals, navy yards, camps, prisons, or other military or naval stations of the United States, or any associate nation.

"The words 'war utilities,' as used herein, shall include all railroads, railways, electric lines, roads of whatever description, railroad or railway fixture, canal, lock, dam, wharf, pier, dock, bridge, building, structure, engine, machine, mechanical contrivance, car, vehicle, boat, or aircraft, or any other means of transportation whatsoever, whereon or whereby such war material or any troops of the United States, or of any associate nation, are being or may be transported either within the limits of the United States or upon the high seas; and all dams, reservoirs, aqueducts, water and gas mains and pipes, structures and buildings, whereby or in connection with which water or gas is being furnished, or may be furnished, to any war premises or to the military or naval forces of the United States, or any associate nation, and all electric light and power, steam or pneumatic power, telephone and telegraph plants, poles, wires, and fixtures and wireless stations, and the buildings connected with the maintenance and operation thereof used to supply water, light, heat, power, or facilities of communication to any war premises or to the military or naval forces of the United States or any associate nation.

"The words 'United States' shall include the Canal Zone and all territory and waters, continental and insular, subject to the jurisdiction of the United States.

"The words 'associate nation,' as used in this act, shall be deemed to mean any nation at war with any nation with which the United States is at war.

"SEC. 2. That when the United States is at war, whoever, with intent to injure, interfere with, or obstruct the United States or any associate nation in preparing for or carrying on the war, or whoever, with reason to believe that his act may injure, interfere with, or obstruct the United States or any associate nation in preparing for or carrying on the war, shall willfully injure or destroy, or shall attempt to so injure or destroy, any war material, war premises, or war utilities, as herein defined, or, whoever, with intent to injure, interfere with, or obstruct the United States or any associate nation in preparing for or carrying on the war shall conspire to prevent the erection or production of such war premises, war material, or war utilities, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 30 years, or both.

"SEC. 3. That nothing herein shall be construed as making it unlawful for employees to agree together to stop work or not to enter thereon with the sole and bona fide purpose of securing better wages or conditions of employment.

"SEC. 4. That when the United States is at war, whoever, with intent to injure, interfere with, or obstruct the United States or any associate nation in preparing for or carrying on the war, or whoever, with reason to believe that his act may injure, interfere with, or obstruct the United States or any associate nation in preparing for or carrying on the war, shall willfully make or cause to be made in a defective manner, or attempt to make or cause to be made in a defective manner, any war material, as herein defined, or any tool, implement, machine, utensil, or receptacle used or employed in making, producing, manufacturing, or repairing any such war material, as herein defined, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 30 years, or both."

And the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the title, and agree to the same.

LEE S. OVERMAN,
DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
KNUTE NELSON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

E. Y. WEBB,
C. C. CARLIN,
A. J. VOLSTEAD,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina has asked unanimous consent for the present consideration of the conference report. Is there objection?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, as it will delay this matter only one day, I ask that the report be printed, and the Senator can call it up on Monday morning. I should like to look at one or two sections of the report, because, as I caught the reading of them, I think it is well enough to look into them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands, then, that the Senator from New Hampshire objects to the present consideration of the conference report.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; I object to its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the conference report will go over.

PROMOTION OF EXPORT TRADE—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. POMERENE. I ask unanimous consent to have laid before the Senate for present consideration the conference report on House bill 2316, which is known as the export-trade bill, and which was submitted by me on yesterday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCKELLAR in the chair). The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the conference report on the export-trade bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the conference report will be read.

The Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2316) to promote export trade, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 8.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, and 4, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 5 and 6, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out and the matter inserted by said amendments strike out in lines 1, 2, and 3, page 3, all of section 2 after the word "or," in line 1, page 3, the matter stricken out being "intentionally and unduly enhances prices within the United States of commodities of the class exported by such association," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "intentionally enhances or depresses prices within the United States of commodities of the class exported by such association, or which substantially lessens competition within the United States or otherwise restrains trade therein"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 18, page 5, in addition to the matter stricken out by the Senate amendment, strike out the words "and unduly," and in addition to the words added by the Senate amendment add in line 20, page 5, after the word "association," and before the word "it," the following: "or which substantially lessens competition within the United States or otherwise restrains trade therein"; and the Senate agree to the same.

ATLEE POMERENE,
JOE T. ROBINSON,
ALBERT B. CUMMINS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

E. Y. WEBB,
C. C. CARLIN,
A. J. VOLSTEAD,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. POMERENE. I ask that the Senate agree to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

PRICE OF WHEAT.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I send to the desk a resolution, which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 222), as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Agriculture be directed to transmit to the Senate forthwith a full and unedited copy of the minutes, proceedings, and resolutions, including portions expunged, if any, of all meetings of the agricultural advisory committee.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I wish to trespass on the time of the Senate to offer a word or two of explanation touching this resolution. First, I ask to have read by the Secretary a marked sentence in this morning's Washington Post, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Wheat growers, general farmers, and general grain men, forming the agricultural advisory committee, have determined that the price of $2.20 wheat, set by President Wilson in his latest proclamation, gives the wheat producers a generous margin of profit.

Mr. GORE. There is more of like kind. I need not say that this statement may or may not be true.

If true, there are three points in connection with the passage just read to which I wish to call the attention of the Senate. The passage says the wheat farmers, general farmers, and general grain farmers adopted a resolution a few days since in Washington expressing it as their opinion that the price of $2.20 per bushel for the wheat crop of 1918 was sufficient and was satisfactory, giving a generous margin of profit. This resolution is alleged to have been adopted by the so-called agricultural advisory committee. This is a committee of farmers, or alleged farmers, selected by Secretary Houston and by Food Administrator Hoover. One Senator suggests to me that they are swivel-chair farmers.

Mr. President, if the real farmers of the United States have expressed it as their deliberate opinion that $2.20 is an adequate price for wheat for the crop of 1918, that ought to be conclusive upon the Senate, it ought to be conclusive upon the House, and it ought to close and foreclose this entire controversy.

Mr. President, there are farmers and there are farmers. I have no doubt that the 24 members of this advisory committee are all excellent gentlemen and are patriotic citizens. Whether they be actual farmers or not I can not testify of my own knowledge.

I hold in my hand a sort of biographical symposium. It is a series of autobiographies prepared by the several members of the agricultural advisory committee.

The first name mentioned as the chairman is former Gov. Stuart, of the State of Virginia, a man whose character and reputation are known of all men and are, of course, beyond challenge. Gov. Stuart states himself that he owns or operates 35,000 acres of land which he cultivates on the tenant system. He is chairman of the committee.

There is Mr. Hagenbarth, of Idaho. If rumor speaks the truth, he is an industrious, a thrifty, a prosperous farmer. He is a woolgrower and used to operate large ranches in Mexico. It is alleged that by strict economy he has amassed perhaps a million dollars or more; indeed, some reports place it much higher than that. I disclaim any knowledge upon that subject myself.

Another member of this agricultural advisory committee is a Mr. Lincoln, of South Dakota. His name certainly excites a prepossession in his favor. Mr. Lincoln, I understand, owns a ranch of 1,700 acres. He is a man whose savings have brought him prosperity. He is president of the State Savings Bank, of Aberdeen, S. Dak. Not only that, his agricultural savings have enabled him to secure a place on the board of directors of a very large and substantial bank in the city of Minneapolis. Whether Mr. Lincoln farms within the corporate limits of Minneapolis this deponent is unable to testify.

These are samples of the agricultural advisory committee. I will print this aggregation of autobiographies in the RECORD in order to blazon forth the admitted facts touching these farmers:

ADVISORY COMMITTEE OF FARMERS CALLED TO WASHINGTON TO CONSULT WITH SECRETARY HOUSTON AND FOOD ADMINISTRATOR HOOVER.

A committee of representative citizens identified with agriculture in its various phases has been organized by Hon. D. F. Houston, Secretary of Agriculture, and Hon. Herbert Hoover, Food Administrator, to meet in Washington on call from time to time to advise with the Department of Agriculture and the Food Administration concerning agricultural and food problems as they arise. The first meeting was held on March 28. The members of the committee are as follows:

Henry C. Stuart, appointed chairman by Secretary Houston, Elk Garden, Va.

Henry C. Stuart is one of the leading farmers of Virginia, operates a tenant system and 35,000 acres of land. He is a cattle breeder and feeder and interested especially in the development of the live-stock industry on southern cut-over lands of the coastal plains region. Mr. Stuart has served as governor of Virginia.

C. S. Barrett, Union City, Ga.

C. S. Barrett for several years has been president of the National Farmers' Union, one of the largest farmers organizations in the United States. He is an experienced and successful farmer and has long been identified in his State and in the South with agricultural progress.

Elbert S. Brigham, St. Albans, Vt.

Elbert S. Brigham has specialized in dairying and has developed an excellent dairy herd. He is also an extensive bean and potato grower, developing a special market for seed potatoes. For a number of years he has served as institute worker in Vermont, and during the past four or five years Mr. Brigham has been commissioner of agriculture for the State.

W. L. Brown, Kingman, Kans.

W. L. Brown is a wheat grower. He went to Kansas in 1876, proved a claim, taught school, and farmed. He has served for three sessions as a member of the State legislature. He was the first man in his State to enlist in the Spanish War, and raised a regiment and was commissioned as major. Mr. Brown is a member of the State board of agriculture and is on the executive committee of the State Cattlemen's Association. He has had a wide experience in breeding of pure-bred cattle and hogs, and his farming experience has also included the raising and production of many kinds of grains and fruit.

Milo D. Campbell, Coldwater, Mich.

Milo D. Campbell is a native of Michigan, born in 1851. His chief vocation is farming and his specialty dairying. He is now president of the National Milk Producers' Federation. He has held other public offices, and taught school.

David R. Coker, Hartville, S. C.

David R. Coker is one of the most successful farmers in South Carolina and is especially interested in cotton growing. The long-staple cotton developed by Mr. Coker now displaces 75 to 90 per cent of the short-staple cotton formerly marketed in his county. He operates one of the most extensive seed and experimental farms in the South. He is president of a pedigreed seed company and operates a plant breeding, live stock, and seed business. Mr. Coker is president of the South Carolina Plant Breeders' Association. He is chairman of the South Carolina Council of National Defense and director of the Richmond Reserve Bank.

W. R. Dodson, Baton Rouge, La.

W. R. Dodson lives on his large farm near Baton Rouge, La. He is thoroughly informed regarding the cotton, sugar, rice, truck, and live stock farming of the lower Mississippi Valley. He received his university training at the Universities of Missouri, Michigan, and Harvard. For many years he has been director of the Louisiana Agricultural Experiment Station and dean of the College of Agriculture of Louisiana State University. He is a member of the State council of national defense.

Eugene Funk, Bloomington, Ill.

Eugene Funk is one of the foremost producers of seeds in the United States. During the last several years he has conducted a seed business at Bloomington, distributing numerous varieties of seeds, but specializing in seed corn. He operates a large farm, and during the last two years has cultivated approximately 20,000 acres of grain and corn. He also is a feeder of cattle and hogs. He is ex-president of the National Grain Association, charter member and president of the National Corn Association, and a member of the Illinois Seed Corn Growers' Association. He represented the producing interests in the preparation of rules and regulations for the enforcement of the United States grain standards act.

N. H. Gentry, Sedalia, Mo.

N. H. Gentry, farmer and hog breeder, has done a great deal to improve the Berkshire breed of hogs. His herds have often taken the blue ribbons at the International Live Stock Exposition and at State fairs. He has represented the agricultural interests, and especially the swine industry on many occasions.

Wesley G. Gordon, Humboldt, Tenn.

Wesley G. Gordon is a successful farmer in Gibson County, Tenn. He has demonstrated improved agricultural methods on his own farm, and with other leading farmers he has exerted an influence for the improvement of the agriculture of his county, especially in introducing crimson clover and other legumes. He is interested in live stock and general farming in his region.

John Grattan, Broomfield, Colo.

John Grattan has been farming for the past 10 years near Broomfield, Colo. He is a cattle feeder and grain and alfalfa grower. Mr. Grattan is a member of the Grange, the Farmers' Union, and a member of the board of directors of the American National Live Stock Association and of the Farmers' Congress. Mr. Grattan was in the banking business near Medford, Okla., for four years, and during the last five years has been a member of the board of directors of the Stockyards Bank at Denver, Colo. He has been editor of the live-stock department of Ranch and Range, a Western agricultural paper.

J. N. Hagan, Deering, N. Dak.

J. N. Hagan has spent 17 of his 45 years in farming. He grows spring wheat on a large scale. In 1916 he was elected to the office of commissioner of agriculture and labor of North Dakota.

Frank J. Hagenbarth, Spencer, Idaho.

Frank J. Hagenbarth is heavily interested in sheep and wool growing and in cattle raising. He has encouraged modern methods of range and forest development in the West. Formerly he operated large ranches in Mexico. For many years he has been president of the National Wool Growers' Association.

W. W. Harrah, Pendleton, Oreg.

W. W. Harrah is known as one of the largest wheat growers in the Pacific Northwest. He is a director of the Oregon Seed Stocks Committee and has devoted much energy to increasing the acreage of wheat and distributing seed wheat. He is a director of a large terminal warehouse company of Seattle, a director of the Farmers' Union Grain Agency of Pendleton, and a member of the Farmers' Educational Cooperative Union.

C. W. Hunt, Logan, Iowa.

C. W. Hunt and his sons are engaged in general farming, but give special emphasis to swine production and cattle feeding. They produce large corn crops. Mr. Hunt has served in the Iowa State Legislature and in other ways has been honored by his community and State.

H. W. Jeffers, Plainsboro, N. J.

H. W. Jeffers is manager of a large and successful dairy enterprise, including several farms. On one farm between 400 and 500 dairy cows are kept for the production of high-grade market milk. Alfalfa and potatoes are major crops. Recently he was made president of the Walker-Gordon Laboratory Co. He is a member of the New Jersey State Board of Agriculture and interested in a broad way in all agricultural activities.

Isaac Lincoln, Aberdeen, S. Dak.

Isaac Lincoln is one of the most prominent growers of special varieties of seed grains in South Dakota. On his large stock ranch of 1,760 acres near Aberdeen he personally superintends the growing of choice stocks of wheat, oats, barley, flax, emmer, and corn. He is a strong advocate of better quality grain and seed. Mr. Lincoln went to the Dakotas in the eighties and became the owner of large tracts of farm land. He has given much attention to forwarding the development of the country, particularly about Aberdeen. Mr. Lincoln is president of the State Savings Bank at Aberdeen and director of the Scandinavian-American National Bank at Minneapolis. As vice president of the State fair he has been instrumental in developing it to its present successful status.

D. O. Mahoney, Viroqua, Wis.

D. O. Mahoney is a farmer specializing in cigar-leaf tobacco in Vernon County, Wis. He has devoted much time to the organization of the tobacco growers in his State for the collective selling of their crops. He is a graduate of the University of Wisconsin and has served the public in many ways. For several years he was county judge. He has been president of both the State branch and of the national organization of the American Society of Equity.

David M. Massie, Chillicothe, Ohio.

David M. Massie is a business man with large farm interests. He gives much attention to practical farm questions and is interested in agricultural problems in relation one to another and from a standpoint of their relation to other lines of business.

William F. Pratt, Batavia, N. Y.

William F. Pratt is a successful farmer in western New York. He is engaged in general farming and has given considerable attention to feeding lambs. For a long period he has been an agricultural representative on the board of trustees of Cornell University. He is a member of the State farm and markets council.

George C. Roeding, Fresno, Cal.

George C. Roeding is a fruit grower, nurseryman, and irrigation farmer. He has been especially active in the development of raisin, fig, and olive production in California. Mr. Roeding is president of the agriculture society of his State.

Marion Sansom, Fort Worth, Tex.

Marion Sansom has been identified with the live-stock industry in the Southwest for the last 40 years as farmer, feeder, and breeder. Formerly he was a live-stock commission merchant. He is a director of the Federal reserve bank, Dallas, Tex.

C. J. Tyson, Floradale, Pa.:

C. J. Tyson is widely known as a general farmer and fruit grower, specializing in apple production and marketing. For many years he was an active worker in the Adams County Horticultural Society and the State Horticultural Association of Pennsylvania, of which he was secretary for several years and president in 1914.

Oliver Wilson, Peoria, Ill.

Oliver Wilson has been prominent for some time as a farmer and especially as an officer of the National Grange. He was editor in chief of the National Grange Monthly for many years. Prior to 1911 he filled the office of master of the State Grange of Illinois, and was lecturer for the National Grange. In November, 1911, he was elected master of the National Grange, which office he has held since.

I am advised by a farmer who farms with his own hands that four or five members of this committee of 24 are satisfactory to the farmers themselves. They wish to disclaim responsibility, however, or rather they wish to challenge the credentials of certain other members of this committee who speak for the actual farmers of this country.

In what I say, Mr. President, I mean to cast no reflection upon any member of this committee, as far as his character and reputation, and so forth, are concerned. The only point I would raise is the question of their fitness to speak for and to bind the 6,000,000 actual farmers in the United States, the men upon whom the hundred millions of our citizens must depend for their daily bread, and upon whom the allies and their embattled armies must depend for bread during this terrific contest.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. GORE. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. By whom were these farmers on this farmers committee first selected?

Mr. GORE. I am informed that they were selected by the Secretary of Agriculture and by Food Administrator Hoover. As far as I know they were neither suggested by farmers nor was their appointment ratified by farmers, but upon that point I am not personally advised.

Mr. MYERS. I should like to ask for information, as I did not hear the first part of the Senator's statement, what is the board called?

Mr. GORE. It is an agricultural advisory committee.

Mr. MYERS. Of how many members?

Mr. GORE. Twenty-four.

Mr. MYERS. When were they appointed?

Mr. GORE. Early in March. I am not certain as to the date.

Mr. MYERS. Whom are they intended to advise?

Mr. GORE. They advise, as I understand, the Secretary of Agriculture and the Food Administrator.

Mr. MYERS. Are they supposed to be actual farmers?

Mr. GORE. That is the supposition. Whether it is a fact or not I do not know.

Mr. MYERS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. GORE. I am informed by actual farmers that they are not quite satisfied with the representatives chosen not by themselves but by the Secretary of Agriculture and the Food Administrator. The latter has not always manifested quite so earnest and continuous a solicitude for the welfare of the farmer as would recommend him or his choice to the actual farmers of this country.

I will have this series of autobiographies printed in the RECORD, in order that each gentleman may speak for himself. The passage which I had read states that this advisory committee adopted a resolution declaring, in effect, that $2.20 was sufficient for the crop of 1918, and that $2.50 was not desired or desirable by the farmer.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. GORE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. REED. I understand that this advisory committee of 24 was selected by the Food Administrator and the Secretary of Agriculture. Of course, it is well known that they are committed to the $2.20 a bushel wheat proposition. I understand the Senator also to say that there are 6,000,000 farmers in the United States. Does the Senator think it is a very difficult problem for a well-advised commission to be able to fix upon a jury of 24 out of the general panel of 6,000,000 who would render a verdict in favor of a proposition that a man wanted accepted, provided he was allowed to pick a jury himself?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, there are real farmers, there are professional farmers, and there are political farmers. I mean by political farmer mere drooling, driveling sycophants, who have a greater regard for the smiles and the favor of power than they have for the interests of the farmers of the country. How many on this committee fall within that category I can not now say, but it is a hand-picked committee.

Next, Mr. President, as to the resolution which is alleged to have been adopted by this advisory committee, naturally I am not in a position to know all of the proceedings of the committee, but I am advised in ways that I had not doubted before this morning's publication that the committee went no further than to say that the price of $2.20 for wheat for the crop of 1917 should not now be increased. I am advised in a way that I had not previously doubted that a Mr. Brown, of Kansas, introduced a resolution declaring it as the sense of the committee that the price for 1918 should be $2.20, and that they were not desiring $2.50. According to my informant, the discussion became so—I had almost said "fast and furious"—that the resolution was withdrawn, and that the record of its introduction had been expunged from the minutes of the meeting. I am pleased to say, sir, that in my judgment it is greatly to the credit of the advisory committee that this resolution was not adopted. A contrary course would have been a self-impeachment.

First, I wish to have read to the Senate a statement from real farmers. It will shed some light on this committee and also reflect the attitude of the farmers touching $2.50 wheat. The advisory farmers are trying to "bear" their own products, according to the morning paper.

I wish to state, Mr. President, why I can not speak with fuller knowledge as to the resolution. I called up Secretary Houston this morning. He was not in the city. I called up Food Administrator Hoover and he was not available and would not be during the day. For this reason I am not able to state what their views or representation as to the facts would be.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to reading the matter sent to the desk by the Senator from Oklahoma? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Senator T. P. GORE,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: In this morning's papers there is a report of a meeting of supposed farmers alleged to have passed a resolution in their meeting stating that $2.20, Chicago basis, No. 1 wheat, was a just and equitable price and satisfactory to the wheat farmers.

I have been in many conventions of farmers since price was fixed on wheat and in every one of them we have condemned the $2.20 price on wheat and have asked for revision upward until wheat was in line with other prices. I know the farmers of this Nation do not recognize the agricultural advisory committee as representing them at all, and I know that organized farmers were not consulted in the selection of these men. We were allowed about 4 of the 24 members in making up the committee. We indorse the Gore amendment and hope it will become a law.

JOHN A. SIMPSON,
President Farmers' Union of Oklahoma, President State Presidents' Association of Farmers' Union, and Secretary of the Wheat Growers' League.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I know Mr. Simpson personally. I know him to be a man of character and I know that his word is entitled to great weight. He speaks not only as president of the Farmers' Union of his own State, I believe the third State in the production of winter wheat in America, but he is also president of the State Presidents' Association of the Farmers' Union. I wish to introduce as a witness the president of the National Grange of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

PEORIA, ILL., April 5, 1918.

C. H. GUSTAFSON,
National Hotel, Washington, D. C.:

Committee not on record favoring $2.20 wheat. It said that it did not believe higher price would affect production of spring wheat more than 10 per cent. National Grange favors Gore amendment as passed by the Senate and worked for its passage. Do all you can with House of Representatives.

OLIVER WILSON.

Mr. GORE. Mr. Wilson is president, I understand, of the National Grange, the oldest, one of the most important, and, I might say, one of the most influential farm organizations in this country. He declares that the advisory committee is not on record as favoring $2.20 for the crop of 1918. On the contrary, the National Grange favors the proposed increase to $2.50. Mr. Wilson is a member of the advisory committee, and I understand is one of the satisfactory members.

I send another telegram to the desk from a man who I believe was formerly president of the Farmers' Equitable Society of America.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

VIROQUA, WIS., April 5, 1918.

GEORGE P. HAMPTON,
Bliss Building, Washington, D. C.:

Left Washington March 31. Up to that time no action was taken by advisory committee to indorse President Wilson on wheat price.

D. O. MAHONEY.

Mr. GORE. According to my information Mr. Mahoney was formerly president of the Farmers' Equitable Society, a very large farmers' organization, embracing the principal wheat-growing States.

I have here another letter. These come from men who represent the real farmers in this country, and Senators may decide for themselves between those who think $2.50 would more nearly compensate the farmer for his outlay in the production of wheat and those who, according to press reports, declare that the men who grow wheat do not want the price increased to $2.50 for their own product.

I am not insisting that farmers should be allowed to fix their own prices. They have a right to be heard. The press of this city, pretending to speak authoritatively, represents that they have been heard and that they are antagonistic to an increase in the price of wheat, an increase which the Senate has voted in a patriotic effort to guarantee a sufficient supply.

Mr. President, I send another letter to the desk, which comes from a man who has some title to speak for the farmers in the third winter wheat producing State of the Union. I ask that the letter may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Senator T. P. GORE,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I noticed in the morning paper what purported to be action taken by the Agricultural Advisory Committee, in which it is stated that the committee was favorable to $2.20 wheat and opposed to fixing the price on the 1918 crop at $2.50. As president of the Nebraska Farmers' Union, representing 35,000 organized farmers in the State of Nebraska, also chairman of the Farmers' War Council of Nebraska, representing all the farm organizations in the State, and speaking for those whom I represent, I desire to most emphatically say that we favor the adoption of the Gore amendment to the Agriculture appropriation bill fixing the price of wheat at $2.50. I desire to say further that I have made investigation privately and have been assured by members of the so-called Agricultural Advisory Committee that no such action as stated in the morning papers was taken by that committee.

Very truly, yours,

C. H. GUSTAFSON.

Mr. GORE. Mr. Gustafson is not only president of the Farmers' Union of Nebraska, one of the leading wheat-producing States of the Union, but he is also president of the Farmers' War Council of that State, a patriotic organization.

I now send to the desk, Mr. President, another letter coming from one who, I believe, has credentials entitling him to speak for the farmer who farms.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SWANSON in the chair). Without objection, the communication will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 6, 1918.

Senator T. P. GORE,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR: Have been delegated by the State of North Dakota to represent the farmers of North Dakota protesting against the action of the so-called Farmers' Advisory Committee in stating that the farmers were satisfied with $2.20 wheat. Our farmers are doing all possible to speed up production, and offer a direct protest against such action and declare that in order to increase production of wheat some quick action must be taken by Congress to insure a price for wheat in proportion to oats, barley, and rye, and that we fully indorse the Gore bill.

(Signed) W. J. MOZLEY,
Director State Union, North Dakota.

Mr. GORE. Mr. Mozley is a sincere friend of the farmer. His heart and soul are in the movement to enable the farmer to discharge his great national duty and to honor all the drafts of patriotism.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to state that I have received a large number of letters from the wheat growers of Kansas, all of which were in favor of the Gore amendment fixing the price of wheat for the 1918 crop at not less than $2.50 per bushel. I have had only one letter protesting against it and claiming that $2.20 a bushel was sufficient for wheat.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

Mr. CURTIS. That letter was not from a farmer, but from a gentleman living in one of our cities.

Mr. GORE. I was about to suggest, interrupting the Senator from Kansas, that probably that letter did not come from a farmer. The Senator, however, anticipated me and stated a fact that was self-evident. There was a meeting held in Kansas at Hutchinson, I think it was on the 20th of March, at which a resolution was adopted declaring that $2.20 a bushel was a sufficient price for wheat, but it was a meeting which had been called by the Department of Agriculture, and was made up of millers, elevator men, and grain dealers. Of course, their testimony can go into the RECORD for whatever it is worth.

Mr. President, I send to the desk a telegram which tends to raise a doubt as to the representative character of this agricultural advisory committee when they undertake, if they undertake, to advise the Nation that $2.20 a bushel for wheat is satisfactory to the farmers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the telegram will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

WENATCHEE, WASH., April 3, 1918.

C. H HYDE,
National Hotel, Washington, D. C.:

Am sorry Northwest can not be represented. Will rely on you to represent us. Two fifty for wheat necessary for producers to break even. A less price will force wheat raisers out of business next season.

E. A. MCCLEAN,
President of Washington State Farmers' Union,
Bridgeport, Wash.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, the president of the Farmers' Union of the State of Washington does not seem to be in accord with the action imputed to this Agricultural Advisory Committee. I send to the desk another telegram from the State of Washington, and I ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

WENATCHEE, WASH., April 3, 1918.

C. H. HYDE,
National Hotel, Washington. D. C.:

Time is too short to get representation to Washington for 4th from Northwest. Farmers feel that they must have guaranty of $2.50 at local railroad point to cause normal sowing of spring wheat. Unless this is done farmers here will produce this crop at a loss.

R. E. DARLING,
President of National Wheat Growers' League.
Bridgeport, Wash.

Mr. GORE. The last two telegrams were addressed to Mr. C. H. Hyde, of my State. Mr. Hyde is a member of the Oklahoma Council of Defense. He is a prominent and responsible citizen. He is one of the leading farmers of the State. In matters of this kind he is conservative. He is entirely responsible. He is here representing the farmers of Oklahoma and urging the wisdom of the proposed increase in the price of wheat.

Mr. President, I find that I have not with me, but I received a letter through the mail this morning, coming spontaneously from an actual farmer. He had seen a statement in the press a few days ago to the effect that this advisory committee was contemplating action of this sort. He wrote me to protest that it did not represent his views, and that it did not represent the views of the farmers with whom he had come in contact; also stating that he had made it a point to ascertain the views of the farmers in his section. I will ask to print extracts from the letter just mentioned and from a clipping in relation to the advisory committee, of which the writer makes mention.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Just now the evening paper came and I inclose three clippings from it. As far as that farmers' advisory committee is concerned, I feel sure it can not be composed of practical, representative farmers, but rather of so-called speculative farmers, or possibly fancy-stock breeders, by courtesy called "farmers," but not at all dependent on actual farming conditions. I read the list of men included in one of the farm papers and see that there is no representative farmer, or otherwise, from this State or section at all.

I am constantly coming in touch with more farmers than the average man, and I have yet to find one farmer who was satisfied with the $2 price. You see we do not get two twenty here, of course. Even that would be better than the $2.

In reading the list of men on the farmers' advisory committee it occurred to me to call your attention to the fact that the States represented show a majority that are either entirely nonwheat-producing States or at best soft-wheat producing States.

The clipping referred to is as follows:

Farmers representing 23 States, in convention at Washington, declared their opposition to the measure now pending in Congress asking that the price of wheat be raised to $2.50 per bushel. They assert that the price as fixed now is sufficient.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield for a question?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir; I yield.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator whether this advisory committee, be they farmers or not, are salaried men or are they volunteers?

Mr. GORE. I can not answer that. I assume that they are volunteers. I am informed that Mr. Brown is a dollar-a-year man.

Mr. GALLINGER. And they were appointed by whom?

Mr. GORE. As I understand, they were appointed by the Secretary of Agriculture and by Food Administrator Hoover to counsel as to policies that would best promote production.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is rather a cumbersome committee, is it not—24 men to advise the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir; it is rather a numerous committee; but I will say that if this action which is attributed to it has actually been taken, the committee is either too large or it is too small; I am unable to decide which.

Mr. President, I will say in this connection, since the Senator from New Hampshire has brought up the subject, that I do not know whether these members of the agricultural advisory committee are so well fitted to discharge their duties as is Mr. Hoover's choice of an assistant to supervise the meat industry of the country. I send to the desk answers to certain questions by Mr. Joseph P. Cotton, who is Mr. Hoover's chief of the meat division of the Food Administration. I wish to say that Mr. Cotton is undoubtedly a lawyer of high standing. He was formerly associated with ex-Senator Spooner, with offices at 15 Wall Street, New York. That, of course, is a recommendation in itself to the farmers of the country, if I may be pardoned for that observation. Mr. Cotton was recently before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and his fitness for this particular place was brought out, or attempted to be brought out, by the questions and their answers which I send to the desk to be read, taken from the hearings.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read the memorandum as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Dr. Durand is your first assistant, is he not?

Mr. COTTON. Yes; but he is not only that; he is my first assistant, and he was there before I was.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. You stated a few moments ago that you had had no experience in the live-stock business yourself.

Mr. COTTON. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Has Dr. Durand had any experience in it?

Mr. COTTON. I think not.

The CHAIRMAN. Who are your other assistants?

Mr. COTTON. The only other assistant who is other than a clerical assistant is E. L. Roy, of Chicago.

The CHAIRMAN. What was his business?

Mr. COTTON. He is a technical hog man, after you kill it.

Mr. GORE. That has no relation to Hog Island, I will say, Mr. President.

The Secretary continued the reading, as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Has he been connected with any of the packing houses?

Mr. COTTON. I am not sure.

The CHAIRMAN. He has not been engaged in the production of live-stock, has he?

Mr. COTTON. No.

* * * * * * *

The CHAIRMAN. I mean there is nobody connected with the Food Administration who is vested with any power who is engaged in the live-stock business, or the handling of meats—or who is an actual producer?

Mr. COTTON. Well, there are people in the Food Administration who have power enough, but no man in the meat division that I know of who has that combination.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I am merely presenting these facts in order to show that it appears to be the opinion of those in authority in the Food Administration that ignorance is the highest mark of fitness for positions of this character.

I now send to the desk an extract from the testimony of Dr. E. Dana Durand—mark the symphony, the harmony, and the euphony of that cognomen—and ask the Secretary to read it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. I will ask you a few questions, Doctor, perhaps abbreviated, merely for the sake of the record. Have you had any experience in the production of live stock?

Mr. DURAND. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you had any experience in the feeding of live stock?

Mr. DURAND. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you had any experience in the packing business?

Mr. DURAND. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you made any studies of the cost of production?

Mr. DURAND. Of live stock?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. DURAND. Substantially none.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you made any study of the cost of feeding?

Mr. DURAND. Well, I have been examining these reports that Mr. Cotton has referred to that has come in with regard to present conditions, and am fairly familiar with them. But as a general thing I would say I was not an expert on the question of the costs of feeding.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, this Dr. Durand—I beg pardon, E. Dana Durand—is alleged to have prepared the report of Mr. Garfield in the famous—I will say "famous"—packing-house investigation. Dr. Durand is the Durand referred to in the letter of January 21, written by Mr. Cudahy's representative in Chicago to Mr. Cudahy's representative in Omaha, in which the former represented that at a meeting of the packing-house representatives Mr. Durand said that the one thing above all others to be kept in mind was that the price of cattle should not be advanced. I should say that Mr. Durand has made an explanation of that statement which does not explain.

Mr. President, there was a meeting of actual wheat growers held in Kansas City on March 21. There were present about 250 delegates, men who grow wheat. I wish to have the marked extracts in the resolutions adopted by that meeting read to the Senate at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

* * * * * * *

It must be admitted by all that the grain producers are occupying the second line of defense in the prosecution of the war. Consequently we ask Congress and the Food Administration to make it possible for us to do our part in winning the war.

Whereas the price of labor and machinery, the two principal items of expense in the production of wheat, has readvanced, since 1916, 100 to 200 per cent, and since that advance, coupled with a period of unfavorable seasons for the growth of crops, makes it impossible for farmers under present conditions to grow wheat for less than $2.75 per bushel at the home market. If such a price is not fixed for the 1918 wheat crop, the acreage of spring wheat now being sown will be materially reduced. The condition of the winter wheat is such as to justify an estimate of not more than half a crop. Taking this fact into consideration, it is possible that the winter wheat growers will not get cost of production even at the price above named.

We believe that a fair price on agricultural products should be determined on a basis of cost of the factors entering into production. We realize the necessity of encouraging the wheat grower to continue in the production of wheat, and suggest that corn and wheat at approximately the same price means a larger acreage of corn and a smaller acreage of wheat. Furthermore, it is practical to encourage greater production of wheat by the Federal Government paying a bonus for every acre of wheat as the administration may deem best. But unless prices of the products the farmer has to buy be regulated on the basis of the price of the products he sells, we demand that all price fixing on wheat be discontinued.

Whereas the consumer of the wheat products may object to any increase in the price of wheat, erroneously believing that the price asked for wheat, if granted, will materially enhance the price of bread, we call the attention of the consumer to the fact that the producer now gets $8.80 for the wheat that goes into the making of a barrel of flour, and which, according to Government estimates, makes 300 16-ounce loaves of bread. This retails at 10 cents a loaf, or $30. The 68 pounds of mill products now sell for more than 2 cents per pound, or $1.36, leaving $22.56 for the expense of manufacturing and distribution. We do not think this margin justifiable while the country is at war, believing, as we do, that all unnecessary expenses between the producer and the consumer should be eliminated as much as possible. The producer gets less than 3 cents for the wheat in a 10-cent loaf. If $1 per bushel was added to the price of wheat, it would increase the price of a loaf of bread 1⅓ cents.

When wheat was 90 cents per bushel crackers retailed at 5 cents per pound. When wheat was selling at $2 per bushel crackers were retailing at 20 cents per pound. While the increase in wheat has been 100 per cent, the increase in the price of crackers has been 300 per cent.

Realizing that the wheat now in the farmers' hands should be placed on the market as requested by President Wilson, we ask that all wheat now held be sold at once, but ask that the Federal Grain Corporations guarantee that the farmer now holding wheat for seed, in the event of a failure of the 1918 crop, be furnished seed at the same price that he sells the wheat which he now holds.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I should say that the omitted parts of the resolutions adopted by this convention of farmers breathe the very highest and warmest spirit of patriotism, and reiterate the determination of the farmers to do not only "their bit" but their best in the prosecution of this war to an acceptable conclusion. It was not made up of such men as those to whom I have referred—Mr. Cotton and Mr. Durand. I should say, in passing, that other assistants of Mr. Hoover in the meat and other divisions are in the employ of the packing houses of this country.

I hold here the Chicago Tribune for February 26. The names were brought out in the so-called Heney investigation. It mentions a Mr. Brooks, who is in the employ and in the pay of Swift & Co., or was until recently. It mentions a Mr. Heyl, who was also in the employ and in the pay of one of the "big five" packing-house companies, receiving pay from that concern and receiving a dollar a year, as I am informed, from the Government of the United States; also a Mr. Priebe, who, I suppose, hatched out this embargo on hens and chickens. He is a representative of one of the big packing concerns—their poultry man. I do not mean to intimate that he placed an embargo on hens in order that the cold-storage establishments could get rid of their stocks; but he was in their pay and employ and receiving, as I am told, a dollar a year from the Government of the United States and from his packing-house employer $250 per month, plus 25 per cent of all the profits above 7 per cent per annum—I mean the profits of the particular subsidiary with which he was connected.

I ask to have printed in the RECORD, accompanying my remarks, this article from the Chicago Tribune.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Charging that the packers had "packed" the Hoover food board and other war boards in Washington with their own "confidential" men, Francis J. Heney, general counsel of the Federal Trade Commission, read some 150 letters—confidential letters and notes passing between the packers—into the records yesterday. The hearing was before Joseph E. Davies, examiner for the commission, and was held in the Federal building.

Mr. Heney indicated that there are many of these "dollar a year men" on the Government's pay roll who at the same time are on the pay of the packers at fancy salaries. He named three of these in the letters he read:

E. O. Heyl, of Libby, McNeil & Libby, a subsidiary of Swift & Co.
W. F. Priebe, of W. F. Priebe & Co., a subsidiary of Swift & Co.
F. S. Brooks, of Swift & Co.

OTHER EMPLOYEES "GROOMED."

Mr. Heney showed that efforts had been made to place other "trusted" men in similar Government war capacities. He also read into the records letters to show that Swift & Co. had employed Prof. L. D. H. Weld, of Yale, and had "donated" his services to the Government.

He read letters to show that plans had been laid to get "friendly" men into Government committees even before it was fully settled that Herbert Hoover was to be in control. The letters, it was explained, are not the famous "Veeder vault" letters, but other letters, secured at the packing-plant offices before the time of the Veeder clash. The Veeder documents are still tied up under court orders.

It is indicated by Mr. Heney that some of these high-salaried men, probably most of them, are drawing salaries around $10,000 a year, while from the Government they get "one dollar a year."

"HALF DOZEN DUAL JOBS."

"How many of these are there?" Mr. Heney was asked.

"Oh, say a half dozen, for a starter," he answered; and then he added: "They seem to be serving their employers in proportion to the pay they get."

He did not charge, except by inference, that these men were unfitted for the war jobs. The intimation was that a man on the pay roll of food producers was not properly on the Government boards.

Tom Creigh, connected with Cudahy & Co., was quoted as saying, in discussing meat prices to be fixed:

"I think the price should be as high as the consumer will stand."

MANY STRINGS PULLED.

Letters showed the methods employed in getting "favored" men on the boards and how they pulled the strings to approach Mr. Hoover. The object of the presentation of the letters before the Federal commissioners, apparently, is to show that the packers, by hook or crook, diplomacy, scheming, and clever ways brought about the naming of men recognized as "friendly" to their interests.

Letters were read from the various members of the Swift family; from Henry Veeder, recently the center of much legal maneuvering; from various other Swift employees; from Thomas E. Wilson, of Wilson & Co.; from David R. Forgan, banker; and many others. They are all regarded as throwing light on the business-getting methods of the packing magnates.

PRIVATE WIRES TO CAPITAL.

The fact was brought out that the various packers, after the war started, put private telegraph wires into Washington.

"They did not have them before, Mr. Commissioner," said Mr. Heney, addressing Commissioner Davies.

Henry Veeder, according to the Government men, was the "policy-maker" of Swift & Co., also for other packers. Mr. Veeder sat in the courtroom during the reading of the letters, as did M. W. Borders, whose vaults were taken over for investigation by the examiners.

J. P. Cotton, an attorney, it was explained, is head of the meat department for the Food Administration. Before that he was associated with Cravath, Henderson & Co., New York. Mr. Cravath's firm handled the reorganization of Wilson & Co. at the time it took over S. & S.

PACKERS GOT INSIDE TIPS.

Letters were read to show that the packers, through some "pipe line," knew of coming events in the Food Administration well in advance of Government announcements. As an example:

On October 7 Mr. Cotton was in Chicago and was shown over the stockyards. On October 11 Mr. Wilson wired other packers that Mr. Cotton was to get his appointment and asked that the information be kept "confidential."

It was also revealed that the men in the Food Administration tried to "pass the buck" to the Federal Trade Commission in the matter of fixing prices for foods. Members of the commission declined to act, on the suspicion that to do so would tie their hands in the investigations that were planned.

FISHER SMILES AT KNOCK.

Walter L. Fisher, attorney, representing cattlemen, sat in the court room as a spectator at the hearing. He smiled when letters between the packers and their representatives were read to the effect that "Fisher's influence with the committee is about gone. I think he will be dropped."

Here Mr. Heney explained that Mr. Fisher was not "dropped."

A memorandum was read from Louis F. Swift to N. A. Chaplin, dated October 7, 1917, directing that his automobile get Mr. Cotton at the Chicago Club and take him to the directors' room of Swift & Co. for a private meeting.

From another letter the quotation was given, "We'll get together and influence Cotton."

It is expected that a number of other names will be read into the evidence to-day. Also a number of witnesses are expected to come to-day from Missouri, Wisconsin, and elsewhere to tell of the plans of the packers and their attempts to monopolize the creamery and butter industries, which, Mr. Heney declared, are competing with oleomargarine and other packing-house products.

SWIFT MAN ON JOB.

An interesting lot of letters relate to E. O. Heyl, former manager for Libby, McNeill & Libby, a corporation, all the stock of which is owned by Swift & Co. Mr. Heyl had charge of the canning department and was put in charge of the canning policy of the Food Administration on regulations and fixing of prices.

Mr. Heney read the letters to show that Heyl while on the pay roll of Swift & Co. sought the place on the Hoover board, and made careful plans to get it even before it was known just what position and power Mr. Hoover would have.

The first letter, addressed to Julius Rosenwald, is dated April 9, 1917, shortly after war had been declared. It says:

"I have a very earnest desire to help to do something big for my country along lines I am especially equipped in. I am now the director of a division of departments, including all canned vegetables, for Libby, McNeill & Libby.

"If I could be a link in possibly a president's committee of business men who would, without expense to the Government, devote time and facilities at their disposal to the stimulating, mobilizing, and perhaps buying a portion of the Government's needed food supply, it would be an inspiring work for me and the field in which I could render best service."

GIVES PACKING REFERENCES.

A list of business references follows, including President Burrows, of Libby, McNeill & Libby, and Harold Swift. He adds:

"For confirmation of my sincerity of purpose the following men will assure you: The Rev. William Chalmers Covert, First Presbyterian Church; President M. W. Stryker, Hamilton College; Judge K. M. Landis and his intimate friend, my brother-in-law, Dr. Frank Cary."

BURROWS URGES AID.

Heyl is again referred to in a telegram from W. F. Burrows, an employee of Swift & Co., to L. F. Swift at Washington. It says:

"Understand Meeker and White in Washington and part of purpose of trip is to get identified with and offer services to Julius Rosenwald's advisory council and help stimulate food production and mobilize food supply. If anything like the above in prospect, believe representation by us desirable, and if we can give them portion of Heyl's time they would have for canned vegetables one who could do the country good and save them money. As we have no canned vegetables to speak of and won't have more till fall, Heyl's and our own sincerity of purpose will be evident."

The Meeker referred to there is Arthur Meeker, of Armour & Co., and the White is White of Armour & Co.

HEYL REPORTS TO SWIFT.

In a letter addressed to Louis F. Swift, Mr. Heyl said:

"At Mr. Burrows's request I send you copies of what I have written in the matter of trying to become a link in the Rosenwald committee of the Council of National Defense.

"One of this committee of three, Mr. Stanley King, * * * is an intimate friend of mine—met him in Russia. I saw King in Washington last week.

"My idea was to offer my services. * * * I know that the Rosenwald committee has now been given power to themselves to buy hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of supplies. They also 'sit in with' and vote on proposed outlays by Navy and Army commissaries. In this field, to buy right, they need a canned-food expert, and in such capacity I think I could be a big help to them and be a credit to my principals.

"From conversation with King, I doubt if such 'heavy ornamentation' as Arthur Meeker or prominent officials of other firms would be acceptable to the committee, and I also believe that much pushing of my case by my business friends might make them question our sincerity of purpose, but I thought the answer King sends me to my letter today—copy attached—would give me a line on the next best move."

PLAN TO "IMPRESS" HOOVER.

Next followed a letter from Louis F. Swift to G. F. Swift, jr., in which he says:

"If you want to go to Washington this week or next, you might arrange for Mr. Heyl to meet you there, as I think you and he might make quite an impression on Mr. Hoover. If you don't care to do this, I will have Charles Swift and Mr. Heyl do it."

Then came a letter from Charles H. Swift, dated White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., to Louis F. Swift:

"Will meet Heyl, New Willard, Washington, 8 o'clock Friday evening. You or Gus please keep me fully posted his movements as far in advance as possible."

CRIMINAL STATUTE CITED.

Other letters along the same line followed. These led to some by-talk in the hearing, as follows:

Commissioner DAVIES. Isn't there a Federal statute that makes all contracts void if there is any direct interest?

Mr. HENEY. Any interest——

Commissioner DAVIES. Through an employee of the Government—a dollar-a-year man?

Mr. HENEY. There is a statute making it a criminal offense.

Commissioner DAVIES. Makes the contract void, too, doesn't it?

Mr. HENEY. Yes; the general rule of law would make it voidable, at any rate.

PLANNED TO USE WELD.

The next letter, addressed to Louis F. Swift by William B. Traynor, was read. Following are quotations:

"As you know, we have been figuring to employ an economist and have been talking about Prof. L. R. D. Weld, of Yale. Dr. Weld is a recognized authority on just the subjects which Mr. Heyl states that Mr. Hoover will cover; in fact, he has been called to Washington before the Senate committee considering food control.

"If we succeed in hiring Dr. Weld and could arrange to have him come with us in a month or so, it might be a good move to tender his services to Mr. Hoover at our expense.

"The fact that Weld had not been in our employ would free our action of any appearance of self-seeking. At the same time it would be recognized as a patriotic and useful act."

HEYL'S APPOINTMENT ANNOUNCED.

Now comes a letter from Louis F. Swift to Henry Veeder, dated May 16, 1917, in which he says:

"Mr. E. O. Heyl, who has charge of the pickle, condiment, and similar departments in Libby, McNeil & Libby, and whom you probably know, has been appointed an assistant to Mr. Julius Rosenwald on the advisory commission of the Council of National Defense, and it is expected that he will have charge of the food end of Mr. Rosenwald's work.

"In connection with your recent interview with Dr. Weld, of Yale, and the possibility that we may engage him, the thought occurred to me, when reading Mr. Heyl's report on his interview with Mr. Hoover, that Dr. Weld would probably make him a valuable assistant."

He adds that, if agreeable, the firm contribute Dr. Weld's service * * * possibly for the duration of the war.

VEEDER IS CAUTIOUS.

Henry Veeder, replying to W. H. Traynor, Swift & Co., casts a doubt, saying:

"I would suggest that our acquaintance with Dr. Weld is rather recent and our knowledge of his work is rather limited for us to recommend him to the Government."

After this letter followed this conversation:

Mr. HENEY. Mr. Commissioner, up to that time all he knew of Dr. Weld was that he was recommended by E. Dana Durand, who seemed to think that his economic theories were correct, and Mr. E. Dana Durand, in the Garfield report of 1905, which was compiled by him, had quite strongly indorsed the economic claims of the big packers as to the importance of the position occupied by them in the industry and the correctness of it from an economic standpoint. Now, that was to lead them to try to employ him to appear as an expert witness for them before the Judiciary Committee of the House in 1916, at the time the Borland resolution was up.

Commissioner DAVIES. Nineteen hundred and sixteen?

Mr. HENEY. When they wanted to prevent the passage of the resolution that would bring about an investigation.

Commissioner DAVIES. You mean 1916?

Mr. HENEY. Yes; 1916. Prof. Weld has been employed by Swift & Co., and the correspondence shows the salary was to be $10,000 a year.

OFFERS ANOTHER EMPLOYEE.

Next comes another letter, dated from Santa Barabara, Cal., date July 24, 1917, from "F. S." to Edward F. Swift, Charles H. Swift, G. F. Swift, jr., and Henry Veeder:

"If there is any opportunity our Mr. F. L. Washburn would be glad to get on Hoover's committee. While I am sure of no chance, if it does come up, do what you can in way of mentioning his name. He is pretty keen on it, about like Heyl of Libby was."

He adds as a postscript: "As you perhaps know, Mr. Washburn is general manager of the Western Meat Co., San Francisco."

Here Mr. Heney explained:

"The Western Meat Co. stock is owned by Armour, Swift, Morris, and some others, but they all own it, and we have quite a little correspondence taken from the files of the Western Meat Co., which shows quite clearly a combination in the meat business in California, which I will produce later. Mr. Washburn, the manager out there, wanted to get on the Food Commission, but so far he has not arrived."

FORGAN ASKS SUGGESTION.

The next letter, addressed to Thomas E. Wilson, of Wilson & Co., on the stationery of the National City Bank, of Chicago, is signed by David R. Forgan. He asks Mr. Wilson to suggest a man "big enough" to assume the responsibilities of purchasing foods for the allies. The reply suggests George L. Marcey, of the Armour Grain Co.

Another letter, very brief, from Louis F. Swift to Mr. Forgan suggests that he might submit the name: "Carter H. Harrison, offering services to Government."

VEEDER ADVISES ACTION.

Henry Veeder, now in Washington, writes to G. F. Swift, jr., in Chicago. In his letter he says:

That the business of Swift & Co. in Washington warrants the placing of a Swift & Co. man—"of good appearance and good ability"—in Washington. That "with the assistance of Mr. Hamilton, such a man could quickly find his way around to the different departments in Washington."

He adds that he believes "such a man would be of more value in the departments of Washington than a strictly business man," and suggests a lawyer. Commenting further, Mr. Veeder suggests:

"Besides, his letter files could not be quite as easily open to inspection by the Federal Trade Commission."

Again, he remarks: "For your information, Libby, McNeil & Libby have found it necessary to place a man in Washington. They have sent Mr. Bettcher."

WHEELER TIPS OFF WILSON.

A letter from Harry A. Wheeler, of the Food Administration, to Thomas E. Wilson, Wilson & Co., dated Chicago, October 11, 1917, follows:

"DEAR MR. WILSON: Hoover's reply to my wire asking for information relative to buying committee was delayed, owing to telegram being misplaced. The understanding is that on Sunday Mr. W. V. S. Thorne, of the Harriman Lines will tentatively accept position of chief of the purchasing department of the Food Administration and will continue in that position if he feels he can be of definite assistance.

"There will be a conference between Mr. Thorne and the members of the British committee in New York, at which time a preliminary outline will be made of the best general plan to follow. This would indicate that the matter is so far open as to be subject to such influence as you may wish to exert."

FOR "FRIENDS AT COURT."

The next is a file of letters relating to general appointments of the Food Administration.

A memorandum of September 10, signed H. J. Nelson, an employee of Swift & Co., says:

"L. F. S. and C. H. S. agree to Mr. L. J. Wilbur's recommendation that A. C. Bigelow, our wool agent at Philadelphia, be permitted to accept a request from Mr. Gifford Pinchot to serve on a subcommittee under the Hoover food committee, in connection with increased production and conservation of sheep and lambs, Swift & Co. to pay his salary while so engaged."

URGES "FRIENDLY" AGENT.

A letter from "W. A. J.," Jersey City, manager for Swift & Co., to G. F. Swift, jr., Chicago, dated April 25, 1917, is, in part:

"We can not recommend to you too strongly the importance of doing everything in our power to see that whoever the provision representative on the new [Hoover] bureau contemplated is, that he will be friendly to Swift & Co."

The words "friendly to Swift & Co." are underscored.

FRIEND OF PACKERS ON JOB.

A letter of July 31 from James P. Moon, of Swift & Co., addressed to Louis F., E. F., Charles H., and G. F. Swift, jr., says:

"This morning's papers announce that Mr. John McE. Bowman, director of the Biltmore Hotel, New York, has been appointed a member of the food commission. As you are aware, he is very close to J. Ogden Armour and a good friend of Swift & Co."

Of this Mr. Heney said: "I think the record shows, Mr. Commissioner, that J. Ogden Armour owns $250,000 worth of stock in the Biltmore Hotel, of which Mr. Bowman is the manager. At any rate, that is the fact."

PROVIDING FOR FUTURE.

Then Mr. Heney read this letter, dated Chicago, June 20, 1917, addressed to Arthur Meeker:

"DEAR SIR: I suppose you are acquainted with Mr. Frank W. Harding, who has a fancy live-stock farm at Waukesha and who is secretary of the American Short Horn Breeders' Association.

"He was at the Saddle and Sirloin Club Monday when we were there with the Italian commission, but, of course, was not in our party. I think that Ed White knows him very well. The thought occurred to me, if later on we need any additional names of the character for Mr. Hoover's committee his name would be worth consideration.

"LOUIS F. SWIFT."

The reply from Mr. Meeker to Mr. Swift is:

"WASHINGTON, D. C.

"I think this is an excellent suggestion, and I'll make it if the opportunity offers.

"A. M."

REPORTS TO ARMOUR.

Next was read a note from T. J. Connors to J. Ogden Armour:

"DEAR OGDEN: Hoover has urged me to go to Washington to discuss matters of importance concerning food administration. I understand 'cold storage' is especially prominent now with them. I will be in Washington on Wednesday at the Shoreham. Tom will meet me, and anything you may send in his care will reach me.

"T. J. CONNORS."

The reply, dated June 28:

"I have your letter, and I certainly hope that you will find it possible to accept position that Hoover will offer you. I believe you can do your country a great deal of good by accepting this position, and it will please us all here very much if you can see your way clear to do so. My best regards to you.

"J. OGDEN ARMOUR."

Mr. Heney said: "It may be interesting to know that Mr. T. J. Connors was a prominent official of Armour & Co. until a short time ago. He has retired and is living in New York City."

SEEKS TO AVOID JOB.

A telegram from J. P. Lyman, connected with the Boston office of Armour & Co., to J. Ogden Armour, dated September 19, 1917, follows:

"Hoover wires asking for a few days of my time in Washington to advise on packing matters. I would like to avoid it, if possible, and be courteous. Have you any suggestions?"

Mr. Armour's reply to Mr. Lyman was:

"Meeker tells me when the packers were in Washington last week with Hoover he asked the packers about you in connection of representing Hoover and the Government in regulating the packers. Naturally all the packers told him you would be the ideal man for this position and most satisfactory to everyone interested. I think the position is of greater importance, much more so than the other one suggested by Rosenwald. I would suggest you at least see Hoover, and you can tell then better whether you want to accept it. I personally would be much pleased if you would see your way clear to accept this place."

SWIFTS DEBATE APPOINTMENT.

Charles H. Swift wrote a note to the other members of his packing house, under date of September 14, saying:

"For your information: It is reported here that Mr. Hoover is looking for a man to organize and head a department to investigate storage space, stocks on hand, how long stored, etc., and that Walden W. Shaw, Chicago, has offered his services without compensation.

"I never happened to run across Mr. Shaw, but am told he is a high-class man, of good appearance and education, and well fixed."

At the bottom of Mr. Swift's note is the notation: "Taxicab man."

On the next day Louis F. Swift replied to the foregoing as follows:

"Referring to the attached, I think it would be ridiculous to bring in a man from this branch of the business"—that is, the taxicab—"and I would like to talk with you at your convenience about whether we should take any action on this through the packers' committee or any other way. I think Harry Boer would be ideal although I do not know if the other job which they have in view for him will take up all of his time.

"LOUIS F. SWIFT."

The next lot of letters refers to food administration and several other things.

MORE APPOINTMENT TALK.

CHICAGO, August 20.

Louis F. Swift wrote to Edward F. Swift:

"I have been told that Tom Wilson is offered a department under Mr. Hoover to handle the meat business, and that he still has it under consideration but doubts the possibility of leaving his firm that long.

"I am told that Mr. Hoover would let the packers do anything that they wanted to do if they would join in recommendations, and it looked like a public benefit and economy in expense and the high cost of living.

"The best posted people in Washington think that there is going to be a big change from now on—that Mr. Hoover is going to be the big man—that the interstate commerce law will be nullified, and even after the war large corporations are going to be handled more in the United States as they are handled in England and Germany, and I think it behooves us during the war to see what we can think of to economize and also after the war to see what suggestions we have.

"LOUIS F. SWIFT."

The next telegram is dated Washington, D. C., November 18. Herbert Hoover to Thomas E. Wilson, Union Stockyards, Chicago:

"Numerous complaints here indicate your branch houses doing wholesale business are not observing regulation forbidding dealers to sell at more than reasonable advance over cost of particular goods without regard to market or replacement value at time of sale. Subject should have your immediate attention as head of your business. Answer.

"HERBERT HOOVER."

MR. WILSON'S REPLY.

The reply, dated Chicago, November 20, was:

HERBERT C. HOOVER,

United States Food Administration, Washington:

Referring to your telegram, I have investigated matter fully and find our branch prices are controlled by instructions from Chicago. Think you are mistaken in statement that they are not observing regulations. If you can point to any specific case to the contrary, I would appreciate your doing so. It is our purpose in all cases to have instructions carried out.

THOMAS E. WILSON.

MEEKER ASKS APPOINTMENT.

A letter dated May 11, 1917, signed Swift & Co., per W. A. Johns, addressed to H. H. Swift, Chicago, is, in part, as follows:

"Mr. Williams advised us yesterday that the commission had received a very urgent letter from Mr. Meeker, impressing upon them the necessity for his appointment, and unless you favor Mr. Meeker's appointment it can only be prevented by your using every means in your power to keep your personality before Mr. Hoover."

MORRIS TO MEEKER.

Another letter, dated June 1, 1917, is from Morris & Co. to Arthur Meeker of Armour & Co.:

"Answering yours of even date, the only suggestion I have in reference to your letter to Mr. Hoover would be that I am a little doubtful of the advisability of the following paragraph contained therein:

"'A general plan of operating was quite fully discussed, and it was the unanimous opinion of all present that, given the proper authority, the committee could bring about lower prices to the consumer on meat products generally, with fair treatment to all concerned in the industry.'

"I would also call your attention to the fact that Mr. James B. Forgan is chairman of the board of the First National Bank. Have no further suggestions."

MEEKER WRITES TO HOOVER.

The letter to which it refers is one from Arthur Meeker to Mr. Hoover, in which he outlines a meeting of the executive officers from Armour & Co., Cudahy Packing Co., Morris & Co., Swift & Co., and Wilson & Co.

In this letter Mr. Meeker suggests a number of men as good material to make up a committee for the packing trades, including the butter, egg, poultry, and cheese industries. The list includes a representative from each of the five large packers and also from the Hammon-Standish Co., Detroit; Kingan & Co., Indianapolis; and Miller & Hart, of Chicago. Then follows a long list of representatives from the live-stock industry, from the butter, egg, poultry, and cheese interests, and additional names of men who are in outside trades, or in public life. In the latter list were: Julius Rosenwald, Edward N. Hurley, Harry A. Wheeler, James B. Forgan, and James Simpson, vice president Marshall Field & Co.

SWIFT MAN ON FOOD BOARD.

Mr. Heney introduced another set of letters relating to the Food Administration, particularly to Edward Chambers, a vice president of the Santa Fe Road, and F. S. Brooks, an employee of Swift & Co., who is now acting on the Food Administration for a dollar a year from the Government, but whose salary, Mr. Heney says, contiuues with Swift's.

This letter is dated Chicago, July 9, 1917, written by F. S. Brooks:

"Mr. W. B. TRAYNOR: Edward Chambers, vice president in charge of traffic, Santa Fe system, informed me confidentially Saturday afternoon that he had, through Mr. Ripley, been called to Washington to serve with Mr. Hoover as an associate in direct charge of the transportation end of the food conservation program.

"Mr. Chambers will undertake to bring about complete cooperation and harmony among the railroads of the United States in the execution of such plans affecting their interests as may be promulgated from time to time by Mr. Hoover and his advisers.

"Mr. Chambers said that in his new duties he thinks he will from time to time be brought in contact with our interests, and in that connection that we may depend upon him to the limit as our friend.

"Mr. Chambers in this capacity will be one of the most powerful railroad men in the United States, and it is peculiarly gratifying to say that he is probably the best friend I have among my friends."

BROOKS GETS JOB.

Next is a telegram dated Washington, D. C., August 15, 1917, addressed to Swift & Co.:

"I will appreciate very much your contributing the services of your Mr. F. S. Brooks to the United States Food Administration to assist Mr. Chambers in handling transportation matters. Mr. Brooks is very highly recommended, and this request is made for patriotic reasons. Would like him to report here Monday next.

"HERBERT HOOVER."

AS TO FRIENDS AT COURT.

A telegram from Thomas Creigh's cattlemen who went down to Washington to attend the meeting of the live stock committee with Hoover, under date of September 10, last, reads:

"Fisher and Burke, of the marketing committee, very much disliked by Hoover. [The Fisher is Walter L. Fisher, of Chicago.] They have no influence in Washington. E. C. Chambers, vice president Santa Fe, on Hoover's staff, will have the naming of the meat products men who will handle that end of the business. I believe Hoover will put a price on hog products, but not on beef or mutton. Chandler is very friendly to packers. The packers will have a real influence on the price to be put on meat products and I think it is wise for them to use a great deal of discretion in making this price, for two reasons: (1) To be fair to the producer; (2) to stimulate production.

"And I think the price should be as high as the consumer will stand.

"I think the marketing committee will be discontinued at the next meeting of the American National Live Stock Association, as most of the members are disgusted with their talk and actions. They are still in Washington."

$1-A-YEAR MAN REPORTS.

In a letter dated November 16 last to Mr. Traynor, of Swift & Co., Mr. Brooks wrote:

"As a matter of general information, Messrs. Pinchot and Lasater have retired from the Food Administration. Their activities were largely of a negative character, hence the remodeled plan of administering live stock jointly with the meat division, under Mr. Cotton."

Mr. Heney called attention to the fact of Mr. Brooks, a dollar-a-year man, reporting thus to his employers—Swift & Co.

FEARS EMBARRASSING LETTER.

The next document read by Mr. Heney was, in his words, "a statement which is marked at the bottom 'Original in the law department.'" It bears the heading "Washington, D. C., November 16, 1917," and is addressed to Swift & Co., and is signed by C. A. Hamilton:

"I learn that the letter which Lasater wrote to Hoover in response to the latter's request for a bill of specifications was a most severe roast upon the packing industry of the country. Mr. Lasater goes so far as to make accusations against one of Mr. Hoover's closest associates, and even says that this gentleman is directly connected with banks which handle packers' paper.

"The letter is a loud one, and its publication has been suppressed. * * * If, as is possible, a copy of the Lasater letter should get into the hands of some of the gentlemen in Congress who are always looking for ammunition with which to attack the packing industry it may lead to further congressional investigation and further embarrassment to business."

REFERS TO OMAHA ATTACK.

A note written to L. F. Swift by W. Leavitt on September 3, 1917, says:

"Advise you get a copy of resolution drawn up by Ed Burke, of Omaha, and which was presented to market committee at a meeting held at Walter L. Fisher's office in Chicago last week.

"It is rank, and against the packers. I expected to get a copy to send to you, but find it is unobtainable.

"Think same resolution will be presented in Washington this week at the Hoover meeting, represented by Chicago and outside cattlemen."

SWIFT TO MEEKER.

A letter written by Mr. Swift to Arthur Meeker on this same subject follows:

"I understand there was quite a meeting of the market committee at Fisher's office last week, where Burke presented a resolution very detrimental to the packers.

"I am trying to get a copy, but doubt my ability to do so. If you happen to know of any way to get one would be glad to have it, as I really do not know who was there."

Written in pencil on this same note was this:

"H. V. [Veeder] says does not think will be able obtain. Fisher gone to Washington. Leigh, of Cudahy, has friend on train en route Washington, who thinks will keep us posted."

The Mr. Burke referred to is a member of the market committee of the National Live Stock Association.

A later note to L. F. Swift from Henry Veeder indicates that a copy of the resolution referred to was obtained.

STOCKMEN VOTE LOYALTY.

The live-stock men's resolution, which Mr. Heney then read into the record, expressed the loyalty of the live-stock interests and their desire to do all possible to help on the food situation and to increase the herds, but it is asked that the Government "see that the large packing concerns do not by the present control of the central markets deprive the producer of a just profit, and that every agency of the Government should be employed to eliminate all manipulative and speculative efforts in the handling of live stock and its products."

CUDAHY COMMUNICATIONS.

Next Mr. Heney introduced some letters and telegrams relating to Hughes and Cudahy. Here is a part of a telegram from E. A. Cudahy to P. L. Hughes, at Washington (Hughes was representing Cudahy there):

"MAY 31, 1917.

"It looks like the Government will control food products, and Mr. Hoover has had several meetings with the Chicago packers. The five packers met on Tuesday to discuss ways and means of assisting the Government, but I was unable to get a general line on what was in the mind of Mr. Hoover that he expected the packers to do. If possible, I wish you would get from Mr. Hoover a general outline of how he expects the packers to handle their end of it."

On the same day, in a letter to Mr. Hughes, Mr. Cudahy said:

"If the packers are going to have representation on a general committee located at Washington, I would be very glad to offer my services to the Government in that capacity, except for the fact that Edward, as you know, is at Fort Sheridan for three months' training, and I would be very glad to see you represent the company in that capacity."

CUDAHY WANTS TO GET IN.

Next is part of a letter dated May 31, 1917, addressed to P. L. Hughes, Washington:

"As already advised you by wire, Armour and Swift and, I think, Wilson and Morris have had several interviews with Mr. Hoover in regard to the handling of the meat food products of the country in some way that will be satisfactory to Mr. Hoover and that will comply with and be controlled by the measures that are before the Senate now in regard to food control. * * * Of course, whatever plan the packers arrive at will have to be satisfactory to Mr. Hoover. * * * I wish you would establish in Mr. Hoover's mind that we are in the business and give him an outline of our volume, because the Government authorities think that Armour, Swift, and the other two are all there is in the packing business."

HUGHES MEETS HOOVER.

The next letter is dated July 5, 1917, from P. L. Hughes in Washington to E. A. Cudahy, Chicago.

"DEAR SIR: As per instructions, I arranged a meeting with Mr. Hoover at 11.30 Tuesday. * * * I suggested that no doubt a number of packers were visiting Mr. Hoover, and he said he did not remember seeing anyone there for some time except Mr. Meeker. They may be coming to Washington and talking over those matters with others, but I don't believe that there have been any conferences with Mr. Hoover regarding committees or organizations worked out with his approval. I think a good deal of this is worked out at Chicago and they are seeking Mr. Hoover's approval, which is going to be no easy matter to get until he can approach the subject with an open mind and after the Trade Commission has made an investigation and reported. Those are practically his words to me.

"He inquired about prices to the dealers, and I told him they were still pretty high—entirely warranted by the prices paid for live stock, and while the live-stock costs remained as they were, there was little prospect of lower prices, but that the grass cattle coming on later would have a tendency to reduce the price on beef and mutton, but that the demand abroad as well as the cost of live hogs was keeping up the price of pork, but as to how long that would continue one guess was as good as another.

"I felt I should be frank with him, as I felt quite sure he is well informed on this subject himself. * * *

HOOVER IS NONCOMMITTAL.

"I felt quite free to say that you would undertake to serve him on any commission that might be appointed for the purpose; but he was entirely noncommittal * * * so that I don't think it would be wise to press this question of personal representation for our company any further for some time.

"I feel morally certain he does not talk any other language to other packers' representatives than he has to me in the two interviews I have had with him, and this regardless of what they might say in Chicago when they get home. He took the same position last Tuesday that he did the first time I met him, namely, that we should get together and formulate plans for our own government, and see that the public is protected after a fair profit on our output is taken. * * *

"The fact is he likes to talk more about the billions of dollars that will be saved to this country by organizing the housewives of America and inducing them to be frugal and avoid waste, which will not only be a benefit to this generation, but for generations to come.

COMMENDS HOOVER'S STAND.

"He seems to be an earnest, straightforward man, and has certainly some original and practical ideas on the food question from the producer to the consumer, and I also think he will be conservative and use any powers given to him discreetly. * * *

"He was free with his conversation on all subjects except the one of commission appointments, and especially in our line.

"There is the largest lobby ever known in Washington, and I had an opportunity to talk with several I had met from other States, and they all seemed to be disappointed and sore and generally indulged in severe criticism on the bill for the control of food products of every description. The bill will have a hard time yet before it passes the Senate. There are a great many Senators opposed to it secretly, and they are endeavoring to kill it by amendments."

FOR MAXIMUM PRICES.

Another letter read at the hearing by Mr. Heney is dated Chicago, April 10, 1917, signed by Louis F. Swift. It was a statement given out to the newspapers. That was shortly after war was declared. It follows:

"Am very much in favor of the Government establishing maximum prices on all the principal items of food, and also the principal items and necessities of life, to the civilians as well as to the Government, if a practical way can be found.

"LOUIS F. SWIFT."

ON MAXIMUM PRICES.

Then, on April 19, 1917, two days later, a letter from Louis F. Swift and addressed to Harold H. Swift was:

"Reporting on the packers' trip to Washington our main object was to try to get Secretary Houston and other members of the Cabinet interested in maximum prices, to stop inflation and circulation, and also to offer our best services to the Government. While Secretary Houston promised to try to get a bill through Congress putting this power of price fixing up to the Council of National Defense—consisting of the following: N. D. Baker, Secretary of War; J. Daniels, Secretary of the Navy; D. F. Houston, Secretary of Agriculture; F. K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior; W. C. Redfield, Secretary of Commerce; W. B. Wilson, Secretary of Labor—letting them use their power whenever they found it necessary. He has stated pretty plainly that he was not in favor of maximums, and that he was not in favor of using the power unless he had to, but we all think that the club which Congress would give would be a big help.

"Secretary Houston seems to think that minimums are just as necessary, but I think he is absolutely in the wrong about this and that they will do more harm than good.

"LOUIS F. SWIFT.

"Copies to G. F. S., jr., and L. A. C." [That is, to George F. Swift, jr., and L. A. Carton, who is the treasurer of Swift & Co.]

DEFINING POLICY.

The next one is May 9, from Louis F. Swift to Charles H. Swift and G. F. Swift jr.:

"DEAR BROTHERS: If anyone should ask you about the policy of Swift & Co. and their views regarding food products, such as all grain, which might include ribs and lard—in fact, anything that is sold on recognized boards of trade or exchanges throughout the country—please be free, if practicable, to state most unreservedly that we regret to see them so high and would be glad to have the maximum prices established, eliminating speculators if possible. Neither would I have any objections to minimum prices as well.

"In regard to maximum prices on hogs and cattle, would have no objections, if practicable.

"Yours, truly,

"LOUIS F. SWIFT."

EMPHASIZES PRICE APPROVAL.

Then a letter from Louis F. Swift to Harold H. Swift, dated Chicago, December 10, 1917:

"Please notify Mr. Charles H. Swift by letter, care of the beef house, Washington, or by wire that the policy of the firm has been fully decided to say that we are in favor of maximum prices on grain and lard, short ribs and mess pork, cotton and wool—in fact, anything that has the board of trade valuation or a classified valuation.

"We also have no objection to minimum prices. The reason we have decided this way is that the packers in Washington have gone on record this way. We also had a meeting here at Chicago, going on record in the same way, and there are several committees at work on the same lines; and it is the only patriotic and proper thing to say. If we would say we are not in favor of it, it looks as if we were knocking the efforts of the people to live economically.

"As to what effect this would have on live cattle is problematical, but we believe that if the product did not advance the cattle would not. This also applies to mutton, beef, dressed and alive, the same way if they put a maximum on the short ribs, mess pork, and lard, without a maximum on the live hogs. We think the sympathetic effect would be satisfactory, if they are willing to take our changes yesterday; however, if they want to say that we should not pay any more for live hogs than we did this week recommend that we conform to that. I do not say that these things are practicable. I think there will be opposition enough from the farmers' society to prevent anything special happening, but I think the only thing to say is that we are in favor of maximum prices. Think it is better to send no letter to Mr. Hoover at the present time.

"LOUIS F. SWIFT."

ADMITS "GALLERY PLAY."

This letter follows it the same day, May 10, 1917:

Mr. CHARLES H. SWIFT,
Swift & Co., Washington, D. C.

DEAR BROTHER: Referring to my telegram of this morning and to the attached copy of letter, some of this is gallery play when we say we are in favor of maximum prices. But I repeat that it is the only proper thing to do, and I believe that it is possible to follow it out if the Government wants to. I am well satisfied that they do not want to and are not going to. At the same time, it does not make any difference—I mean our public announcement.

Yours, truly, LOUIS F. SWIFT.

CITES BRITISH METHODS.

Letter from A. D. White, who is publicity man for Swift & Co.:

CHICAGO, May 1, 1917.

(Addressed to Mr. L. F. Swift.)

Replying to inquiry made yesterday by John Brisbane Walker as to something authentic in regard to food prices control by the British Government, Messrs. Alden B. Swift and R. Mair state that London dealers were given to understand that if they did not fix some maximum price the Government would, and they got together and fixed their prices and are working in conjunction with the Government in the matter, but there has been no legislation so far that covers this situation. Mr. Mair is endeavoring to locate a copy of the minutes of one of those meetings, which Mr. Walker may have and which you want to send him.

A. D. W.,
Advertising Department.

The next one is from the same party—Arthur D. White—dated Chicago, May 2, 1917, addressed to Louis F. Swift:

"Referring further to mine of the 1st regarding some specific material to be sent to Mr. John Brisbane Walker, at his Denver address, showing British Government control of food prices, I have talked this matter over with Messrs. Alden B. Swift and R. Mair and Harry McLerre. I think it would be better to tell Mr. Walker that the Home and Foreign Produce Exchange (Ltd.), of Hibernia Chambers, voluntarily agreed on prices at which various products handled by members of the exchange should be sold, and agreed to restrict resales among the various similar channels of trade. For instance, wholesalers would not resell provisions between themselves at a profit, but would sell to retailers and retailers to consumers."

HENEY OFFERS COMMENT.

Mr. Heney broke off reading at this point to make the following comment:

"I am going to show the commissioner later that that rule has been very grossly violated during this war by some of our big packers by selling even to their own departments and reselling—the department being handled under a different name than the name under which the big packer does business generally—contrary to the rules issued by the Food Administration."

Then he resumed reading from Mr. White's letter, which concludes as follows:

"We feel that this whole subject of Government control of food prices is rather a questionable subject for us to have much to say about, because of the effect it may have upon the live-stock producers; and, on the other hand, the more this is agitated the more the politicians will see an opportunity for price control, and possibly a personal profit to whoever does the controlling. I think Mr. Walker can be satisfied with a statement such as I have suggested without having to send him any documents in support of it. If you approve of this policy of handling the matter, I will outline such a letter as I suggest for sending to him.

"ARTHUR D. WHITE."

TELLS OF MEETING HOOVER.

The following letter, headed "Swift & Co., president's office," was dated May 7, 1917. It was written in lead pencil, and Mr. Heney announced that it was an exact copy of the original from the files:

"Swift & Co. (Inc.). Central office, 3234 Tenth Avenue, New York. L. F. S.: H. H. S.

"Mr. Hoover arrived this morning, and I would probably have had an appointment for a short interview with him this afternoon, but fortunately myself, George J. Edwards, and W. A. Johns ran into his party at the Bankers' Club after luncheon and met him and learned the following:

"Up to date he has not been officially appointed to any Government position, and therefore had not planned for an advisory board or anything of the kind. In this connection, I left L. F. S.'s letter with him. He has, however, been asked by the President, or our Government, for his views and recommendations regarding the restriction of food consumption and maintenance of reasonable prices; or, in other words, the restriction of excess prices of food products in this country; and at the same time increased production of food products, and this is what he wants to work out to a conclusion and to a point to where he can give his recommendations, and, I take it, possibly to put them into effect if he is requested to do so, although he says he is not seeking such a position.

"PRICE FIXING NOT A SUCCESS.

"He says the establishment of the maximum prices has not been a complete success in any country up to date, principally for the reason that while they establish prices for the time being, it does not necessarily prevent the producer holding back or hoarding in anticipation of higher prices later, and it does not bring increased production.

"He is particularly concerned with and dealing with cereals and pork products, and would like us to give the subject our serious thought and see if we can offer any suggestions for a solution of the problem, such as fixed prices for a certain period, say, 12, 18, or 24 months, of grain, hogs, and provisions, the latter to give a reasonable profit to the packers; and he seemed to think it might be possible for the packers of experience to name a fixed price for these commodities that would be low enough to be fairly reasonable but high enough to encourage increased production and give a fairly satisfactory profit to all concerned, if they were reasonable and reasonably patriotic. He has fixed prices decidedly in mind as compared to a range in prices.

PROMISES PATRIOTISM.

"I told him I thought he would find the people pretty patriotic and that he would find considerable patriotism among the packers, and that, as far as we were concerned, we wanted to be of any assistance we could in working out the problem, and that he would find us satisfied with any reasonable adjustment of the subject and a reasonable profit, and that seemed to please him, although, while he is approachable and seems to desire cooperation, he is not at all flowery or democratic. We told him that inasmuch as the agitation for increased production of potatoes, beans, etc., and cereals was having a good deal of effect the same kind of agitation for increased production in hogs might bring corresponding results."

EXPECTED GOVERNMENT CONTROL.

The next letter read was from G. F. Swift, addressed to Messrs. L. F. Swift, L. A. Carton, and Charles H. Swift, a separate letter to each, dated Chicago, December 10, 1917. At the top was written "Strictly private." It follows:

"I think the possibilities are quite great that after the Food Administration discontinues at the termination of the war (their authority going no further) the regulating of the packers' profits it is quite likely to be picked up by the Federal Trade Commission or Congress as a permanent thing along the lines of a public utility. Of course, there is a possibility of their picking it up before the end of the war, with the idea of continuing it permanently, but I hope not.

"If there is a break between the end of the war at the time the Food Administration lets go of it and the time that some other body might pick it up, it seems to me especially important that in this period of the break it would be proper to increase our capital stock on the basis of that appraised value, and as it no doubt takes a long time—maybe a year or so—to get an appraisal of our property, I think we should start right away, so we may have it in hand. I therefore am strongly recommending that we go ahead and have our properties appraised by an appraisal concern with a good reputation. Are you agreeable to going ahead to this extent? Please reply.

"G. F. SWIFT, Jr."

INCREASE OF CAPITALIZATION.

The next letter is December 12, 1917. It is also marked "strictly private" and addressed to G. F. Swift, jr.:

"DEAR SIR: Replying to your letter of December 10, don't think that I would object to an appraisal of Swift & Co.'s properties being made. However, I think this is a matter that should have the approval of and the plan of making this appraisal agreed on by all the Chicago directors, if possible. Think a present date appraisal of values might be useful in many ways. I have no doubt an appraisal of Swift & Co.'s property in the United States and abroad would make the book value of the stock considerably over $200 a share."

Mr. Heney here broke in with a comment:

"I think you will recall, Mr. Commissioner, that the $75,000,000 of stock was increased last year to $100,000,000."

He then continued reading:

"I believe the following situation might be developed at the expiration of the war, i. e., that some United States private bankers or capitalists, or possibly the United States and English bankers or capitalists, or possibly bankers or capitalists from additional countries, might be brought into the proposition, first, by forming a syndicate to buy Swift & Co.'s stock on the open market, paying, say, up to $150 a share for it, and buying the bonds at par. Directors of Swift & Co., with the cooperation of this syndicate, formulating a plan and organizing two new corporations to buy outright the assets of Swift & Co. and liquidating the present Swift & Co., the two companies purchasing the assets of Swift & Co. to be organized and operated with a view of handling:

"First, the packing interest in the United States; second, a holding company to hold the stock and own the business done in foreign countries and to own the business now done by Swift & Co. in the United States that is not a part of the meat-packing business, as the tanning of hides, and soap, glue, butterine, fruit canning, etc. Possibly it might require three corporations to handle the whole thing instead of two.

"Yours, truly, EDWARD F. SWIFT."

MEETING WITH COTTON.

The next letter was dated Chicago, October 7, 1917. It was from Charles H. Swift to Mr. J. N. Chaplin, one of the head men of Swift & Co. It follows:

"My yard car will be at the general office at 8.30 Thursday morning; I would like you to go with it to the Chicago Club, calling for Mr. Joseph Cotton, of Cravath law office, of New York, who has been appointed by Mr. Hoover to represent him on packing-house business and live-stock interests, bringing him to the directors' room on the fourth floor for a meeting, letting L. F. Swift, E. F. Swift, G. F. Swift, jr., and myself know when you arrive and we will come immediately into a meeting.

"You have a copy of G. F. Swift's and my report on Tuesday's meeting with Mr. Cotton, and I think he will be glad to be talking with you on the way out.

"CHARLES H. SWIFT."

ON INSIDE TRACK.

The next thing read was a telegram dated New York and sent over the New York private wire of Wilson & Co. It was addressed, "V. D. S. Personal."

"V. D. S." Heney explained, is V. D. Skipworth, who is vice president of Wilson & Co., and this is from T. E. W., who is Thomas E. Wilson." The telegram says:

"Mr. Joseph Cotton, prominent New York attorney, has been selected by Mr. Hoover to handle packing-house and live-stock matters.

"He formerly was in Mr. Cravath's office, and I had luncheon with him to-day. Treat this confidential.

"T. E. W."

"GET MORE OUT OF COTTON."

Letter dated November 23, 1917, addressed to Messrs. Louis F. Swift, Edward F. Swift, and Charles H. Swift, signed by G. H. Swift:

"I have been thinking a great deal about the proposed packers' arrangement with Mr. Cotton, and it seems to me that the packers have been a good deal swept off their feet with his sudden change in the basis of figuring, with his rush to put the matter through to a conclusion, and after thinking the matter over, I believe we can get more out of Mr. Cotton than we have."

CONFERENCE WITH WHEELER.

A letter from Charles H. Swift on October 2, 1917, addressed to Louis F., E. F., and G. F. Swift, jr., reports a meeting in Harry A. Wheeler's office attended by Mr. Wheeler, E. Dana Durand, and a representative of each of the Chicago packers. This letter says in part:

"Mr. Wheeler opened the meeting by saying that after consideration Mr. Hoover thought the proposed basis of limiting profits to 3 per cent would not work out satisfactorily. * * * Mr. Hoover wanted Mr. Durand to make a brief study of the situation, cost of product, etc., to see if they could arrive at a better plan. All expressed themselves agreeable to the plan.

"Mr. Durand explained probably one day at each of the packing houses represented at the meeting and one day at from five to eight of the smaller packing houses would be sufficient, and it was arranged accordingly that he should start this morning at Swift's office, which was his preference.

"And Mr. Wilson as chairman of the committee agreed to write each of them (the smaller plants) explaining the situation and getting them committed.

"Mr. Traynor has some notes, including a list of the food products which Mr. Hoover is trying to regulate, and will no doubt also write a report."

HENEY ON DURAND.

On Mr. Durand, Mr. Heney here remarked:

"You recall, Mr. Commissioner, I put in evidence some correspondence showing that Mr. E. Dana Durand was employed a short time before this by the big packers; he refused to accept compensation, but did accept the service of going to Washington to endeavor to induce the Agricultural Committee to undertake certain work of publishing certain data to be furnished by the packers, which the papers put in evidence from the files of the big packers showed was a part of the plan they had to defeat and prevent the passage of the Borland resolution and prevent an investigation by the Federal Trade Commission.

"And subsequently Mr. Durand accepted employment to edit certain articles to be published by one or more of the packers setting forth the economic defense of the packing industry as it is conducted, for which he was paid the sum of $300."

PROUD OF ACCOMPLISHMENT.

The next batch of letters read by Mr. Heney related to miscellaneous matters.

A telegram from F. J. Hagenbarth to Louis F. Swift, sent from New York on August 19, 1917, says:

"Hoover and Houston release public statement on Wednesday advising lambs and baby beef as most economic forms of meat production. Am proud of this accomplishment, as case at first seemed hopeless. This information confidential."

Mr. Hagenbarth is the president of the Wool Growers' Association.

On July 31, 1917, Armour & Co. wrote Everett C. Brown, president Live Stock Exchange, Chicago:

"DEAR SIR: General agitation against waste suggests the advisability of eliminating excessive feeding of hogs in the yards. Your exchange has already given this consideration, we believe. Along these lines, and as a conservation proposition, it is our belief that a rule should be established that after hogs have been sold no further feeding should be done but should be sent to the scales as soon as practical after sales have been consummated. Your consideration will be appreciated.

"ARMOUR & CO."

Beneath this letter was a memorandum that copies should be sent to the various Swifts and to other packing chiefs.

"Evidently after the hogs were purchased," Mr. Heney commented, "the delays occurred in getting them to the scales, and instead of stopping them from feeding the owners were letting them continue to fill up so they would weigh more when they got to the scales."

Mr. Heney read a letter addressed to Thomas E. Wilson, of Messrs. Wilson & Co., Chicago:

"MY DEAR MR. WILSON: Will you kindly have some one indicate to me the character and standing of Mr. A. W. Green, of 747 Postal Telegraph Building, Chicago? He writes to me in a 16-page letter concerning criminal practices of packers and the absolute necessity of our nationalizing the transportation lines of the packing companies, including also the stockyards and packing centers.

"I am interested to know who this man is. If you will turn this letter over to the proper person I shall be glad.

"I am drafted by Mr. Hoover in undertaking to standardize all of the churches of the country in connection with the propaganda that you helped me inaugurate in the First Presbyterian Church. It is a big job and opening well.

"Yours, sincerely,

WM. C. COVERT."

ASKS TO HAVE LETTER DESTROYED.

In his reply to the Rev. Dr. Covert Mr. Wilson said:

"I have yours of July 26 inquiring about A. W. Green. I happen to know of this gentleman. He is a man well along in years, and, while he seems to think that he has some grievance against Mr. Armour in connection with some grain deal of many years ago, I am of the opinion that he has become a crank on such subjects on which he has been communicating with you. He is given to much letter writing, and I am sure if encouraged will make it necessary for you to take on an extra secretary to handle his correspondence.

"I would appreciate it if you would destroy this letter, as I do not want to be brought into any argument with this gentleman, and I am writing this confidentially, as I want to save you a lot of useless work.

"Yours, very truly,

"T. E. WILSON."

HENEY COMMENTS ON GREEN.

"I have had quite a number of communications," said Mr. Heney, "from Mr. A. W. Green, and I consider them about as clear an exposition of the situation in regard to the control of the big packers as I have seen anywhere in writing."

VEEDER IS "MORE THAN A LAWYER."

During the reading of the packers' letters, Attorney Heney called attention to the fact that copies of the various packers' letters were ordered sent to "H. V."—Henry Veeder.

"They do not relate," Mr. Heney said, "to questions of law, and they do not require the advice of an attorney, and I am merely emphasizing the fact that the Veeder vault contains a great many papers on all kinds of subjects that haven't anything whatever to do with the business of an attorney as such.

"That was the theory upon which the search warrant was issued to seize some papers there; but there was a good deal of argument made before the court by the attorneys for Veeder to the effect that he was a lawyer—an attorney's office.

"As a matter of fact, Swift & Co.'s down-town office is adjoining Veeder's, and they both open into the same library; the doors open against the same library room in which this vault is located, and there is a directors' room that opens directly out of this library, in which directors' meetings are held. The National Packing Co. has its office there and records there. The National Packing Co. is still in existence."

Commissioner DAVIES. The old National Packing Co.?

Mr. HENEY. The old National Packing Co., that was organized in 1903, and distributed its property in 1912, after the trial of the packers here.

"NOT LOOKING FOR ORNAMENT," MEANING MEEKER.

An interesting letter from W. F. Burrows, head of Libby, McNeill & Libby, to Louis F. Swift was read yesterday by Attorney Heney before Commissioner Davies at the packing-house hearing. Mr. Burrows is a subordinate of Mr. Swift. His letter, written on May 7, 1917, indicates no great prejudice in his mind in favor of his neighbor, Arthur Meeker, of Armour & Co. The letter says:

"Mr. L. F. Swift, U. S. Yards, Chicago: I understand Mr. Herbert C. Hoover, who is to be Food Controller, has reached New York and will be in Washington this week, where his activities will be more or less in connection with the National Council of Defense.

"I also understand that Mr. Arthur Meeker is 'moving heaven and earth' to be First Assistant Food Controller under Mr. Hoover.

"From what I learned in Washington, I believe this committee is not looking so much for ornamentation, such as Mr. Meeker would give it, as they are for men who can render, in a quiet way, real service.

"I understand that McDowell, in the fertilizer department of Armour & Co., has been appointed on the national fertilizer advisory board, and that other Armour men are being offered for this kind of semi-public service."

"DO GOOD" IN A PUBLICITY WAY.

Some letters regarding "publicity" for Wilson & Co. were read by Mr. Heney. One sent to Wilbur D. Nesbit, of the Rankin Advertising Agency, to V. D. Skipworth, vice president of Wilson & Co., dated June 2, 1917, says:

"DEAR MR. SKIPWORTH: You may be interested in the inclosed copy of a letter just to hand from Mr. Thomas R. Shipp."

The letter referred to is this:

MAY 29, 1917.

Mr. WILBUR D. NESBIT,
10½ South Michigan Avenue, Chicago.

DEAR WILBUR: I tried to be as nice as I could to your friend Skipworth. He is a prince. Not for a long time have I encountered a man coming into Washington at this time who seemed to have such a thorough appreciation of the situation.

He had a good talk with Hoover, whom I had him meet, and we put a story into the Chicago Examiner and Chicago Herald, and had a promise from the International News that they would carry something along the same line, although I do not know whether they did or not. The Tribune man sent a story to his paper, but it was killed at that end of the line. Maybe you know why.

T. S.

This evoked from Mr. Skipworth a note to Mr. Nesbit, as follows:

"DEAR MR. NESBIT: I acknowledge receipt of your letter of June 2 inclosing copy of letter from Mr. Shipp. Mr. Shipp's kind expressions in regard to me are highly gratifying, I assure you.

"I told Mr. Wilson that Mr. Shipp was certainly a live wire and was in position to do us a great deal of good in a publicity way, which we may to some extent take advantage of in the future."

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I do not mean to classify this agricultural advisory committee along with the gentlemen I have last named. Indeed, I do not mean to impeach those men. They are men of undoubted character, and, as I am informed, did not adopt the resolution which the morning paper imputes to them; but that has been heralded forth, a sort of camouflage, to deceive the farmers of this country and to mislead the people of this country. I have, therefore, taken occasion to put into the RECORD testimony from actual farmers, upon whom the Republic must rely in this hour of supreme peril.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. GORE. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Do I understand the Senator to say that he has information that a report such as he has outlined from this committee has been sent to all the newspapers of the country to be printed to-morrow?

Mr. GORE. I called up this morning one of the departments which took part in the appointment of this committee, and I was told that the resolutions, presumably those mentioned in this morning's paper as having been adopted, had been placed in the hands of the press and released for to-morrow morning. Of course, I can not speak advisedly or with certainty as to the character of the resolutions. As yet I have not seen them.

Mr. NORRIS. How is that sent out? Is there a bureau of information in the department that does that work?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I must protest my ignorance. However it comes, it seems to be a universal sort of publicity, heralded everywhere, and I imagine that even the contradiction will not receive attention.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator is aware, is he not, that there is such a bureau?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir. It is currently reported and commonly believed that there is a full-grown, if not very effective, publicity bureau.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not speaking of Mr. Creel's bureau. I mean a different bureau—in the Food Administration.

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator mean that this information is sent out to all the newspapers of the country through the instrumentality of that bureau of information?

Mr. GORE. No, sir; I did not mean that. I do not know the particular agency through which the public is to be taken into the confidence of these gentlemen. The party who advised me did not go into details. I have repeated the statement as it was made to me.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me ask the Senator whether that is not one of the provinces or prerogatives of that bureau of information?

Mr. GORE. Oh, I assume so; I assume so. I take it that is what they are paid for.

Mr. NORRIS. I was going to ask the Senator about the pay. Can the Senator give us any idea how much money it costs to keep up that bureau, and if they are using it for this purpose?

Mr. GORE. The latest statement I saw was that they had expended, I believe, $1,300,000. They have been in existence, I believe, seven or nine months. At any rate, I figured it out, and it amounted to about $5,000 a day.

Mr. NORRIS. Which one of the bureaus of information does the Senator have reference to?

Mr. GORE. I refer to the Creel bureau.

Mr. NORRIS. I was not asking about that bureau, but the one that handled this particular information.

Mr. GORE. So far as the Hoover publicity bureau is concerned, I imagine that it is voluntary and gratuitous. There is not money enough on the globe to pay for the publicity accorded to that institution. [Laughter.]

Mr. NORRIS. No; I am not asking the Senator whether the newspapers are paid to publish it; but the newspapers have to get this information. I wanted to get what the fact was as to how they got it, and through what instrumentality, and whether that was one of the bureaus that we pay for out of the public funds, and whether this information that they are sending out was like the information that went out from the airplane bureau the other day, and which was shown to be a very great stretching of the truth.

Mr. GORE. The statement was that for the present the resolutions were confidential, but that they have been given the press and released for publication to-morrow morning. I ought to say, by way of apology to the Senate, that my reason for inflicting these remarks on them is in order that if such resolutions have been adopted and should be published they may be accompanied, if they are accompanied, by these challenges and contradictions. Perhaps if I could have obtained all the facts this trespass and apology alike would have been unnecessary. I have no sesame by which I can secure their publication in the public press of the country.

Only one other observation, Mr. President.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, has no appropriation been made to carry the views of Congress to all the press, when their views are attacked elsewhere?

Mr. GORE. No, sir; I think not.

Mr. OVERMAN. They have to rely on the gentlemen up there in the press gallery.

Mr. GORE. There seem to be certain thumbs somewhere that are turned up or down that are quite efficacious.

Now, Mr. President, there is only one other word or two that I wish to say. The article from which I had the passage read contains a threat—I speak advisedly—that if Congress passes the bill raising the price of wheat to $2.50 Mr. Hoover will proceed to commandeer all the wheat in the United States—he has the power to do that—excepting seed wheat held by the farmers. He ought to do that if it becomes necessary to maintain the armies of ourselves or of our allies.

I do not see why such a threat should be made. I do not see why such a threat should be coupled with the prospective action of Congress. I do not see why its execution should be made contingent upon the action of Congress within its appointed and constitutional sphere. The Senate, animated by a sense of public duty and a patriotic desire to stimulate production, adopted an amendment raising the price of wheat to $2.50 per bushel. The Senate was actuated by patriotic motives and a spirit of public service. The other branch of Congress has the constitutional right to concur in and adopt this amendment. If it should concur in the amendment it would do so from the conviction that its adoption would encourage production and contribute to our efficiency in the war. But, sir, if Congress does not behave to suit the Food Administration it is to be rebuked and chastened by the Food Administrator. If the Congress assumes to discharge its constitutional function and its patriotic duty it is to call down upon its offending head the sword of retributive justice in the hands of the Food Administrator. If the Congress acts upon its own responsibility and acts contrary to the views of Mr. Hoover, he is to convert himself into an avenging deity. He is to wreak his wrath not upon the Congress alone but upon the unoffending farmers of the country. He does not threaten to commandeer wheat because it is being willfully hoarded. That would be a sufficient reason. He does not threaten to commandeer wheat because the necessity is impending and is imperious. That would be a sufficient justification. He threatens to commandeer all the wheat in the country if the Congress should slip its leash, should defy the lash, and should decide upon its own responsibility to do justice to the American farmer and, as time will reveal, an act of preeminent service to the American people and to their allies. I must be permitted to say that this threat, if true, is a brazen affront and an unprovoked insult to the Congress of a great and of a free people.

I called up Mr. Hoover to see what the facts were. I called up the Washington Post and asked to be connected with their city news service, in order to ascertain, if I could, the foundation for this statement in the morning paper. I was unable to get in touch with them. I could not obtain the light. I am, therefore, of necessity in the dark. Perhaps I ought to say that the article also suggests that the American people will be urged to reduce their consumption of wheat 50 per cent from the already low and established level. I do not complain of that. I think the American people ought to reduce their consumption of wheat to a point that will guarantee the efficiency of our own armies and the efficiency of the armies of our allies. The sacrifice, however great, will be cheerfully made and submitted to by the American people. But it strikes one as just a little amazing that we should be advised to reduce the consumption of wheat 50 per cent from the present low margin of consumption, that we should have wheatless days, and at the same time we should have a price fixed upon wheat which is less in many instances than the cost of production; that in order to stimulate the production of an article of which there is a dearth, an indispensable article of which the supply is now too limited, we should fix a price upon the product which will discourage those who are engaged in its production.

Mr. President, in 1770, in Calcutta, the Government established a price on grain that was too low. The people lived riotously every day. They consumed the available supply—the inevitable result of fixing too low a price on any article of primary consumption. When the supplies were exhausted, famine—gaunt and grisly famine—stalked abroad, the direct and legitimate offspring of governmental folly. That we should duplicate that experience and the multiplied experiences which have occurred in all the tides of time is at once astounding and incredible. No one can with justice complain of wheatless days if wheatless days be necessary. No one can complain of reduced consumption if reduced consumption be necessary. We yield with obedience to the dictates of necessity and of patriotism. But what excuse can be urged if the infatuation which would in disregard of our imperious needs and in defiance of universal human experience reduce the price of wheat below the cost of production, which would reduce the price of wheat to such a point as would discourage rather than encourage the production of this article of primary and preeminent necessity? Shall such dangerous folly be unleashed and allowed to run rampant over this country without let or hindrance? Perhaps I could not say with propriety that Jesse Holmes seems to be off on a furlough.

The farmers will make any sacrifice, they will bear any burden necessary to the winning of this war and for the vindication of the Nation's honor. They only ask that whatever burdens and sacrifices are imposed upon them shall be fairly apportioned among the other classes of their fellow citizens. If this be done, the farmers will be the last to complain.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary again stated the resolution, which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

THIRD LIBERTY LOAN.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I desire to read a two-line telegram from real farmers. It has reference to the subscription to the third liberty loan. It is from Trion, Ga., a little town in Chattooga County. Chattooga is one of the largest agricultural counties in the State. There is not a town in it that passes beyond rural classification. They were notified of the number of bonds for which the county is expected to subscribe, and they met this morning in Trion to consider raising the subscription, and they have telegraphed me the result. I am so proud of it that I want to read this two-line telegram:

TRION, GA.

Senator HOKE SMITH,
Washington, D. C.:

Chattooga County quota third liberty loan oversubscribed to-day. Trion district subscribed double her quota.

N. K. BITTING,
County Chairman.
W. I. BENNETT,
District Chairman.

STATEMENT BY THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I just want a moment of the time of the Senate to refer again to the article in the Kansas City Star, or in the Washington Post, written by Col. Roosevelt.

I find that on April 2 the Associated Press sent to all of the papers of this country using that service the following telegram:

The Poindexter amendment would make it unlawful "for any person or persons, in the presence or hearing of others, to utter any disloyal, threatening, profane, violent, scurrilous, contemptuous, slurring, abusive, or seditious language about the Government of the United States; or the Constitution of the United States; or the President of the United States; or the Army or Navy or soldiers or sailors of the United States; or the flag of the United States; or the uniform of the Army or Navy of the United States; or the good and welfare of the United States; or any other language calculated to bring the United States or the United States Government, or the President of the United States, or the Constitution of the United States, or the Army or Navy or soldiers or sailors of the United States, or the flag of the United States, or the good and welfare of the United States into contempt, scorn, contumely, or disrepute; or any language calculated to incite or inflame resistance to any duly constituted Federal or State authority in connection with the prosecution of war; or to threaten the good or welfare of the United States or the United States Government; or to advise, urge, or incite any curtailment of production in this country of anything or things, product or products, necessary or essential to the prosecution of the war in which the United States may be engaged, with intent by such curtailment to cripple or hinder the United States in the prosecution of such war."

Mr. President, that is the exact language that was used by Col. Roosevelt; and that language was sent, as I say, by the Associated Press and given to them by a clerk of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. HARDWICK. I did not hear the beginning of that. Was that dated April 2, and was that described as the Poindexter amendment?

Mr. SMOOT. It was.

Mr. HARDWICK. That was the same thing that I referred to. I read the same thing.

Mr. SMOOT. Now, Mr. President, to show how universally that was accepted by the papers of the United States, I refer the Senate to the New York Times of April 3, 1918.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question before he takes that up?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Do I understand the Senator to say that it was given to the Associated Press by a member of the Judiciary Committee?

Mr. SMOOT. Not a member of the Judiciary Committee; as I understand, it was given by a clerk of the committee.

Now, Mr. President, let me call attention to the fact that, based upon that telegram, the New York Times of April 3 published an editorial in which they commented upon the report as sent by the Associated Press, and in which the identical words found in that report are used. Mr. President, four days have elapsed since it was sent out. No Senator upon the floor of the Senate has found objections to the report until this morning, when they found in the press that same language used by Col. Roosevelt and commented upon. I am not going to take the time of the Senate to read it, but I ask that this editorial in the New York Times of April 3, 1918, headed "Punishment for the Disloyal," be printed in the RECORD, so that the RECORD will show just what the country understood the bill contained.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

PUNISHMENT FOR THE DISLOYAL.

Tardily, but with serious minds, the national lawmakers are repairing the astonishing defects in the Federal statutes relating to seditious and disloyal utterances. Treason, as was shown by the result of the trial of the editors of a German-language newspaper published in Philadelphia, can be established only when an "overt act" has been committed. For that crime the punishment of death may be inflicted. Disloyalty manifested in speech is equally offensive and scarcely less dangerous, but the penalties imposed by existing law are grotesquely inadequate.

The bill unanimously reported by the Senate Judiciary Committee yesterday, after it had adopted Senator POINDEXTER'S amendment, prescribes penalties severe enough to be really deterrent. Under its provisions whoever in the presence or hearing of others utters disloyal, threatening, violent, abusive, or seditious language about the Government, the Constitution, the President, the flag, or the uniform of the Army and Navy of the United States, or any words calculated to bring the Government or its institutions into contempt or disrepute, or calculated to incite resistance to Federal authority or to hamper the efforts of the Government in the prosecution of the war may be punished by imprisonment of 20 years and a fine of $10,000. The POINDEXTER amendment further provides that "whoever shall by word or act support or favor the cause of the German Empire or its allies in the present war or by word or act oppose the cause of the United States therein" shall be subject to the same penalties.

These are punishments proportionate to the magnitude of the crime. Although it is becoming more prudent, less open, disloyalty is still rife, and manifestations of joy over recent German successes, toasts to the Kaiser, to Hindenburg, and expressions of the hope that the German arms may yet triumph are reported almost daily. These offenders are not our pacifists, they are now becoming quiet, doubtless because of the moral conviction that when so flagrantly criminal and abominable a disturber of the peace as the German Empire has defied the force of civilization, discussion of peace and theories of peace must be deferred until he is overthrown and chained for a thousand years. The toasts to the Kaiser of which we hear nowadays are offered in the German language, and in places of German resort by Germans, actually alien enemies or other Germans whom birth or naturalization has not yet made American. These offenses are going to be made too dangerous to be persisted in. While we are at war with Germany utterances in support of the enemy or expressions of the hope that he may triumph can not be tolerated. The bill reported by the Senate committee, we hope, will be speedily enacted and its provisions rigorously enforced. It may be expected further that, putting aside all soft squeamishness about inflicting the death penalty, Congress will duly provide that criminal acts designed to impede our preparations for war, acts which destroy property and endanger human life, like the blowing up of munition factories or warehouses or attempts to destroy ships, shall be punished by death.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I do not want to say anything more about this matter; but my language in regard to Col. Roosevelt applies to the Associated Press and any paper which has published under quotation marks that this is in the bill. I do not believe the Associated Press ever put any quotation marks around language not in the bill, and I know the clerk of the Judiciary Committee could not have given the Associated Press such language, because there is no such language.

Mr. SMOOT. Do I understand the Senator to say that as I read it the words were not in quotation marks?

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not say that; but anyway it says here——

Mr. SMOOT. Here are the quotation marks.

Mr. OVERMAN. If he puts that in quotation marks implying that this bill is that way, we ought to have an apology from him.

I wish the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] was here, because it recites the Poindexter amendment when there is no such thing, and the clerk of the Judiciary Committee says it was not possible for him to have given it.

Mr. MYERS. I wish to say——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3771) authorizing the President to coordinate or consolidate executive bureaus, agencies, and offices, and for other purposes, in the interest of economy and the more efficient concentration of the Government.

Mr. OVERMAN. I say that newspaper or person who says that such language is in the pending bill, who makes that statement and sends by the Associated Press stuff like that, sends out a false statement. What right has the Associated Press man to copy and put in quotation marks language as occurring in the bill that does not occur in the bill? I would trust the clerk to give him a statement, but to put quotation marks around it himself I do not believe it. Therefore I do not think there are any quotation marks around the words, because I can not see how an honorable newspaper reporter could send out a statement of something occurring in a bill under quotation marks that does not occur there.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. SMOOT. I have the floor.

Mr. MYERS. Just for one remark.

Mr. SMOOT. I will not take more than a minute or two. I want to say to the Senator that the language used by the Associated Press is the exact language in the bill as reported to the Senate with a single exception as to the President of the United States.

Mr. OVERMAN. Of course, and that is the meat in the coconut. Did the press agent here at the Senate put into the language of that Associated Press dispatch under quotations that sentence and add to it when it is not true? Did Mr. Roosevelt do it upon his own authority or did he do it upon the Associated Press dispatch? I think he has the courage to come out and say he was misinformed.

Mr. SMOOT. Col. Roosevelt took the Associated Press report just the same as millions of people of the United States have taken it, and they were justified in doing so and I do not think they are to be condemned for so doing.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am not condemning anybody. I am saying this is not true. The New York Times did not put that quotation mark in, I am glad to say.

Mr. SMOOT. The New York Times uses the language used in the Associated Press dispatch. Of course, they do not put it in quotation marks, but they use it based no doubt upon the Associated Press dispatch.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have no doubt that is true. I can not see how the Associated Press man whoever he is would put in language in the bill that is not in it. The clerk would not give it to him and put it in quotation marks. That is an impossibility. I can not understand why he would insert those words in the amendment to mislead Mr. Roosevelt.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President——

Mr. OVERMAN. The clerk is as good a man as there is in Washington and he never gave out such a statement. Here he is; he comes to me. He is entitled to be heard. He is, I say, as good a man as there is in Washington, one of the most valuable clerks here. All the words are in the bill except those about the President, and there is something strange about it; that the Associated Press should have misled the American people and misled Mr. Roosevelt. I say that I expect in the presence of the representative of the Associated Press, I think he ought to telegraph to the country the truth about it and how it happened. He should tell why he sent out a dispatch which misled the public, unintentionally, of course. I do not say he did it intentionally, but I say he has done it and misrepresented the truth. He is put in the same class with Mr. Roosevelt and he ought to have the courage to say it was not true and that he was mistaken.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

Mr. OVERMAN. Now, I want to say another thing. I can not yield until I make a statement. The Senator from South Dakota has got the matter right. He is on the Judiciary Committee, and corroborates what I said. It never had the bill before it. Of course, the Judiciary Committee sometimes refers bills by numbers, but the bill he talks about, the Myers bill, was never considered in the Judiciary Committee. The Senator bears me out in the statement, and he naturally could do so, because he was there; he is a member of the committee. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. KELLOGG. Does not the Senator think his strictures upon the Associated Press are rather severe when they got their information from the clerk of the Judiciary Committee who undoubtedly handed out the wrong bill?

Mr. OVERMAN. He had no bill to give them.

Mr. KELLOGG. One moment. The bill which I read was before the Judiciary Committee and was considered by a subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. OVERMAN. Months ago.

Mr. KELLOGG. It is not at all likely that the Associated Press would deliberately take the bill that was reported and change it.

Mr. OVERMAN. He has not given the language of that bill.

Mr. KELLOGG. The bill that I read is exactly the language quoted by Mr. Roosevelt.

Mr. OVERMAN (reading)—

> Any disloyal, threatening, profane, violent, scurrilous, contemptuous, slurring, abusive, or seditious language about the Government of the United States or the Constitution of the United States, or the President of the United States—

That language is used when there is no such thing in the Poindexter amendment. The Poindexter amendment does not say anything of that sort. It shows the Associated Press representative did not have the Myers bill. If he wanted to give out the Myers bill, why did he not give it out? It is not the Poindexter amendment.

I have great respect for the man who represents the Associated Press, as I have for Col. Roosevelt, but having sent out language to the American people that is not true, I ask the Senator if he does not think it their duty to correct it?

Mr. KELLOGG. I think that they ought, and I have no doubt they will.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is all I ask.

Mr. KELLOGG. They have no desire, I am sure, to misrepresent any bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am making no strictures on anybody, except to say that they misrepresented, and the Senator admits it, and having admitted it is not true, then let them say there has been a mistake.

Mr. KELLOGG. If the Senator will ask me his question and give me an opportunity to answer it, I will try to do so.

Mr. OVERMAN. All right.

Mr. KELLOGG. I say undoubtedly the Associated Press will correct it, as they ought to do, and I have no doubt they are perfectly willing to do it. The surprising thing is that it created no sensation until Col. Roosevelt wrote about it.

Mr. OVERMAN. He is a sensational man, and he sends in a day ahead to the Washington Post an article which will appear Sunday morning in another paper in this country, a syndicated letter. He gave this notice of it, this man who is always in the limelight.

Mr. CUMMINS. May I ask the Senator from North Carolina a question. Is it his intention to endeavor to correct in this way all the misrepresentations that are made concerning committees of Congress and Members of Congress?

Mr. OVERMAN. No.

Mr. CUMMINS. If so, he will be very fully occupied during the next few weeks. There is not an issue of a paper I see anywhere that does not slander Congress or some committee of Congress or some Member of Congress.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is a different thing from slandering the Committee on the Judiciary and putting in words in quotations. It is a slander on the Senator who is a member of that great committee. Mr. President, to say that it was referred to our committee, and the Judiciary Committee adroitly did, it slanders the Senator as well as myself and every member of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not defend the statement. I think the Senator from North Carolina magnifies its importance—that is all—and I do not believe we ought to take up the time of the Senate in endeavoring to correct a statement of that character.

Mr. OVERMAN. Representing that great committee on this floor, I think I would be untrue to the committee as a member of the committee not to defend the Senator himself, because Roosevelt said the committee adroitly put it in. The Senator is a member of the committee and so am I.

Mr. CUMMINS. I hope the Senator will always defend me when slanders and libels are uttered about me. The Senator then will have his hands full.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will when the Senator is a member of the Committee on the Judiciary, and the whole committee is slandered, and he is a member of it.

The Senator is a member of the committee, and when this dispatch says the committee adroitly put it in there he is slandered as well as every other member of the committee.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I hope the Senator will not confine his defense to the members of the Committee on the Judiciary exclusively. I should like to put myself in his hands.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed with the consideration of House bill 8753 to amend section 3, title 1, of the act entitled "An Act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 15, 1917.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that the consideration of House bill 8753 be proceeded with. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The bill is before the Senate. The pending amendment is that offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], in line 18, after the word "shall" to insert the word "willfully," and also in line 4, page 3, the same amendment, and in line 7, the same, and in line 14, the same.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the bill under consideration deals with the character of publications that may be permitted in the United States. The discussion which has just ended has to do with the principal contributor to the Kansas City Star, Mr. Roosevelt. There has been a good deal of question raised about his misquotation of a bill. There has also been a good deal of discussion as to whether the statement of ex-President Roosevelt was based upon a misquotation. I only desire to say that Mr. Roosevelt has written other articles for the Kansas City Star, some of which have contained statements of a most remarkable character. I do not intend to comment upon them, but I do call attention to the general attitude of the Kansas City Star, and I think its attitude is proper to consider in connection with the kind of propaganda Mr. Roosevelt is carrying on.

Mr. President, I read an editorial that appeared in the Kansas City Star on Saturday, March 16, 1918, and ask the attention of the Senate to it, particularly I desire the attention of those who are raising questions regarding the scope of this bill:

IF YOU WERE A GERMAN.

Suppose you were a German born and bred. Suppose you had been brought up to feel that your country possessed a superior civilization that was the object of envy and hatred of your neighbors. Suppose it had always been borne in you that your nation owed its place in the world to its armies, and that it must extend its power by armed force or else be overthrown. Suppose you had been fed with assertions that your country had been attacked by jealous foes, and that it was fighting a successful war against them.

Do you have any idea that under such circumstances you could be brought by persuasion on the part of your enemies to disown your government?

Wouldn't your disposition be to sneer at enemy propaganda and to become more set in your ways? Would anything except military defeat make you check up and inquire into the real significance of a world policy that had involved the nation in disaster?

I now read in connection with that editorial from the Star an editorial which appeared on the same day in the Kansas City Post. The Kansas City Post is a loyal pro-American newspaper:

SO THE PEOPLE MAY KNOW IF YOU WERE A GERMAN.

"Suppose you were a German, born and bred. Suppose you had been brought up to feel that your country possessed a superior civilization that was the object of envy and hatred of your neighbors. Suppose it had always been borne in you that your nation owed its place in the world to its armies, and that it must extend its power by armed force or else be overthrown. Suppose you had been fed with assertions that your country had been attacked by jealous foes and that it was fighting a successful war against them.

"Do you have any idea that under such circumstances you could be brought by persuasion on the part of your enemies to disown your government?

"Wouldn't your disposition be to sneer at enemy propaganda and to become more set in your ways? Would anything except military defeat make you check up and inquire into the real significance of a world policy that had involved the nation in disaster?"

The above article appears as an editorial expression in to-day's Kansas City Star—and when you remember that this paper is managed by August Seested and some of the facts to which he swore a little less than a year ago, you will understand its full import and effect.

Seested, in securing the rights of American citizenship after this country was forced into war by the ruthless Hun, swore that he was born in Germany, lived there until almost maturity, received his education in the schools of the country which teaches that they "possess a superior civilization which is the object of envy and hatred of your neighbors."

View these facts concerning the man who dictates the policy of the paper and then read again that editorial.

Remember, too, that it is the speeches of President Wilson which are now classed as "enemy propaganda"—those great documents of humanity, which express the fundamentals of equality, liberty, democracy.

Remember that it is President Wilson who is holding aloft the torch of truth, that its rays may fall upon the deluded subjects of the Kaiser to let them know that we are not fighting peoples, but are fighting against that system of autocracy which ravaged Belgium and Serbia, which plots in other countries, which has been guilty of the greatest atrocities of all times.

Remember that this war must last until all peoples shall rule themselves and democracy become a reality in all the world—a reality for even the people of Germany, who are even now breaking away from that feeling of superior civilization and looking for the benefits of peace and freedom from subserviency to a mad monarch.

Remember that the Kaiser has used millions in this country in a futile effort to arouse the people of German blood to some sense of love and reverence for their fatherland, has instilled his subtle poison into the press wherever possible, has used every means that intrigue could suggest to obtain aid for his falling cause by dividing the people of this Nation.

Remember, and then read again. Do you believe it is an appeal to more vigorous war effort? Or do you believe that it is a subtle appeal to every former subject of the Kaiser who may be hesitating between a fondness for the place of his birth and loyalty to his chosen home to remember the teachings of his youth?

When you mark the fact that the speeches of President Wilson are classed as "enemy propaganda" you can not mistake the answer.

I think, Mr. President, that the attitude of that paper toward the Government ought to be considered at this time, together with the fact that it did the astonishing thing of going half-way across the continent and securing a citizen of New York to contribute to its columns, and that since he began writing for that paper there has not, so far as I know, been a single kindly or complimentary statement in regard to the officers of the Government appeared in a single article written by Mr. Roosevelt and published in the Star in his article. I think those facts ought to be taken into consideration, and I think Mr. Roosevelt knows the proper place in which to carry on his propaganda.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I have no desire to prolong the discussion of the Roosevelt incident, but I want to say that in his fulmination of error as it has been described he said some things that every American citizen should make a part of his political creed. I think no one will charge me with playing the very unusual rôle of defending Mr. Roosevelt. I have had the fortune, good or bad, to have his most cordial dislike and opposition since I entered public life. But, as I said a moment ago, from the gush of this human Vesuvius has fallen, perhaps accidentally, some jewels of truth which I commend to the serious consideration of every American citizen. I will read it:

Our loyalty is due entirely to the United States. It is due to the President only and exactly to the degree in which he efficiently serves the United States. It is our duty to support him when he serves the United States well; it is our duty to oppose him when he serves it badly. This is true about Mr Wilson now, and it has been true about all our Presidents in the past. It is our duty at all times to tell the truth about the President and about everyone else—

He might have added in public and in private life—

It is our duty at all times to tell the truth about the President and about everyone else, save in the cases where to tell the truth at the moment would benefit the public enemy.

To that sentiment I subscribe unconditionally. He may have said some things in this editorial he ought not to have said, but a fairly satisfactory explanation has been made here, and I am always charitable enough to think in the language of Irving Russell that—

* * * de sinfulness ob sin
Is 'pendin' 'pon de sperrit what we goes an' does it in.

Mr. President, with the consent and kindly indulgence of the Senate I wish to submit a few observations upon the pending bill. Mr. President, there is much fundamentally un-American, and many of the elements of potential despotism in the pending measure. The intentions and purposes, however, of the committee that recommended it to the Senate were entirely pertinent and patriotic. The end sought to be accomplished by them is the country's good, and if the proposed law should be enforced in line and in accord with the spirit and purposes of its proponents, no harm could possibly grow out of it, but, on the contrary, good would result.

But I fear the bigot, the charlatan, the man in office who would prostitute a public function to the promotion of his partisan or private interests will find in this measure a convenient engine of oppression. There are evidences at hand that all men in high official station are not like Cæsar would have his wife in that regard—altogether above suspicion. However high, noble, and grand the head of the Government may be, there is always some groveling politicaster to do the little dirty things to please the annointed one and punish the disobedient.

The fevered state of the public mind at this time prevents calm, dispassionate discussion and fearless reasoning upon any subject. Men are not permitted in some instances, be they ever so honest and patriotic, to express their honest thoughts, if indeed those thoughts should be in discord with the wave of popular passion. It is a lamentable state of affairs—the times are all out of joint.

Thomas Jefferson, in his animadversions upon the Federal judiciary, if uttered to-day, would be denounced under the terms of this bill as savoring of treason or disloyalty to his Government.

Mr. President, the strength of this Republic consists in the moral qualities and intellectual acquirements of the individual citizens thereof. The Government is strong and great in proportion to the strength of mind and moral force of the individual man and woman. The citizens can not develop to their utmost in mind and morals without fully enjoying unrestricted the privilege to think, the freedom of speech, and unproscribed action in the performance of the duties of citizenship. A citizen of this Republic has got a right to think, and that right carries with it the right to think incorrectly, if perchance his mental machinery shall be somewhat warped. The mental strait-jacket has never been used with success in a republic, and it has no place in America.

Thomas Jefferson held to a doctrine which he expressed in a letter to Spencer Roane, which would now be looked upon in these ungodly times as heretical. He said:

My construction of the Constitution is very different from that you quote. It is that each department is truly independent of the others and has an equal right to decide for itself what is the meaning of the Constitution in the cases submitted to its action, and especially where it is to act ultimately and without appeal.

That sounds rather revolutionary, don't you think, in these abnormal times? His denunciation of the Federal judiciary as "sappers and miners of the Constitution, changing our form of government by judicial construction" would under the terms of this measure subject him, if not to imprisonment, to the humiliation of trial in a criminal court.

Mr. President, all proscriptive legislation of this character originates in the minds of men who question the capacity of the citizen for self-government. It is a manifestation of lack of confidence in the intelligence and patriotism of the American people and their ability to govern themselves and, in their individual capacities, to protect and uphold the institutions of the country. I believe with Jefferson that you can rely upon the citizen to do his duty, do the things needful for the preservation of the institutions of this country and the protection of our Government against enemies in the open and under cover.

It is fresh in the minds of Senators, doubtless, the vigorous fight that Abraham Lincoln made against the rulings of the court in the famous Dred Scott case. You will recall his reply when attacked as to the way he proposed to resist the court's decision in that case. He said:

We oppose the Dred Scott decision in a certain way, upon which I ought perhaps to address you a few words. We do not propose that when Dred Scott has been decided to be a slave by the court we, as a mob, will decide him to be free, * * * but we nevertheless do oppose that decision as a political rule which shall be binding on the voter to vote for nobody who thinks it wrong, which shall be binding on the Members of Congress or the President to favor no measure that does not actually concur with the principles of that decision. * * * We propose so resisting it as to have it reversed if we can and a new judicial rule established upon this subject.

What would be said of a Senator or Congressman who expressed sentiments of that character at this time touching legislation which has been enacted of an extraordinary and unusual character since 1914? The war-generated spirit of intolerance would demand the application of the thumbscrew or burning at the stake or perhaps with a brand of infamy upon the right cheek of the man who would dare, for his country's good, to express such heroic and salutary sentiment as that expressed by Mr. Lincoln, who, it will be remembered, quoted Thomas Jefferson to sustain his defense of the right of the liberty of speech and the freedom of expression. One may differ in opinion regarding the object for which Lincoln contended, but no brave, self-respecting American citizen will question his constitutional right to do that which he did.

Mr. President, I yield to no man in my devotion to America and the cause for which our sons are dying in the trenches of France. There is no sacrifice that I would not make, personally, for the good of my country at this desperate moment. I, along with other fathers whose age debar them from active service in the ranks, have contributed of the priceless jewels of a father's love to the toll which the god of war demands, and I did it with my boy's consent and by his invitation, imbued with the spirit of that peerless Roman youth who gave himself to the gods Manes for the safety of his country. It is a beautiful story, expressive of the highest order of the purest patriotism, which has been exemplified by American youths in this war.

A wide gap, called afterwards Curtius lacus, had suddenly opened in the forum, and the oracle had said that it would never close before Rome threw into it whatever it had most precious. Curtius, on hearing the answer, demanded of his countrymen whether they possessed anything so valuable as their arms and courage. They yielded a silent assent to the question put them by the heroic youth, whereupon, having arrayed himself in full armor and mounted his horse, he plunged into the chasm, and the people threw after him flowers and fruit, the usual tribute which virtue always pays to heroism. And, as the story goes, the earth closed immediately over him. The price had been paid and Rome was saved.

Mr. President, the superb example of this mythological character has become common actuality in America since the declaration of war a year ago to-day. From all the walks of life, the high and the lowly, the rich and the poor, the weak and the strong, have come, men demanding that they be permitted to sacrifice all, if need be, for the Stars and Stripes—for American independence and for the preservation of American ideals and American liberty. Fathers and sons have offered their services, mothers have given their boys, wives have offered their husbands, and with their benediction pronounced by loving lips, have sent them forth to do and die in defense of our country. A spectacle more heroic, more inspiring, and sublime does not glorify the pages of American history. In recognition of those heroic facts let us be careful lest we enact laws that will be misinterpreted and misconstrued, laws that reflect upon the intelligence and patriotism of the people, laws that question the capacity of the people for self-government. The enemy to his country who stands upon the street corners and prates his cowardice or infidelity has no influence upon the patriotic citizen. His criminal vaporings evanesces as bad air. You can rely upon the inherent patriotism and the individual good judgment of the citizen to take the grains of wisdom from the talks of men and appropriate them to his use and cast aside the chaff. The people can take care of themselves. They do not need the guardianship of the Congress and the White House.

I believe in an hour like the present that the fullest and freest discussion should be permitted. In the sheol of a world disaster, which adumbrates the whole earth, we need that light which is generated only by the attrition of ideas and the exchange of thought.

> Words are things; and a drop of ink,
> Falling like dew upon a thought, produce
> That which makes thousands, perhaps millions, think.

Or, to use a more homely illustration, when we are going around sharp curves or crossing the breakers under a full head of steam, all the headlights should be turned on. The rights and privileges guaranteed by the Constitution should be upheld and scrupulously respected. I would not proscribe men and women in the expression of their views, for the reason that in doing so I fear that I might be influenced by my own feelings and my own earnest desires, which might carry me too far in certain directions. There is danger in proscription. There is absolute safety in freedom of thought and liberty of speech. The lie is harmless as long as truth is free to combat it. To make myself better understood I will be permitted, I trust, to paraphrase a statement made by one of America's greatest constitutional lawyers and noblest patriots: "It is not from the exercise of despotic power, nor yet from the headlong passions of a raging people that we will learn our duty to one another and to our country." When the prophet Elijah stood on the mountainside and looked for some token of the Divine will, he did not see it in the tempest or the earthquake or the fire, but he heard it in the "still, small voice" which reached his ears after they had passed by. We have heard the storm of political debate, we are feeling the earthquake shock of a world war, we are seeing to-day the effect of legislative persecution. We shall find the truth when they are all passed and gone, and we will find it by hearkening to the "still, small voice" which speaks to our consciences in the articulate words of the Constitution from the graves of our fathers. If we can not get the truth from them, if their words of wisdom and the light of their patriotic example do not lead us in the straight and narrow path, then, Mr. President, the days of this great Republic are numbered. The end is not far away. I would counsel moderation in this hour of trial. Laws that originate in intense hatred or excessive love are equally unreliable and necessarily unstable.

It is a mistake to legislate upon the presumption that all the wisdom and all the patriotism are confined to Congress and the executive branch of the Government. Reasoning from that hypothesis leads inevitably to a false conclusion, finally to disaster.

Mr. President, may I be permitted at this point to counsel with my colleagues and urge upon them the necessity for concord of purpose, calmness of discussion of all questions pertaining to the war? America should present a united front to the common enemy. And no word or act should be said or done that indicates in the slightest a division of sentiment in our ranks. No man or coterie of men in this body or out of it have a corner on all the wisdom and all the patriotism of the American people. Patriotism is a common attribute, and the inherent wisdom and good judgment of the average citizen is the sheet anchor of our national hope.

I can not more fittingly close what I have to say than by quoting from an ancient Greek who had felt the hot iron of adversity in his heroic soul. He understood the fallibility of men, the unreliability of human judgment, and in the shadow of doubt, conscious of human limitations, he uttered these wise words for the guidance of his people. I commend them to your careful consideration:

> Tossed on a sea of trouble, soul, my soul,
> Do thou myself control
> To meet the weapons of advancing foes
> A stubborn breast oppose,
> Undaunted by the hostile might of squadrons
> Burning for the fight.
> Thine no vain boasting when the victor's crown
> Wins the deserved renown;
> Thine no dejected sorrow when defeat
> Would urge a base retreat.
> Rejoice 'mid joyous things, nor overmuch
> Let grief thy bosom touch
> 'Mid evil; still bear in mind
> Now changeful are the ways of human kind.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I want to come to the rescue, if I may, of some of the language of the committee amendment to the pending bill, which has been attacked. I shall endeavor to be brief about it.

I feel a peculiar interest in the language, for much of the amendment was taken verbatim from my now suddenly-famous bill of last August, and enacted into a statute in the State of Montana by the legislature of that State; and the greater part of that Montana statute appears to have been taken by the Judiciary Committee of this body and incorporated in the committee amendment; so I suppose I may modestly claim to be the author of a part of the language of this committee amendment.

There have been offered upon the floor of the Senate a number of amendments to the committee amendment. To most of them I am opposed. There have been some amendments offered to extend the scope of the bill and to make it more comprehensive and far-reaching. Those I favor, because I favor hitting deviltry and disloyalty and mischief in this critical crisis just as hard as we can hit them. I believe in making this bill just as comprehensive and drastic as it may legitimately be made under our Constitution and form of government, in order to attain the purposes at which it is aimed. But to the other amendments, those to change the wording of the committee amendment, I am opposed naturally, for a number of reasons.

In the first place, as I have said, I find some of this language which it is proposed to change was framed by me in the bill which I introduced here last August. It is often said by judges in writing opinions of courts, when referring to certain language, that they have no pride of authorship; but I believe I can not say that as to the words affected by some of the proposed amendments, because I believe they are fitting words and are best adapted to the purposes for which they were intended.

There has been an amendment offered, I believe, to strike out the word "inflame," in line 5, page 3, of the bill, or at least there has been some objection made to it, the language there being:

Or publish any language calculated to incite or inflame resistance to any duly constituted Federal or State authority in connection with the prosecution of the war.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McKELLAR in the chair). Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. MYERS. I yield, with pleasure.

Mr. KING. Does not the Senator from Montana think that the word "inflame" is rather unhappily selected, and that the word "cause" would be better and stronger to effectuate the result?

Mr. MYERS. No; I can not say so. The disjunctive form of language here used is "to incite or inflame." "Incite" is to cause, to initiate, to start, to begin. A man who incites resistance causes people to resist who otherwise would not resist. Therefore, he causes resistance. I think the word "incite" is synonymous with "cause." A man who by a disloyal and traitorous harangue incites a crowd to resistance to duly constituted Federal or State authority causes them to resist.

The word "inflame," as I understand, means to increase, to augment something which is already in existence. It means, where there is already resistance or a disposition to resist, to "inflame," to increase that tendency; to increase that which already exists.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator from Montana?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. MYERS. With pleasure.

Mr. BORAH. I think the distinction which the Senator from Montana makes is probably a correct one, but I doubt if in the practical operation of the bill, should it become a law, the court and the jury would make any such distinction.

Mr. MYERS. As I have said, to "incite resistance" means to cause it where it did not before exist; to "inflame resistance" is where there is already resistance, to increase it; to cause people to resist all the more; to encourage them to continue or to increase their resistance.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. MYERS. With pleasure.

Mr. ASHURST. Then, why not substitute the word "encourage" in lieu of the word "inflame"?

Mr. MYERS. Well, "encourage" might serve the same purpose; but why not leave the word "inflame"? What is the matter with "inflame"? I think "inflame" is just as good a word as either of the others.

Mr. ASHURST. "Encourage" is a word that has had a judicial interpretation in very many cases; but "inflame" has not had a judicial interpretation.

Mr. MYERS. I heard that objection urged yesterday; but let the courts begin to give the word "inflame" a judicial interpretation as soon as this bill is enacted. The mere fact that the word never has had judicial interpretation or has not had a settled and stable judicial interpretation is no reason why it should not receive one. The definition of "inflame" is given in the Standard Dictionary as follows:

To make larger; to aggravate; to augment.

That is what the word means—to increase that which already exists. It seems to me that it is wise to have a provision forbidding action or language which would incite resistance, and also forbidding action or language which would increase it if there were already resistance. I do not believe that the word "inflame" there will do any harm; but if Senators can suggest any synonymous word which would better express the idea I would be willing to have them do so.

There is, I believe, a motion pending to strike out the word "calculated," in line 24, page 2 of the bill, and to substitute therefor the word "intended," where the bill forbids—any language calculated to bring the form of government of the United States, or the Constitution of the United States, or the soldiers or sailors of the United States, or the flag of the United States, or the uniform of the Army or Navy of the United States into contempt, scorn, contumely, or disrepute.

Some of the Senators who spoke on the bill yesterday objected very much to the word "calculated," on the ground that it did not have a well-settled judicial meaning or definite judicial interpretation. I think that word serves the purpose which it was intended to serve. In the forepart of the amendment it is provided—

and whoever, when the United States is at war, shall utter, print, write, or publish any disloyal, profane, scurrilous, contemptuous, or abusive language about the form of government of the United States, or the Constitution of the United States, or the soldiers or sailors of the United States, or the flag of the United States, or the uniform of the Army or Navy of the United States—or any language calculated to bring the form of Government of the United States * * * into contempt, scorn, contumely, or disrepute.

And then follows the blanket provision—

I think the word "calculated" is the proper word to use there. It means that if a man uses any language the reasonable and probable result of which is to bring the form of government, the Constitution of the United States, and so forth, into disrepute he is guilty. "Calculated" there means "reasonable, natural, and probable result." Any human being of ordinary intelligence knows what kind of language is calculated to bring the form of government and the Constitution of the United States into disrepute. Nobody is so ignorant as not to know.

Anybody knows that a profane denunciation of our form of government or of our Constitution, or saying that our form of government is not as good as the German form of government—which remark I have read in the newspapers of late, and it has been uttered on a number of occasions and has created much disturbance in different parts of the country—anybody knows that such language as that is calculated to bring the Government of the United States into disrepute. It is impossible to enumerate every kind of language that would bring the Government of the United States into disrepute. The words "disloyal, profane, scurrilous, contemptuous, or abusive" do not necessarily cover every form of language that would tend to bring the Government of the United States into disrepute. So the clause of that sentence, "any language calculated to bring the form of government of the United States * * * into * * * disrepute" is added to cover anything that might occur which is not especially defined in preceding clauses of the bill.

Suppose a man should say that the Government of Germany is a better government than the Government of this country, or employ any of many other such expressions, it might be hard to find any adjective enumerated in the beginning of the committee amendment which would cover it; and I think it is wise to have a provision of that kind so as to see that any language calculated to bring the form of government of the United States into disrepute is adequately punished.

"Calculated" is defined in the Standard Dictionary as meaning—

Suited, proper, fit, tending—

Tending to bring the form of government of the United States or the Constitution of the United States into disrepute. I think, if a man utters language in this country that is calculated in the mind of any ordinary human being of average intelligence to bring this Government into disrepute, he ought to be held responsible for it and ought to be punished for it.

My objection to changing the word "calculated" to the word "intended" is this: If the change were made, it would read:

Or any language intended to bring the form of government of the United States or the Constitution of the United States * * * into contempt, scorn, contumely, or disrepute.

If we should employ the word "intended" there, then some highly technical Federal judge somewhere in the country doubtless will be instructing juries that it must not only be proven beyond and to the exclusion of all reasonable doubt that the defendant uttered the language charged, but it must also, in addition, be proven beyond and to the exclusion of all reasonable doubt that he intended by such language to bring the form of government of the United States, or the Constitution of the United States, into disrepute, scorn, contumely, or contempt. The defendant will go on the witness stand and say: "I had no such intention." He is the only human being on earth who knew what his intention was—only he and the Almighty know what was in his mind and what was his intention—and if he denies it, if he says that such was not his intention, you will, I fear, often find at least one of the 12 jurors stoutly insisting that he has a reasonable doubt as to whether or not the defendant intended to bring the form of government or the Constitution of the United States into disrepute; and you will have a hung jury and a mistrial. If jurors were confronted with such instructions and a defendant declared that he did not intend to bring our form of government or our Constitution into disrepute, I fear we would find that clause of this proposed law very hard of enforcement; I fear that in many cases it would signally fail of its object; it would make it, I feel, in some jurisdictions of the United States almost impossible to convict a defendant of violating that clause of the proposed law. I do not believe in rendering this bill next to impossible of enforcement; I believe that it ought to be so worded as to facilitate its enforcement in the spirit in which it is intended, in order to accomplish the object for which it is designed.

I believe those are the only two amendments that were suggested yesterday that I care to comment upon now, save the pending amendment to the committee amendment, of which I will say a few words.

The pending amendment is the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] to insert the word "willfully" in a number of places in the bill; but I think that is wholly unnecessary and would be only confusing and loading the bill down with unnecessary verbiage. The statutes of many States describe misdemeanors without the use of the word "willfully"; they merely say that if a man shall do so-and-so—a certain prohibited act—he is guilty. Many misdemeanor statutes do not employ the word "willfully"; and this is such a plain inhibition, the character of language that is forbidden is so plainly described, that I do not see the use of putting in the word "willfully." A man can not utter words without intending to do so.

Now, Mr. President, a few words on the general nature of the bill. I believe it is a most important bill. Men are going about in this country saying that the Government of Germany is a better Government than the Government of this country, saying that the Constitution was made by men who intended to keep the people down, to oppress the people; and some are even now expressing the hope that the Germans will win this war, that they will win great successes at arms, and that there will be more and ever-increasing victorious drives by the German Army. There seems to be doubt as to whether or not there is sufficient law on the statute books for the punishment of such utterances of disloyal and traitorous people in this country, and the object of this bill, as I understand, is to remove all such doubts and administer proper punishment, drastic punishment, to that class of creatures who are carrying on their insidious, loathsome, poisonous, disloyal, and traitorous work in this country.

The principal object of this bill, or one of its principal objects, I believe, is to prevent mob law. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] said yesterday he did not believe so much attention should be paid to that feature of it as had been bestowed by the remarks of some of the Senators in the debate yesterday; but I believe that is one of the highly important objects of the amendment, or rather that it would be a highly beneficial result of its enactment.

When I introduced the bill last August, which had the same object as this bill and contained much of the same language, I did it on account of a lynching that had occurred in Montana just a short time before. The lynching occurred late in July or early in August, and I introduced my bill on the 15th day of August.

A man named Little was lynched in Butte, Mont. It was reported that he referred to the United States soldiers as "Uncle Sam's scabs in uniform," and said that this Government would not be able to send any troops to Europe to fight, because the I. W. W.'s would keep all our troops busy in this country, and many like things. There was no effort by officers of the law to punish him; it was claimed that there was no law to punish him; and, as a result, one morning he was hung by a mob. Having that in mind and fearing a repetition of such occurrences unless we had more and better law to suppress, prevent, and punish such utterances, I introduced a bill on the subject; and I apprehend that the object of the committee's amendment to the pending bill is the same. There is going to be more of mob law and lawlessness and lynching in this country unless we speedily enact a measure of this kind.

Night before last there occurred a lynching in Collinsville, Ill. I noticed in last evening's papers that a man who was charged with disloyal utterances was lynched there; and I read in the Evening Star, of Washington, last evening, after the account of the lynching, this statement, coming from the Department of Justice:

> Until the Federal Government is given power to punish persons making disloyal utterances, Department of Justice officials fear more lynchings, such as that at Collinsville, Ill., last night. This was the first report reaching here of such extreme mob violence to a German, although officials who have observed the general feeling against Germans have feared such occurrences.
> The Government has no authority to take action against the lynchers. Officials of the department deplored the act and expressed the hope that State or local authorities would speedily punish the lynchers.
> At the same time it was pointed out that as soon as Congress passes the pending bill making it a Federal offense to speak or write obviously disloyal criticism of the United States in war the Government can punish these acts and reduce the danger of mob action.

That appeal of the Department of Justice to Congress should not go unheeded. It should be responded to speedily by the enactment of the pending bill, as amended by the Judiciary Committee. Now is the time for action!

In the Washington Evening Times of last evening I read some pertinent comment on the nature and object of the pending bill, and conditions which it is intended to overcome, which I indorse and which I will here read:

> Different sections of the country are reacting differently to the German propagandist, but the bitterest kind of a feeling is being gradually bred by such things as the discovery of poison and glass in bread. Just as happened in England after every German drive, the Germans who were indiscreet in showing their exultation over the Teutonic advance have recently been handled rather roughly in Western States.
> It is precisely because Congress has failed to empower the Department of Justice to deal at its discretion with cases of disloyalty or seditious activities of German residents that officials really fear the situation may get out of hand in some parts of the country. When there is no law, people are tempted in times like these to make law on the spot.
> The Department of Justice, however, has been severely criticized of late for not doing away with more Germans. Absence of authority has been one handicap and the laxity of some Federal judges in disposing of cases brought before them by the department has been another.
> Behind the explicit powers granted to the department by Congress must exist always a public opinion that will indicate to Federal judges that they, too, in time of war must consider the possible menace to the country of letting aliens loose or inflicting insignificant penalties on Germans who openly take issue with the American Government. In one case, when a German addressing a public meeting not only expressed a profane criticism of the President of the United States, but advised all American soldiers to shoot their officers, he was promptly arrested and indicted.
> But the Federal judge released him on the ground that no American soldiers actually were present to hear the German's advice. Instances of this sort are behind the Department of Justice's efforts to get laws that will enable them to obtain severe penalties for those engaged in disloyal utterances, particularly those of German sympathy who go about advising against the purchase of Liberty bonds and thrift stamps.
> Unquestionably Senator HIRAM JOHNSON is right in saying that under some of the proposed legislation people engaged in legitimate criticism of the administration can be punished and freedom of speech interfered with. But if the administration wanted to interfere with that institution it was given sufficient power under the original espionage act to bar newspapers and magazines and otherwise embarrass critics, but no such abuse of authority has occurred on a wholesale scale in the past year, and there is little likelihood that it will in the future.
> It looks as if the Senate were going to be technical again and try to draw legislation so explicitly that the German propagandist and spy will be just as able to detect the loopholes as American citizens who do not agree politically with the administration.
> If the administration had abused its power in the last year and had shown a disregard of public opinion in handling those who are engaged in criticizing the acts of the Government, there would now be every excuse for hesitation. But the question to-day is whether the Senate is going to have faith in the Department of Justice and the executive branch of the Government in dealing with the ticklish question of disloyal utterances or whether it is going to hamper and restrain the efforts which would otherwise be made to stamp out disloyalty and enable the Government to float the liberty loan without opposition from the insidious German propagandist.
> Public opinion has always been able to apply its remedies whenever any flagrant case of abused authority occurred, and the courts and the people will always be able, as heretofore, to recognize purely American criticism of war policies and that which springs from foreign sympathizers. Also the Department of Justice and other branches of the Government will be obliged to offer to the Federal courts in prosecuting the cases contributory circumstances to show the sympathy of the offender with the cause of Germany.
> Power is not being asked to punish anyone who disagrees with the policies of the Government, but those who are obviously engaged in a propaganda to spread their own criticism with intent to hinder and embarrass the war machinery of America in the most critical moments of its life.

I say there is great need for this legislation, Mr. President, and I hope it may be speedily enacted; and I hope it may be enacted so strongly and so effectively and with such far-reaching provisions and with such drastic punishment that it will completely suppress the hydra-headed monster of treason and disloyalty in this country, which is rearing its head very extensively and most ominously, to the alarm not only of the Government officials but of many of the good people of this country, and is actually causing lawlessness, causing the people to take the law into their own hands, and which will cause more lawlessness if it is not prevented by wholesome legislation.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. MYERS. I yield, with pleasure.

Mr. SHIELDS. The Senator from Montana has referred to a colloquy that occurred between the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] and myself in regard to mob law. The substance of my observation was that this bill was not for the purpose of protecting these German spies and emissaries from mob law, but for the purpose of punishing them for crimes they are committing against the United States and its people. It may have the effect, by meting out dire punishment to them, of obviating the necessity of mob law, and, I think, it will have that effect, but that is not the reason for enacting it.

The argument that it will prevent the resort to lynch law is not required to sustain it. The object of it is to punish these men who are now lurking in every city and infesting every rural community of this country, blowing up our mills, interfering with the manufacture of munitions, the production of supplies for the maintenance of our armies and the support of our allies, and sowing the seeds of murder, sedition, and treason.

The several States have ample laws to punish lynching, mob violence, and riots of all kind. We need not legislate for that purpose. We have no power to legislate for that purpose. That is a police matter of which the States have exclusive jurisdiction, except where it interferes with some Federal function.

We can punish and suppress the wrongs to the Federal Government and our Army and Navy these alien enemies and their cowardly allies are perpetrating, and it is our duty to do it without further delay. We have been too lenient with them. They must be given to understand that no further disloyal conduct will be tolerated. The punishment should be certain, speedy, and severe. This is a most wholesome bill, and I shall vote for it for the purposes I have stated.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I certainly had no intention of in any way misrepresenting the Senator from Tennessee. I think I understand his attitude perfectly, and I am in very hearty substantial accord with him.

Mr. SHIELDS. I did not understand that the Senator was reflecting on me. I knew that he would not do so. What I said was not with a view of correcting anything of that kind.

Mr. MYERS. I am always glad to have the Senator's views upon any occasion. I know that he is for this bill. I understand that he was for it in the committee. I understand that the committee was unanimously for it and that it was reported without a dissenting vote of those Members present, and the Senator has given some very strong reasons for the speedy enactment of the measure. I believe, though, that one very great and beneficial result of the enactment of the bill would be to stop outbreaks of lawlessness and to cause the law to be administered in a proper way, a legal way, and to save the people of this country the necessity of taking the law into their own hands, as I am sure they will continue to do unless we give them such a law as this bill.

I do not believe for a minute the people of this country will tolerate disloyalty and treason, and if Congress does not afford the remedy they will take the remedy into their own hands. I think one of the most desirable objects of the bill is to relieve the people of that necessity, and punish in the proper way disloyalty and treason, and while we are at it I believe in making the bill good and strong, all-powerful and far-reaching, without throwing any unnecessary obstacles in the way of its enforcement in the courts, without affording any opportunity for the raising of hairsplitting technicalities that will enable violators of the law to escape the just punishment due them. The people are demanding such a law. Conditions demand it. Necessity demands it. Loyalty to our country demands it. Loyalty to our soldier boys on the firing line demands it. The Department of Justice requests it. Let us give it to them and not be squeamish or timorous about it.

AVIATION STATION NEAR MIAMI, FLA.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, under date of March 27 a statement was sent out from the city of Washington and published in an Indianapolis paper; I think it was the Indianapolis Sun. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] to this statement and to express the hope that the Senator from Indiana will, at his earliest opportunity, make an investigation of the matter referred to in the statement which I am now about to make, and, if the circumstances in his judgment justify, make a correction concerning it.

The statement to which I refer is as follows——

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. ROBINSON. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. I believe that the Senator from Indiana is now at a meeting of the Committee on Military Affairs; and if the Senator really wants an answer to-day to the subject matter which he is about to present, I think we ought to have time for the Senator from Indiana to be here.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator knows that if I had desired to suggest the absence of a quorum, I could have done that myself. I should like to make the statement, and, as I have already indicated, the Senator from Indiana can then, after he has read the statement, if he does not find it convenient to appear in the Chamber, take such action as he desires to take concerning the matter.

Mr. SMOOT. The only reason why I interrupted the Senator was that, if he desired it, I myself would have suggested the absence of a quorum.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator can not, unless I yield for that purpose, suggest the absence of a quorum; and I do not desire to have that done, because I doubt whether a quorum can be procured at this time. I do not wish to force an adjournment of the Senate; so I decline to yield to the Senator from Utah for the purpose of suggesting the absence of a quorum.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no intention of doing so——

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from Utah can send in to the Committee on Military Affairs and procure the attendance of the Senator from Indiana in a moment or two, if he desires.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that that has already been done.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well.

Mr. SMOOT. I had no intention of asking for a quorum if it was disagreeable to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. I decline to yield for that purpose. I think I have made that plain to the Senator from Utah. I realize that a quorum can not be had at this time, and I do not wish to force an adjournment of the Senate, as I have already stated. If the Senator desires, I will wait until the Senator from Indiana has arrived in the Chamber.

Mr. President, the statement to which I was about to refer is as follows:

SENATE TAKES IT UP—ALLEGED AVIATION GRAFT CASE GOES UNDER MICROSCOPE.

WASHINGTON, March 27, 1918.

Investigation of alleged graft in the building of an aviation field at Miami, Fla., was undertaken by the Military Committee of the Senate to-day at the instance of Senator NEW, of Indiana.

Letters received by Senator NEW from Carl G. Fisher, of Indianapolis, and Miami substantiate reports which Senator NEW had received from Miami to the effect that the aviation department is engaged in converting a swamp and mud flat of Biscayne Bay into an aviation field.

Thousands of yards of filling is being used, it is said, to reclaim the land, and contractors are working knee deep in mud to build airplane hangars for the eventual use of aviation students. It will be at least a year or possibly longer before the field can be made fit for use, it is said, and the cost will approximate something like $300,000.

In the meantime, Fisher had offered the aviation department the use of a tract of 63 acres on Biscayne Bay at $1 a year. The site offered is 5 feet above high-tide level and is entirely dry. The offer was refused for some unknown reason.

The reasons why I have asked the attention of the Senator from Indiana to this statement are: First, the statement is erroneous, as I shall attempt to show; second, the implication in the statement is that it originated with, or was authorized by, the Senator from Indiana. I have no knowledge concerning the origin of the news item except what is derived from the newspaper report itself.

Mr. President, there is no Army aviation field at Miami, Fla. I have heard that there is a hydroplane station being located there by the Navy Department. The Signal Corps and the Aviation Section of the Army have nothing whatever to do with the location of any sites or with any building operations carried on by the hydroplane division of the Navy. It is therefore manifest that the statement contained in the newspaper report which I read and which refers to information furnished by the Senator from Indiana is an unfair and unfounded reflection on the Aviation Section of the Signal Corps. As to whether the site which is being used for the establishment of a hydroplane station is an improper one and as to whether its selection was brought about through graft I have no knowledge whatever, and am, therefore, not prepared to make any statement.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. When the Senator from Indiana laid before the Committee on Military Affairs the two letters received by him there was at once made known precisely what the Senator from Arkansas has stated—that the aviation section of the Signal Corps had no field at all engaged in that locality and had established no plant there and no site for an aviation station. All in the world they had done was to send officers down there to make an investigation; and therefore the statement, as far as it meant to say that an aviation site for the Army had been improperly chosen or in any other wise chosen in that vicinity, was wholly without any truth. There was no selection made; there was no contract made, no field, no anything with reference to the aviation section of the Signal Corps, except that certaing officers had been sent down there to make an investigation regarding certain sites that had been offered to them.

With reference to the aviation station for the Navy which is located at Dinner Key, about 8 or 10 miles south of Miami, and opposite Cocoanut Grove, that site and that location have the absolute approval of the Navy Department and of all the officers connected with it. The buildings have been all erected, except some additional ones which were directed to be built by the department after the first buildings had been constructed. Only three hangars are now needing completion, and these were added to the original buildings; and they would not have been added, of course, if it had been found that the site was improper or that there was anything irregular about the selection of it.

The station is an ideal one. The plant is a splendid one. The contractors are thoroughly responsible and have practically completed their work. There is not the slightest foundation for the statements made in these letters that were offered to the Committee on Military Affairs and referred to in this newspaper article. The Senator from Indiana recognized at once that that committee had nothing at all to do with the subject, and that the Army had nothing to do with it; but I am speaking now with reference to the Navy aviation station. It is perfectly satisfactory to all the officers, to everybody concerned. There has been no graft since the Government pays nothing for the use of the land. It has an option to purchase the land, and by filling from the bay it has enhanced the value of its own property if it exercises the option. There has been no complaint by the Navy Department or officials at all.

My information is these two men, Mr. Carl Fischer and a Mr. Gage, who wrote these letters, it appears, called at that plant and wanted to inspect it.

The officer in charge asked if they had passes. They said no, they did not have passes. They insisted, in substance, that they were American citizens, that this was public property, and that they thought they ought to have the right to inspect it. The officers said, "We can not permit that without proper authorization"; and thereupon a disturbance arose and they had to be put off the grounds.

That is the fact with reference to what brought about, I think, those communications. At least those are the facts that have been reported to me. When these letters were offered before the Committee on Military Affairs I immediately telegraphed down there to find out the facts in regard to the naval station, although that committee had nothing to do with it. I received replies by wire, which I afterwards submitted to the committee, and which appear in the hearings before the Committee on Military Affairs, giving the facts with reference to the matter.

It is true that a portion of that site at Dinner Key was somewhat low. They wanted it on the water. As stated, that is a Navy station, and they use hydroplanes and they have to come down in the water. They do not want it on high ground, and they want it to be fronting on the water. It has extensive frontage. The department concluded to raise the ground somewhat, and as the most feasible way to do that and accomplish the two results at the same time—deepening the bay and filling in the ground—they used a dredge to pump from the bay the sand onto this ground, and therefore raise it, or some portion of it, to some extent, according to their plan. It was a perfectly feasible and proper way to do, and a great many very handsome homes are built upon similar ground all along that bay for 8 or 10 miles up and down the coast about Miami. Mr. Fischer himself owns a vast amount of property that has been made in the same way, by pumping sand from the bay onto the land, and it has since been improved and magnificent residences and homes are built upon that sort of property.

So that there is no foundation whatever for these statements; and the newspaper article is grossly unjust to the Navy station, as well as to the Signal Corps and to the people in that vicinity and to the whole subject.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I observe that since I began this statement the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] has entered the Chamber. I will state that I have already read into the RECORD a newspaper statement purporting to have been sent out from Washington under date of March 27, alleging that information submitted to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] has disclosed graft in connection with the location of an aviation field at or near Miami, Fla. The remarks of the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] confirm the statement which I have already made that there is no Army aviation field there, and that therefore a gross injustice has been done the Aviation Section of the Signal Corps in the newspaper report to which I have referred. The Senator from Florida has also stated that the hydroplane station which is located at the point mentioned was properly located there, and that the objections which have been made to the location are unfounded.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. ROBINSON. Just a moment.

Mr. President, it is unfortunate for the public service that statements of this character are circulated in the press. It is of course always right, when graft occurs in connection with the public service, to expose it, in order that such transactions may be prevented in the future, but this is a time when statements of this kind should not be made unless they are well founded.

I now yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, with reference to the matter to which the Senator from Arkansas alludes, I would say that several days ago a letter came to me written by a gentleman whose intention I am sure was perfectly straightforward and honest, in which he conveyed the impression that a great deal of money was being injudiciously and unnecessarily spent on an aviation site in the neighborhood of Miami, Fla. I wrote to a friend at Miami, who was in a position to either corroborate those alleged facts or refute them, and my answer from that gentleman was rather indefinite and inconclusive.

I undertook, merely for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not the statement was true, to make some inquiries at the aviation section. I showed the letter that I received to the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], and I did ask some questions at the Aviation Department. There I learned that the site was not being built by the Aviation Department of the Army at all; that it was something that was being done by the Navy. I therefore turned the letter over to a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, Senator HARDING. Afterwards Senator FLETCHER made an explanation to me of what was going on.

Afterwards another Miami friend whom I have long known, he formerly having been a resident of Indiana—I refer to Mr. Frank B. Shutts—made a statement to me of what was going on or what had been done and the reason for it. I had a letter from the Navy Department also explaining it, and I am entirely satisfied that what is being done there is being done with good reason for it. I have never said anywhere or to anyone that a dollar was being spent injudiciously. I never made any charge to the press or any intimation of the kind in connection with it. I merely made an inquiry following the receipt of a letter from a very reputable and responsible gentleman, who, as I said, I am sure thought he was bringing to the attention of somebody connected with the Government what he thought was an abuse. I am satisfied that the gentleman was mistaken. I never have made any statement to any newspaper man except to a correspondent of a Miami paper who came to me in the lobby here. He said he understood I had some letters. I said, "Yes; I have them; I do not know anything about this matter; I am making no charges," and I turned them over to him.

I am perfectly willing to say my present impression is that money is not being injudiciously spent in that case, and I have never made any charge or intimation that anything of the sort was being done.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, when I rose I merely knew that there was no aviation site or field at Miami, Fla., and I was not informed as to the facts relating to the hydroplane station there, as disclosed by the Senator from Florida and as confirmed by the statement of the Senator from Indiana. I am very glad to have the matter corrected. It is unfortunate that unfair and unfounded reflections should be made in the press of the country upon the military service. We are passing through a very great crisis now, and the confidence of the public in the integrity of the men who are controlling the military forces of the Nation should not be unfairly diminished or weakened. We ought to support, wherever we can do so conscientiously and consistently, the efforts of the military authorities to carry forward the mandates of Congress for the development of the various branches of the military service, so essential to win the war in which we are engaged.

Mr. MCKELLAR obtained the floor.

Mr. FLETCHER. Will the Senator allow me, in this connection, to put in the RECORD a few words?

Mr. MCKELLAR. Certainly.

Mr. FLETCHER. Of course I had nothing to do with bringing this subject up, either before the Committee on Military Affairs or here, but in view of the insertion in the RECORD of the newspaper clippings I feel that the facts ought to be made to appear a little more fully than I stated them and my authority given for stating them.

In just a minute, I should like to say that on the 29th of November last I was in Miami. Mr. T. J. Peters took me to this aviation station at Dinner Key. It was under process of being constructed. Some of the buildings were under way. The dredge was laying out in front of the grounds, in the bay, and some pumping was to be done to deepen the water and raise the elevation of the site. There is a stretch of 4 or 5 miles of open waterway clear out to the Atlantic Ocean. It is an ideal place, and the air and the conditions are simply superb for aviation whether on land or on sea. The climate could not be excelled anywhere in the world. There is no foundation whatever for this sort of criticism, even if it was an Army station, for that matter.

The Senator from Indiana never showed me these letters until he appeared before the Committee on Military Affairs, and I knew nothing about it until they were offered there. So I had no opportunity to furnish him any data to the contrary or to clear up or to make any refutation of the statements in the letters until they were furnished to the committee in the hearing. Then I immediately wired Mr. Peters to give me the facts about the situation, and he also took it up with the contractors, and I have their telegrams here. They are not very long, and I should like to have the telegrams inserted in the RECORD and a recent letter, received to-day from Mr. Peters, also on the same subject, which is very brief, giving the facts as regards the lands in that vicinity, and showing that because some of it had to be filled by pumping from the bay is no evidence at all that it is an undesirable site. I would just like to have these papers inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PETERS, FLA., March 28, 1918.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Your wire came yesterday. Recently Carl Fisher and George F. Gates came together to Dinner Key Aviation Camp and made request that they be allowed to inspect the grounds and buildings. Not being able to furnish satisfactory explanation as to why they should make such inspection, the request was refused. They used abusive language and were ejected from the premises. The buildings are occupied and grounds carefully guarded. This, I think, accounts for their letters of misrepresentation read by Senator NEW before the Military Affairs Committee yesterday.

THOS. J. PETERS.

PETERS, FLA., March 28, 1918.

Senator D. U. FLETCHER,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

Referring to your wire to Thomas J. Peters, we wish to thank you for the interest in us which you are taking. Letters read before Military Affairs Committee are not in accordance with facts, and we would be very glad if the committee would request a report upon our responsibility and work from the Bureau of Yards and Docks. All buildings occupied or ready for occupation except three hangars recently added. These will be ready within two weeks. Regret that department does not permit us to have photographs taken.

WARD & PRIDE.

MIAMI, FLA., March 28, 1918.

Senator DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
Washington, D. C.:

We note comments on Dinner Key aviation station by some disgruntled landowner. This station located on merits of the available deep water in front, which was required by Navy officials. The land was donated for the use of the Government. The fill that was necessary to make is made of sand and shell mixture. It was expensive to dredge, as the Navy specified where water should be made deeper, on account of accommodating their boats. Everyone at the Dinner Key station is well and happy, and it is considered the ideal naval air station.

President Miami Chamber of Commerce.

PETERS, FLA., March 28, 1918.

Hon. D. U. FLETCHER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Dinner Key site most appropriate location in this part of the State. Filling in gives ample elevation and drainage. Soil sand on top. Construction work highly praised by officials in charge. Contractors absolutely reliable and have met every requirement for efficiency, capacity, and financially responsible. Building and material used thoroughly satisfactory. Every effort consistent with good business management has been made to protect the Government's interest with regard to cost. Proposed site at Sandpoint practically the same as Dinner Key was in the beginning. Will wire you again.

THOS. J. PETERS.

PETERS, FLA., April 1, 1918.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: Referring further to letters from Carl G. Fisher and George F. Gates, read before the Military Committee by Senator NEW on the 27th, stating that Dinner Key aviation site was a marsh, contractors irresponsible, and work unsatisfactory.

I beg to inclose herewith a list of wealthy resident owners of the city of Miami, who have their homes located on land which was made by pumping soil out of the bottom of Biscayne Bay, the same as the Dinner Key aviation camp site was made. If such land was objectionable it is hardly probable that this list of wealthy resident owners would have built their homes on it.

I regret the officer in charge at Dinner Key camp will not permit photographs to be made of the grounds and buildings, as the buildings are all finished in good shape and occupied, except the three last large hangar buildings, all of which will be completed inside of the time, April 15.

Yours, truly,

THOS. J. PETERS.

This is a partial list of people who live on land that has been filled or raised by pumping the sand from the bottom of the bay onto the same, just as it has been done at Dinner Key:

Robert Henkel, of Detroit, Mich. (millionaire flour manufacturer), cost of home estimated at $50,000.

Mr. Gray (wealthy winter tourist), cost of home at Belle Isle, $25,000.

Mr. Mulford (weathy winter tourist), cost of home on Belle Isle, $25,000.

Mr. McCutcheon (wealthy winter tourist), cost of home on Belle Isle, $25,000.

The Belle Isle fill was made by Mr. Carl G. Fisher, of Indianapolis, Ind., who sold these tracts of land to the parties mentioned.

Mr. James Deering's palatial million-dollar home was built largely on filled land and practically all of his grounds fronting on Biscayne Bay were at one time a swamp, the same as at Dinner Key.

Mr. Arthur Curtis James, of Phelps, Dodge & Co. His home while built on high land, the front part of the place for about 1,000 feet is all filled land.

Mr. W. J. Matheson, of the Corn Products Refining Co. His home in Point View subdivision is all filled land, being at one time the bottom of Biscayne Bay.

Mr. L. T. Highleyman, president of the Fidelity Bank & Trust Co., recently sold his home in Point View for $60,000.

Mr. E. C. McGraw, president of the McGraw Tire & Rubber Co., of Palestine, Ohio, has a home there which cost between $50,000 and $75,000.

Mr. J. P. Logan has a similar home.

In fact, Point View has a great many residences costing from $5,000 to $20,000.

In Miramar, another high-class residential subdivision, which is practically all filled land:

Mr. E. C. Hinnmann, of Battle Creek, Mich., owns a home in Miramar.

Mr. Van Camp, of Indianapolis, Ind., and Mr. W. P. Adams, of Chicago, and a number of others, including Mr. E. C. Romfh, president of the First National Bank, have homes costing from $5,000 to $20,000.

PROOF IN CASE OF DEATH OF SOLDIERS.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask the Senator from North Carolina to yield to me for just a moment to submit a report upon a bill from the Finance Committee and to ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will state, Mr. President, that the only object of the bill is to dispense with the usual requirements of proof of death in the case of soldiers who are insured by the United States Government. It provides that the report from the War Department, that is, the certificate of the Adjutant General to the effect that they have been killed in action, shall be sufficient to prove the death.

I report from the Committee on Finance favorably without amendment the bill (S. 3475) to prescribe a requisite form of proof of death under policies or contracts of insurance covering the lives of persons in or serving with or attached to the military forces of the United States, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 361) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in all cases arising under policies or contracts of insurance covering the lives of members of the military or naval forces of the United States or the lives of persons serving with or attached to such forces, proof of death of insured shall be deemed to be complete, either in an action in any court of the United States or of the States and Territories thereof, or in any formal proof of death required in any policy or contract to be presented to the insurer by or on behalf of the beneficiary, when there shall be presented in such court or to such insurer a certificate of death executed by The Adjutant General of the Army of the United States setting forth the following facts:

First, name of deceased; second, rank or designation of the deceased; third, name of organization of which deceased was a member, or with which he was serving or to which he was attached; fourth, that deceased has been officially reported as having been killed in action or as having died from other causes or has been officially reported missing, and that after full inquiry no information has been obtained which would indicate that he is not dead and that it has, therefore, been presumed for official purposes that he died on or since the date he was thus missed; fifth, the date on which the deceased was officially reported to have been killed or to have died from other causes or to have been missing; and sixth, the name and address of next of kin as given by deceased upon entering the service.

SEC. 2. That in all cases where the insurer, upon proof of death made as in section 1 hereof provided, shall voluntarily pay to the beneficiary the amount due under the policy or contract of insurance, and it shall subsequently be established that the insured is alive, and the beneficiary shall, on demand made therefor, refuse or fail to refund to the insurer the amount of the payment so made, then there shall be paid to the insurer, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the amount by which the payment so made to the said beneficiary shall exceed the actuarial reserve maintained by the insurer in respect to such policy or contract of insurance at the date on which the said payment is made: Provided, That as a condition precedent to the payment by the United States of the amount aforesaid to said insurer, said insurer shall assign to the United States all its claim and right of action against said beneficiary for a refund and repayment of the amount paid as aforesaid to such beneficiary.

SEC. 3. That The Adjutant General of the Army be, and he hereby is, directed upon request from any person claiming to be a beneficiary under a contract or policy of insurance mentioned in section 1 of this act to furnish to such beneficiary the certificate of death provided for in section 1 of this act in all cases where the records of his office disclose that the person alleged to have been thus insured is dead or is presumed for official purposes to be dead.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUNISHMENT OF SEDITIOUS ACTS AND UTTERANCES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8753) to amend section 3, title 1, of the act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 15, 1917.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the bill before the Senate is a bill to punish disloyalty. I am going to violate what seems to be the regular order to-day by taking a very few moments in a discussion of this bill. Senators may be shocked at this statement, but nevertheless I am going to talk about the bill itself for just a very few moments.

I am in very hearty sympathy with the purposes of this bill. The object and purpose of it is to punish the disloyal in our country at this time. Surely this is a high and worthy purpose. Surely it is a purpose in which we can all agree. For myself I had no idea until the recent election in Wisconsin that there were so many disloyal people in this country. If my opinion had been asked before that election I would have said that I did not believe there were 100,000 disloyal men in the whole United States, much less in any one State. When we think of this expression of disloyalty in our country it is high time that we were taking steps to stamp it out.

This bill will certainly go a long way toward stamping it out. If we can not reason with men to be loyal it is high time we forced them to be loyal. A man who has no more sense than to think that some other government is greater or better than the American Government, or that some other constitution is greater or better than the American Constitution, ought not to be in this country, and it is a pity we could not deport him instead of putting him in the penitentiary. The man who is so unpatriotic as to be willing to cast aspersions upon our flag, or upon our bonds, or upon the uniform, or against our Army and Navy, or against the Government of the United States, ought to be put in the penitentiary and kept there the balance of his days. So the punishment awarded in this bill seems to be a very reasonable one for the high crime of which a person would be guilty if he violated its provisions.

Mr. President, in Tennessee, I am glad to say, there is no spirit of disloyalty. I know of no one and have heard of no one down there who is not whole-heartedly loyal to the American Government, to the American Constitution, to the flag, to the Army, and to the Navy, and who does not desire the defeat of the Germans in this war. Our people are intensely patriotic. We have few of foreign birth among us, and those of foreign birth and lineage are for America. The people of Tennessee are perhaps as purely American as any in this country. This law will have no terrors for them, but I believe nothing could please them better than its early enactment.

Mr. President, this is a drastic law. It ought to be drastic. But it is only drastic toward the disloyal. Loyal persons have nothing whatever to fear from it. No one can defend disloyalty at such a time as this or at any time. Our Government has a great task before it. Our Army and Navy are fighting our battles. We already have hundreds of thousands of soldiers fighting for our Government, and our Constitution, and our flag in foreign lands. Surely we should not permit anyone back here in our own country to decry against or defame the very institutions which these soldiers and sailors have gone abroad to defend and protect and are offering up their lives to defend and protect. If we permit it we are not upholding and defending our soldiers and sailors. Surely no loyal citizen will object to this law, and I do not think a disloyal person ought even be heard to make a suggestion about it. If any man or woman is disloyal to America in this time of her trouble he or she should get out or be transported out of America and never permitted to return.

Necessarily in passing a bill of this kind, it seems to me we ought to be particular about the wording of it, as was pointed out yesterday by the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. Accordingly that is the only thing to which I now wish to call the attention of the Senate. I will ask Senators to take copies of the bill and look first on page 2, in line 4, at the words "military or naval forces." It will be seen from an examination of this clause of the bill that it is made an offense to "interfere with the operation or success of the military or naval forces of the United States." This is absolutely right. In line 22 of the bill, on the same page, where we might naturally expect to see the term "military or naval forces," it is changed into "soldiers or sailors of the United States," and so on the first line of page 3 it will be seen that the term "soldiers or sailors of the United States" is used. The term "military or naval forces" should be used all through the bill.

Manifestly there ought to be a correction there. I imagine it was the purpose of the framers of the bill to make it an offense to abuse the Army or Navy or the military or naval forces, using the terms collectively. It certainly is not intended to make it an offense, for instance, for a private citizen, if he should get into a difficulty with a soldier while the soldier is not engaged in his duties, to use an improper epithet toward the soldier or to abuse him personally. In other words, it is not intended to be personal, but it intends to refer to the Army and Navy collectively. I have therefore offered an amendment, which has been printed, striking out the words "soldiers or sailors," in line 22 of page 2 and in line 1 on page 3, and substituting the words "military or naval forces." I hope the acting chairman of the committee will be willing to agree to that amendment. I will ask him to agree to that amendment, because I know that was manifestly the purpose of the committee in reporting it out.

Mr. OVERMAN and Mr. STERLING addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator in charge of the bill first.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not think it would have the effect the Senator suggests, because it speaks of soldiers and sailors as a class. I do not see that there should be any doubt about it.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator will pardon me, I think the same expression ought to be used all through the section; in other words, inasmuch as the words "military or naval forces" are used as in the first part of this section, the same words should be used in the second and third parts where the subject occurs. There should be uniformity, and if different terms are used it will give rise to the view that a different class of persons or that individuals are intended.

Mr. OVERMAN. Suppose some one would abuse soldiers as a class—the Army or the Navy——

Mr. McKELLAR. That would come in under the head of military or naval forces. I think the words "military or naval forces" are better than the words "Army or Navy."

Mr. OVERMAN. Are they not more restrictive?

Mr. McKELLAR. I think not.

Mr. OVERMAN. A person might abuse the Army and Navy and bring into contempt soldiers and sailors as a class, but whether abusing soldiers or sailors of the United States would be abusing the Army or the Navy is a question I want to think about.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator is making a distinction between the expression "soldiers and sailors" and the expression "Army and Navy." My amendment is to substitute the words "military or naval forces," which will have precisely the effect the Senator has in mind. I yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. STERLING. I think there was some reason for the distinction made in the language of the bill. Where it refers to military or naval forces it refers to any "false reports or false statements with intent to interfere with the operation or success of the military or naval forces." When it refers to soldiers and sailors, in line 22, to which the Senator has called attention, it seems to me it refers more particularly to the soldiers and sailors of the United States as such and not to the Army of the United States or the Navy of the United States, and the language might not interfere with the operation of the military and naval forces of the United States. Epithets against soldiers and sailors are in the same class, for example, as epithets used against the flag or the uniform of soldiers or sailors. It seems to me there is some reason for the distinction.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the Senator think that the present provision as to soldiers or sailors was intended to apply to individual soldiers or sailors? For instance, if a civilian stated any thing disrespectful about any particular soldier as a man, and not referring to the Army or Navy at all in connection therewith, would he violate the act?

Mr. STERLING. A reference in an abusive or contemptuous way to discourage the soldiers——

Mr. McKELLAR. That would come entirely under "military or naval forces."

Mr. STERLING. I hardly think it would. I think there is some distinction made there. One is intereference with military operations and the other will not interfere with military operations and yet something that ought not to be borne by people interested in the maintenance of the soldiers who go to make up our Army or Navy.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. GORE. I desire to ask the Senator from South Dakota if he thinks the words "soldiers or sailors" as used in the bill refer to soldiers taken collectively and in the aggregate?

Mr. STERLING. I think not. I think they may refer to a division or to a regiment.

Mr. GORE. If so, then the word "army" or the words "military forces" should be substituted, should they not?

Mr. STERLING. If so——

Mr. GORE. Here is what I had in mind, the incident that occurred at Houston, Tex., which was participated in by a number of soldiers. A number of murders were committed by colored soldiers. They have been court-martialed. I do not know whether they have been executed or not. Would a criticism of the men who participated in that riot and did the killing come within the purview of this act?

Mr. STERLING. I think not.

Mr. GORE. Would it not come within the purview of the act if you merely use the word "soldiers"?

Mr. STERLING. I think that would hardly come within the purview of the act. It would not be an offense for which anybody would be punishable to criticize soldiers who acted as those soldiers did.

Mr. GORE. I take it that is the very point the Senator from Tennessee is trying to drive home. I think the language of the bill would make it an offense to criticize those murderers, if I may be permitted to allude to them as murderers. I think they were convicted by court-martial.

Mr. STERLING. If scurrilous or contemptuous language was used against a regiment or division of soldiers or against soldiers in cantonments—for example, in a particular cantonment—it would be wholly unjustifiable.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will say to the Senator, if he will look at the clause on page 2, line 4, he will find the words "military or naval forces" will do all he is contending for.

Mr. President, I wish to call attention very briefly to two or three other words. I am in entire sympathy with the substitution of the word "intended" for the word "calculated," which question has already been fully argued by various Senators. "Calculated" is not a legal term and "intended" is. It would clear up the situation very much and make everybody understand just what the law is to use the word "intended." In that portion of the bill found in lines 4, 5, 6, and 7, on page 3, about which I asked a question yesterday as to its meaning, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] has introduced an amendment and had it printed, to insert after the word "any," on line 5 of page 3, the words "legal order of any," which will make that clause absolutely certain and will not lead to the result that I feared on yesterday it might lead to. It will clear it up; and I hope that amendment will be adopted. We must not make legitimate criticism of official conduct a crime. This act is to punish disloyalty, not to punish those who want to see the greatest efficiency in prosecuting our enemies.

Mr. MYERS. I should like to ask the Senator a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. McKELLAR. With pleasure.

Mr. MYERS. In regard to the amendment of the Senator from Georgia, suppose some disloyal person would indulge in a harangue before a crowd which would cause some members of the crowd to resist the officer who ordered them to disperse when they were making disloyal remarks, where would the order be?

Mr. McKELLAR. The order would be from the duly constituted authority. He would be acting in his legal capacity, and it would certainly render the person thus inciting and inflaming resistance liable under the bill as amended by the Senator from Georgia, just as it would under the bill unamended.

Mr. MYERS. The Senator means a verbal order to the crowd to disperse.

Mr. McKELLAR. If he had legal authority, it would, whether the authority was verbal or written. If an officer is acting under authority of law, it is immaterial whether his authority is verbal or written in cases like the one the Senator has in mind.

Mr. MYERS. Suppose they were making a disturbance as the result of disloyal remarks, and an officer would undertake to arrest one of them and to take him to jail, and he would resist the officer, where would the legal order be? He would be arresting a man on the spot for violating the law. He would have no legal order.

Mr. McKELLAR. He has a legal order, and the authority for that is placed by the statute in his hands. A statutory authority to make an arrest in the case supposed by the Senator is as much a legal order as if it were written out.

Mr. MYERS. He would have authority of law, but he is not putting in force any legal order of the court. It seems to me to be very complicated.

Mr. McKELLAR. I understand what the Senator desires to accomplish by this provision, and I understand that it is a matter of prime importance in his State. I am inclined to yield to any suggestion he and others situated as he is may make about the matter, but it seems to me it would clear it up and give the exact force which was intended to be given if words were inserted so as to read "any legal order of." To leave it as it is might be to give the clause a scope that is not intended.

Mr. MYERS. In regard to substituting the word "intended" for the word "calculated," suppose a charge were made and a man put on trial for using language in contempt of our form of government and the language was proven, and the defendant would testify that he had no intent to bring our Government into disrepute, and the court would instruct the jury that not only the utterance of the words be proven beyond all reasonable doubt, but the fact that by uttering them he intended to bring the Government into disrepute must be proved beyond all reasonable doubt, how would you prove the intent?

Mr. McKELLAR. All I can say to the Senator is that I think the difference between "calculated" and "intended," as used in this bill, is largely no difference at all. It is the difference between tweedledum and tweedledee.

Mr. MYERS. Let me illustrate it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think either word is all right, and I do not think the difference between them has merited all the debate which has been had about it. The only thing about it is that the word "intended" is a legal term that has been interpreted from time immemorial by our courts and we know exactly what it means, whereas the word "calculated" is not such a legal term. It seems to me that we ought to use the legal term; that is all.

Mr. MYERS. There is this difference: The word "calculated" is used here to qualify the language; it is calculated to have a certain result. It qualifies and describes the language. The language uttered is subject to the word "calculated," whereas "intended" means what the man has in his heart. I think there is a distinction.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not agree with the Senator that the difference exists that he thinks exists about the use of these words. I think it is a very immaterial difference. It does not amount to enough to discuss it, and I am going to vote for the bill regardless of whether the word "calculated" or the word "intended" is used. It is immaterial, in my judgment.

Mr. President, this is all I intend to say about the bill. I think we ought to be careful about its phraseology. I am heartily in favor of the bill. I think it should pass, and I hope it will be passed this afternoon. The debate on the bill yesterday was most helpful and most interesting, and we will have a better bill because of it; but it does seem to me a bill of this importance, when we have had such an illustration as has recently been given us in Wisconsin as to the necessity of acting upon this question, ought to have action, and we ought to take action now. I hope the Senate will pass the bill this afternoon. We ought not to delay it a day longer. We should let the country know that we are a unit against disloyalty.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, it is very evident that there is no quorum present. I am informed that it will be impossible to get a quorum this afternoon. Many Senators are away making patriotic speeches for the liberty loan issue. I have found that they can not be here, and therefore I am compelled to let the bill go over until Monday.

Mr. POMERENE. If the Senator will yield to me for a moment I want to say just a word with regard to the bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. Very well.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I am very much in favor of the bill. In some respects it does not go as far as I would like to have it go. I am obliged to be away on Monday and Tuesday to aid in a small way in the liberty bond sale. If I were here I would vote for the bill. I simply wanted the RECORD to show that fact.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask that the telegram which I send to the desk be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the telegram will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

CLEVELAND, OHIO, April 6, 1918.

Hon. LEE S. OVERMAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The people of Ohio, and I think all over the country, are expressing the earnest hope that the Senate will make this April 6 memorable for national security by passing the pending legislation for adequate punishing of traitors and spies. Effective laws to stamp out treason is the supreme need of this hour that Congress can meet.

JOSEPH DANIELS.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, if there were no objection to this bill I should like to have it passed this evening, but I know there are certain Senators who desire to be heard upon it, and I do not want to press it when those Senators are absent and can not be here. I therefore move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After eight minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

RECESS.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that the Senate take a recess until Monday next at 12 o'clock noon.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Monday, April 8, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, April 6, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou, who art ever constant in Thy ministrations and always interested in the welfare of Thy children, the same yesterday, to-day, and forever; help us to renew our confidence in Thee and make us faithful to our duties, both private and public; that we may fulfill our destiny upon the earth and hear at last the "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

This we ask in the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MAIL ADDRESSED TO AMERICAN EXPEDITIONARY FORCE.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I move to discharge the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads from the further consideration of House resolution 296, and ask for its immediate adoption.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 296.

Resolved, That the Postmaster General be requested to furnish the House of Representatives, if not incompatible with the public interest, information relative to the amount of mail matter which has been addressed to members of the American Expeditionary Force during the past 30 days of the class which has now been restricted in transportation; also information relative to the amount of mail matter that has been sent to members of the American Expeditionary Force by the Committee on Public Information, how it has been distributed, and whether mail matter of this kind has been restricted in further transportation.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

COINAGE OF 50-CENT PIECES FOR ILLINOIS CENTENNIAL.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 8764.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8764) to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the admission of the State of Illinois into the Union.

Be it enacted, etc., That, as soon as practicable, and in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the admission of the State of Illinois into the Union as a State, there shall be coined at the mints of the United States 50-cent pieces to the number of 200,000, such 50-cent pieces to be of the standard troy weight, composition, diameter, device, and design as shall be fixed by the Director of the Mint, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, and said 50-cent pieces shall be legal tender in any payment to the amount of their face value.

SEC. 2. That all laws now in force relating to the minor coins of the United States and the coining or striking of the same, regulating and guarding the process of coinage, providing for the purchase of material and for the transportation, distribution, and redemption of the coins, for the prevention of debasement or counterfeiting, for security of the coin, or for any other purpose, whether said laws are penal or otherwise, shall, so far as applicable, apply to the coinage herein authorized.

Also, the following committee amendments were read:

Page 1, line 6, after the words "United States," insert the word "silver."

On page 1, line 7, strike out the word "two" and insert the word "one."

So that as amended the lines will read:

There shall be coined at the mints of the United States silver 50-cent pieces to the number of 100,000, etc.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is that a unanimous report from the committee?

Mr. WHEELER. It is a unanimous report of the committee; yes, sir. There is no objection to this bill at all.

Mr. KITCHIN. Do you know whether or not the committee conferred with the Treasury Department?

Mr. WHEELER. I conferred with the Treasury Department, and I have a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury in which he states he will be glad to coin them if the bill is passed; and also I have a letter from Mr. Baker, the Director of the Mint, saying he has no objection to the bill. There is no expense whatever attached to the Government, and the State of Illinois, by an act a few years ago, appointed 14 centennial commissioners for the purpose of celebrating the anniversary this year of the admission of the State of Illinois into the Union, and they are celebrating it in every county of the State.

Mr. KITCHIN. Of course it is at no cost to the Treasury Department at all?

Mr. WHEELER. None whatever.

Mr. KITCHIN. The State pays it?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes, sir.

Mr. KITCHIN. Does the gentleman know whether there is any precedent for this or not?

Mr. WHEELER. Oh, yes.

Mr. KITCHIN. I mean in the case of a State celebrating the anniversary of the admission of the State into the Union?

Mr. WHEELER. I can not say.

Mr. KITCHIN. I have no objection on that account.

Mr. WHEELER. At the World's Fair in Chicago this was done, and also at the exposition in St. Louis.

Mr. KITCHIN. I understand that the Treasury Department and the Director of the Mint passed on it and raised no objection?

Mr. WHEELER. The Director of the Mint stated to me that he had no objection to this bill.

Mr. ASHBROOK. If the gentleman will permit, I would like to say, as chairman of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, that this bill was considered by that committee and it was the unanimous report of the committee that the bill should be passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the other amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Third committee amendment: Page 2, line 12, insert the following proviso:

"Provided, That the Government shall not be subject to the expense of making the necessary dies and other preparations for this coinage."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read a third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WHEELER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

THE AMERICAN'S CREED.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House not to exceed three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to address the House for not to exceed three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, as chairman of the Committee on Education, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the stenographic report of the proceedings held in the caucus room of the House Office Building on Wednesday, April 3, 1918, on the occasion of the official announcement by the Commissioner of Education, on behalf of the Government, of the award for the best creed of an American citizen. The award was made to Mr. William Tylor Page, a veteran employee of the House, and "The American's Creed," of which he is the author, was accepted in appropriate remarks by Speaker CLARK and former Speaker CANNON.

I desire to say, Mr. Speaker, that this creed is brief, but it expresses the sentiments of every loyal American citizen. I sincerely trust it will be taught in every school and that it will be committed to memory by every man, woman, and child in the United States. I am sure, when I say I want to sincerely and heartily congratulate this efficient employee upon his success, not so much in winning the $1,000 but for the heritage which he can leave to his relatives and children, that I but express the sentiment of each and every Member of this House, and I trust my request will not only be granted but that the Committee on Printing may deem it appropriate to make the proceedings a public document. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to have the proceedings printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, House bill 10887, relative to weights and measures in the District of Columbia, was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. I have spoken to the chairman of that committee, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS], with a view to asking that the reference be changed from that committee to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and I now make that request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks that the reference of the bill be changed from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to the Committee on the District of Columbia. Is there objection?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures is not especially anxious to load up with propositions of this kind, but I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Kentucky why this bill should be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia rather than to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures if it has to do with coinage, weights, and measures?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I would say to the gentleman that if he wants the bill he is perfectly welcome to it. The gentleman from Tennessee wishes to get rid of it. It relates to weights and measures in the District of Columbia. If the gentleman will make a motion to have it transferred to his committee, I will agree to it. [Laughter.]

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the objection. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the reference asked for will be made.

There was no objection.

NEW LIBERTY LOAN.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Indiana rise?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. To ask unanimous consent that the Clerk read a telegram showing how the liberty bonds are going out in Indiana.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks one minute in which to have read a telegram. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the telegram.

The Clerk read as follows:

EAST CHICAGO, IND., April 5, 1918.

Hon. WILLIAM R. WOOD,
Washington, D. C.:

Since 6 o'clock to-night the people of the city of East Chicago, Lake County, Ind., have purchased their full quota, $780,000 worth of third liberty loan bonds, and will purchase many hundred thousands dollars additional before the drive is over.

LIBERTY LOAN COMMITTEE,
WALTER J. RILEY, Chairman.

[Applause.]

Mr. LEE of Georgia rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Georgia rise?

Mr. LEE of Georgia. I ask for one minute to have a telegram read in the RECORD in regard to liberty bonds.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent for one minute in which to have read a telegram in regard to liberty bonds. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TRION, GA., April 6, 1918.

Congressman GORDON LEE,
Washington, D. C.:

Chattanooga County quota third liberty loan oversubscribed to-day. Trion district quota doubled.

N. K. BITTING,
County Chairman.
W. I. BENNETT,
District Chairman.

BUSINESS FROM THE COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I present a privileged report (No. 472).

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 301.

Resolved, That Monday, the 8th day of April, 1918, immediately after the reading of the Journal, be, and is hereby, set apart for the consideration of such business as may be presented by the Committee on Military Affairs, not to include any bill making appropriations for the support of the Army or the Military Academy; and if any bill shall be under consideration and not disposed of when the House adjourns on that day, the consideration of such bill shall continue from day to day, immediately after the reading of the Journal, until disposed of.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to interrupt the gentleman just a minute.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KITCHIN. I suggest that the gentleman put that in the shape of a unanimous-consent request. I am sure that the House would give unanimous consent. Not a Member would object, and it would appear a great deal better that the House gave unanimous consent to the consideration of the bills than to be put in the position to have to get a rule to consider them. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON], of course, has Monday, District day, and I am sure that he will not object.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Next Monday under the rule is District day. I would not object, provided I can come to some understanding with the majority leader that there will be no effort to take the following day from my committee.

The SPEAKER. No unanimous request has been made.

Mr. KITCHIN. I make that suggestion.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I would like to have some expression from the gentleman from North Carolina that there will be no effort to take away the next District day.

Mr. KITCHIN. No. I can say that, for my part, if the gentleman surrenders the coming Monday I would be willing to give him another day.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I am willing to ask unanimous consent, if the gentleman from North Carolina prefers it should be done in that way.

Let me explain what the rule is and the necessity for it. The Committee on Military Affairs has on the several calendars of this House at this time a number of bills—I think perhaps 12 or 15 in all; maybe more—some of them of very great urgency, and all of them are so related to the war as to entitle them to prompt consideration. Now, it is the purpose to undertake to give the committee that day, in order that they may dispose of these bills. The appropriation bill is expressly excluded from that rule, and I may state that the quota bill or resolution—the Senate joint resolution 123—amending the draft law, will not come up on that day, although it would be in order.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Why not? Why should it not come up? That is one of the most important bills we have.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will say to the gentleman that there is an agreement in the Committee on Military Affairs touching that question. It will probably come in under a rule of its own, if a rule is necessary, on Thursday, perhaps.

Mr. MADDEN. If the gentleman will yield, I would like to suggest that there is no more important bill pending in the Committee on Military Affairs, or in the House from the Committee on Military Affairs, than the change in the draft law, and I sincerely hope that there will be no agreement between the members of the Committee on Military Affairs that will postpone the consideration of that bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I think they have already agreed upon the time they will present it.

Mr. MADDEN. When do they propose to call it up?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I think next Thursday.

Mr. DENT. If the gentleman from Tennessee will yield, I think I can satisfy the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DENT. When the so-called quota bill was reported out of committee the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], the ranking minority Member, was called to Wisconsin, and we agreed to hold it up during his absence; and then the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER], who was leading the minority report, was called to Nebraska, and we had an agreement that we would not call it up until he returned.

He is expected back Monday or Tuesday, and as soon as he gets back the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] and myself will ask the Committee on Rules to report that rule immediately, and I hope it can be considered on next Thursday.

Mr. MADDEN. May I ask one further question in connection with it? Suppose the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER] does not get back before Thursday, will there be any further postponement?

Mr. POU. No; there will not.

Mr. DENT. I do not expect to ask any further postponement.

Mr. MADDEN. Beyond next Thursday?

Mr. DENT. I hope it will be Thursday.

Mr. MADDEN. I hope it will be.

Mr. KITCHIN. Permit me to ask the gentleman from Alabama a question. Is the delay in the passage of this so-called draft bill until Thursday, or until the latter part of next week, delaying the actual draft proceedings of the War Department?

Mr. DENT. Oh, I think not at all; Mr. Speaker——

Mr. KITCHIN. It could not do it.

Mr. DENT. Because the arrangements have been made for the draft, and the War Department is not ready yet to fill up camps with the second quota. I do not think it will mean any delay at all in the second draft.

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, I want to suggest to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] that the delay of this bill until Thursday can not delay the draft, because the very purpose of that bill is to place the quota basis on what will be known as class 1 under the new plan of the questionnaire. The department has not the returns from the local and district boards as to the number that will be placed in class 1. They can not possibly proceed with the draft until they get returns from all the local boards and the district boards as to the number placed in class 1. These boards are now classifying these registrants, to place them in the different classes. Some members of the committee thought we ought to have that information before we acted on this bill, because every Member of the House will want to know the number placed in class 1, so as to be able to determine and know the effect of the change.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WISE. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. I want to say that the Provost Marshal General informed me a day or two ago that they have the full returns from all the States except two.

Mr. WISE. Our committee and different members of the committee have been trying to get that information from the provost marshal. As I understand it, he has not yet received and furnished the committee with that information.

Mr. KAHN. He has not furnished it to me, because I did not ask for it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I do not yield further on that matter, which is not involved in this rule, and I would like to make this further statement, and then I will yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY]. The rule provides that if at the time the House adjourns on Monday it has a bill under consideration, the consideration of that particular bill may be continued on the following day until it is concluded. That does not mean, of course, that any other bill except the one pending at the time of adjournment on Monday can be considered on the following day.

Mr. SHERLEY. Right at that point I want to ask the gentleman to yield. It is possible that a bill of considerable controversy may be taken up Monday and then, under the order now proposed, be made a continuing order from day to day. We have reached a point where we have got either to speed up the supply bills, or all talk of adjournment by July or August or September is going to disappear into thin air. There is no use deceiving ourselves, and I do not want to see orders made that are going to interfere with the passage of the necessary supply bills.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Let me say this to the gentleman from Kentucky: It is necessary to pass the supply bills, of course. We all realize that. But surely it is necessary to pass the military bills—those directly related to the present war.

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; but it is one thing to call a military bill one directly related to the war, and it is another thing to bring up a bill of less importance and make it the medium for a lot of delay. We had a bill here last week and spent a full week on it. We are simply wasting days in the consideration of bills that ought to be passed very much more rapidly.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman from Kentucky is quite correct about that, and while it has not been the policy of the Committee on Rules for many years to bring in what are known as drastic rules, limiting the time of debate and cutting off amendments, I want to say for myself that I think the business of this House has about reached the period where we are going to have to make up our minds in the future to vote for rules somewhat more drastic than those for which we have been voting—rules cutting debate to the bone and cutting off amendments.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will yield further to me, the remedy is in our own hands. If we will simply be honest with ourselves and talk only about business, and for no other purpose, we can get through with these bills without days and weeks of discussion. [Applause.]

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Then indeed we will see the dawn of the millenium.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I want to prefer a request for unanimous consent that this resolution may pass. Before I do that I want to yield to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] such time as he may desire. Then I shall prefer the request for unanimous consent that the resolution pass.

Mr. KITCHIN. Without further debate?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Without further debate.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Rules had a request from the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs and the ranking minority member of the committee and other members of that committee, supplemented by requests from the War Department and from others interested in the legislation. The President is urging the passage of some bills that are made in order by this resolution. It is most important that some of these bills be enacted at the earliest day possible. The committee thought that there was no matter more pressing than some bills made in order by the resolution. The Committee on Military Affairs is given discretion to call up bills in the order of their importance and give them precedence in that order. First, the request was to give a rule making these bills in order under a number of rules. We thought the time of the House could be conserved and public business expedited by bringing in a rule making all bills in order in this way. I sincerely hope that the resolution will be agreed to by unanimous consent.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution may pass.

Mr. SMALL. Reserving the right to object, for the purpose of asking a question, as I understand, consent involves the proposition that if any bill is pending and not concluded on Monday when adjournment takes place, that that particular bill goes over and no other.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman is correct.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the resolution pass. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bill:

H. R. 9352. An act to amend an act entitled "An act providing for an Assistant Secretary of War," approved March 5, 1890, and for other purposes.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, announced that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On April 2, 1918:

S. J. Res. 133. Joint resolution authorizing the granting of insurance under the act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, as amended by the act approved October 6, 1917, on application by a person other than the person to be insured.

On April 6, 1918:

H. R. 9352. An act to amend an act entitled "An act providing for an Assistant Secretary of War," approved March 5, 1890, and for other purposes.

PROMOTION OF EXPORT TRADE—CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 450).

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 2316) to promote export trade, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2316) to promote export trade, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 8.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, and 4, and agree to the same.

Amendments numbered 5 and 6: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 5 and 6, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out and the matter inserted by said amendments strike out in lines 1, 2, and 3, page 3, all of section 2 after the word "or," in line 1, page 3; the matter stricken out being "intentionally and unduly enhances prices within the United States of commodities of the class exported by such association," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "intentionally enhances or depresses prices within the United States of commodities of the class exported by such association, or which substantially lessens competition within the United States or otherwise restrains trade therein"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 7: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 18, page 5, in addition to the matter stricken out by the Senate amendment strike out the words "and unduly," and in addition to the words added by the Senate amendment add in line 20, page 5, after the word "association" and before the word "it," the following: "or which substantially lessens competition within the United States or otherwise restrains trade therein,"; and the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2316) to promote export trade, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement explaining the effect of the action agreed on:

On amendments Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 4, on which the House recedes: Have the effect of excluding from the comprehensive definition given in the section of "export trade" the selling of the goods, wares, or merchandise for resale as well as for consumption within the United States or any Territory thereof.

On amendments Nos. 5 and 6, on which the House recedes with amendments: Do not substantially change the act. The language substituted was agreed upon in conference as more clearly and accurately defining the things which an association formed under the provisions of this act could not do and be protected by the provisions of the act.

On amendment No. 7: Is a change in language used to make it conform to the amendments made in Nos. 6 and 7.

On amendment No. 8: The Senate here recedes, which leaves the matter involved as originally passed by the House.

E. Y. WEBB,
C. C. CARLIN,
A. J. VOLSTEAD,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. VOLSTEAD rose.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD].

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the passage of this bill. As I have signed this conference report, a word of explanation seems to me necessary. I have signed the report on the theory that in doing so I was acting for the House in carrying out its views rather than my individual views. In making this explanation I do not desire to enter into any extended argument in regard to the merits of the bill. I only wish to call attention, briefly, to some reasons for my opposition.

I am satisfied that when this becomes a law, if it is taken advantage of by the various industries in this country, as it may be, we shall have, in effect, by indirection repealed the Sherman Antitrust Act. I have consulted a number of different lawyers in reference to this matter, thinking that perhaps in my zeal to preserve that law I might be oversolicitous and mistaken; but I find that, after explaining the bill to them, nearly all substantially agree with the view I entertain. There are Members on this floor who will vote for this report that entirely agree with my position. There are men now charged with the enforcement of the Sherman antitrust law that do not hesitate to express the same views.

Let me say in explanation of my position that the object of the Sherman Antitrust Act is to preserve competition. It has been repeatedly stated by the Supreme Court that that was the prime object in enacting it. Now, how does it seek to do that? It does it by condemning combinations, contracts, and conspiracies to create trusts or monopolies or otherwise restrain trade.

What does this bill do? Instead of condemning such contracts, combinations, and conspiracies it expressly authorizes them and then attempts to limit their operation to the foreign trade. Gentlemen say we are only creating agents for the purpose of carrying on foreign trade. That is not true at all. This bill expressly authorizes every industry in the United States that is engaged in the domestic trade to combine in any way it may see fit. That means that every shoe factory, every cotton mill, every sawmill, and all other industries may combine by a contract as one corporation. When such combinations have been entered into, what becomes of the restriction that they must confine their operations to the domestic trade?

Let me illustrate. Take the cotton industry in the South. This permits every mill engaged in the production of any sort of fabric that has to purchase cotton and everybody else engaged in such purchases to combine for the foreign trade. They will have the power when combined to practically fix the price of cotton in the foreign market or may, to exclude their foreign competitors, make a price for a season's supply. To secure the cotton in this country it will have to be purchased at figures to meet the contracts they make abroad. When they buy it will be impossible to distinguish between cotton to be used in this country for the domestic trade and cotton to be used in the foreign trade. This will clearly eliminate competition.

The same is true of wheat. This will permit every miller and elevator man in the country to combine for the foreign trade. They can go to England, France, or anywhere else, and make arrangements to furnish wheat at a certain figure. When they come to buy wheat in the domestic market for export to fill this contract it is absolutely impossible to make a distinction between wheat purchased for the domestic or the foreign trade. The same will be true of manufactured products. Where is your competition under such an arrangement? Every one in the combination will know at what price goods are sold in the foreign market, as in consulting one with another in regard to cost of production and sale of goods in the foreign trade no one can reasonably expect that this consultation will not inevitably involve a like discussion as to prices in the domestic trade and a like elimination of competition in that trade.

I know the answer to this contention. It is claimed by the friends of this bill that as to domestic trade the Sherman law is preserved. If it is, then you have not eliminated competition in the foreign trade nor relieved that trade from the effect of that law. Courts are not going to hold that this legislation has no effect. Besides, it should be borne in mind that this bill does not even attempt to preserve the Sherman law as to domestic trade. It is not enough under this law, as it is under the Sherman law, to make a combination or contract illegal that its effect tends to create a monopoly or restrain trade. Nothing is said about monopolies in this bill, and it permits prices in the domestic market to be enhanced or depressed, if it is not done intentionally or artificially, and competition may be lessened, unless it is a substantial lessening. It will be practically impossible to prove a violation under language such as that, and courts can not be expected to punish the natural effect of the combination expressly authorized or the natural effect of the elimination of competition in the foreign market.

A law similar to this could have been drafted that would have given to foreign commerce practically every advantage that this is expected to give, and that at the same time would have kept our domestic commerce subject to the provisions of the Sherman Antitrust Act.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. SLOAN. Does this bill seek to give advantage to foreign trade over domestic trade, giving a sanctity to the trade of foreigners over that of the trade of our own people?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No; this bill undertakes to relieve the foreign trade from the provisions of the Sherman Antitrust Act, but in doing that it authorizes combinations that must of necessity have a like effect upon the domestic trade, because you can not separate the two. They are inseparable.

Mr. SLOAN. Is that the professed object of the bill?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No; the professed object of the bill is simply to affect the foreign trade.

I am in sympathy with some legislation along this line, and if gentlemen will take the report submitted by the Trade Commission in support of this measure they will find suggestions in that report for a bill that I think would have given practically all of the advantages of this bill and at the same time made reasonably safe the situation here at home.

Mr. WALDOW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. WALDOW. Do I understand that this is to be a permanent law?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. This is to be permanent law. Let me call attention, in conclusion, to this situation: To-day throughout this country there undoubtedly are violations of the Sherman antitrust law right and left. There is no question but that profiteering of the most outrageous character is going on, profiteering through combinations and contracts of the very kind you are authorizing here. This will give them the right to continue that sort of profiteering. Some day I believe the American people will wake up to what this Congress is doing and resent it. I do not believe the Sherman antitrust law is the best law possible, but it is the only thing we have to restrain profiteering. I believe the time is coming when we shall have to pass a different kind of law from the Sherman Antitrust Act, but until we pass it we ought to preserve what we have. If we want to repeal it, we ought to do it openly and not in the guise of an export law.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, the argument of my friend from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] might well have been directed against the original passage of the bill, but certainly not against this conference report, because your conferees have acted under the direction of the House, as it passed by a vote of 240 to 26, I think. We have acted strictly in accordance with the direction of the House, and I do not care at this time to take up the time of the House in discussing and debating the merits of the bill, which were so thoroughly gone into when it passed in two separate Congresses. The bill absolutely protects the home market from contemplated or supposed unlawful or trade restraining acts of any of these corporations. In the first place, they are not permitted to do any act or enter into any conspiracy which would artificially or intentionally enhance or depress prices, nor can they do anything which substantially lessens competition or otherwise restrains trade within the United States. That language is a perfect preservation of the Sherman law in all its virility within the confines of this country. The object of the bill is to permit our exporters to do in other countries what those other countries permit them to do, and that is form such combinations and organizations as will enable them to successfully compete with the very same kind of organizations they are compelled to compete with to-day without the privilege extended in this bill. I believe it will be the salvation of our export trade. After the war is over conditions are going to be acute, the times will be critical, and nearly every foreign country permits exporters to combine for the very purpose of underselling the American exporters in every market of the world. If we are not permitted to let our exporters use the same kind of ammunition and weapons we might as well ask our exporters to tear down their factories and confine their production to home uses entirely. I therefore ask that the conference be agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

WILLFUL DESTRUCTION OF WAR MATERIALS—CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 470).

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report upon the bill (S. 383) to punish the injury to war materials, war utilities, and war premises, and, as I think the House will understand the matter better if the statement be read rather than the report, I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman calls up a conference report and asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement of the conferees.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 383) to punish the destruction or injuring of war material and war transportation facilities by fire, explosives, or other violent means, and to forbid hostile use of property during time of war, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House striking out all after the enacting clause, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"That the words 'war material,' as used herein, shall include arms, armament, ammunition, live stock, stores of clothing, food, foodstuffs, or fuel; and shall also include supplies, munitions, and all other articles of whatever description, and any part or ingredient thereof, intended for, adapted to, or suitable for the use of the United States, or any associate nation, in connection with the conduct of the war.

"The words 'war premises,' as used herein, shall include all buildings, grounds, mines, or other places wherein such war material is being produced, manufactured, repaired, stored, mined, extracted, distributed, loaded, unloaded, or transported, together with all machinery and appliances therein contained; and all forts, arsenals, navy yards, camps, prisons, or other military or naval stations of the United States, or any associate nation.

"The words 'war utilities,' as used herein, shall include all railroads, railways, electric lines, roads of whatever description, railroad or railway fixture, canal, lock, dam, wharf, pier, dock, bridge, building, structure, engine, machine, mechanical contrivance, car, vehicle, boat, or aircraft, or any other means of transportation whatsoever, whereon or whereby such war material or any troops of the United States, or of any associate nation, are being or may be transported either within the limits of the United States or upon the high seas; and all dams, reservoirs, aqueducts, water and gas mains and pipes, structures and buildings, whereby or in connection with which water or gas is being furnished, or may be furnished, to any war premises or to the military or naval forces of the United States, or any associate nation, and all electric light and power, steam or pneumatic power, telephone and telegraph plants, poles, wires, and fixtures and wireless stations, and the buildings connected with the maintenance and operation thereof used to supply water, light, heat, power, or facilities of communication to any war premises or to the military or naval forces of the United States, or any associate nation.

"The words 'United States' shall include the Canal Zone and all territory and waters, continental and insular, subject to the jurisdiction of the United States.

"The words 'associate nation,' as used in this act, shall be deemed to mean any nation at war with any nation with which the United States is at war.

"SEC. 2. That when the United States is at war, whoever, with intent to injure, interfere with, or obstruct the United States or any associate nation in preparing for or carrying on the war, or whoever, with reason to believe that his act may injure, interfere with, or obstruct the United States or any associate nation in preparing for or carrying on the war, shall willfully injure or destroy, or shall attempt to so injure or destroy, any war material, war premises, or war utilities, as herein defined, or, whoever, with intent to injure, interfere with, or obstruct the United States or any associate nation in preparing for or carrying on the war shall conspire to prevent the erection or production of such war premises, war material, or war utilities, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 30 years, or both.

"SEC. 3. That nothing herein shall be construed as making it unlawful for employees to agree together to stop work or not to enter thereon with the sole and bona fide purpose of securing better wages or conditions of employment.

"SEC. 4. That when the United States is at war, whoever, with intent to injure, interfere with, or obstruct the United States or any associate nation in preparing for or carrying on the war, or whoever, with reason to believe that his act may injure, interfere with, or obstruct the United States or any associate nation in preparing for or carrying on the war, shall willfully make or cause to be made in a defective manner, or attempt to make or cause to be made in a defective manner, any war material, as herein defined, or any tool, implement, machine, utensil, or receptacle used or employed in making, producing, manufacturing, or repairing any such war material, as herein defined, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 30 years, or both."

And the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the title, and agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 383) to punish the destruction or injuring of war material and war transportation facilities by fire, explosives, or other violent means, and to forbid hostile use of property during time of war, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement explaining the effect of the action agreed on:

The Senate recedes from the amendment of the House striking out all of the bill after the enacting clause and substituting therefor the bill as agreed upon in the House, with certain minor changes and additions.

The definition of "war material," in the first paragraph of section 1, is enlarged so as to include live stock, stores of clothing, foodstuffs, or fuel, also munitions and any part or ingredient of the things included in the definition, and defines the use by the words "intended for, adapted to, or suitable for the use of the United States, or any associate nation, in connection with the conduct of the war."

In the third paragraph of section 1 the words "about to be" are changed to "may be," so as to make the clause limiting "war utilities" read, "whereon or whereby such war material or any troops of the United States, or of any associated nation, are being or may be transported," etc. It is further amended so as to include water and gas mains, etc., by which water and gas is being furnished or may be furnished to any war premises as well as to the military and naval forces of the United States as originally provided in the House substitute.

Section 3 of the House amendment was changed so as to limit the purposes of agreeing together to stop work or not enter thereon to cases for the sole and bona fide purpose of securing better wages or conditions of employment.

A. J. VOLSTEAD,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary yield for a question?

Mr. WEBB. With pleasure; yes, sir.

Mr. WALSH. I have been unable to get a copy of the bill as it appears as amended by the House. I notice in the definition of "war premises," in the first page of the conference report, a definition of "war premises" includes forts, arsenals, navy yards, camps, prisons, or other military or naval stations of the United States, or any associate nation, as war premises. Now, in the section providing for a penalty it is provided that whoever should destroy war materials being made upon war premises or inflicts damage to war premises should be subject to a fine of $10,000 or imprisonment for not more than 30 years, or both. Was that in the bill as reported by the House committee?

Mr. WEBB. Yes, sir; I will say to my friend that is the exact language used in the House Judiciary Committee substitute which was offered and which the House passed. The conferees did not change a line or word of that definition of war premises. I can explain to my friend the several changes that we made, if he desires, in the definition of "war materials." The chief change was the definition of war materials.

Mr. WALSH. Putting in live stock, stores of clothing, and so forth?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. But under the bill as now reported if a citizen of Brazil should enter into an arsenal or fort in Canada and undertake to interfere with some war material over there, upon the Canadian property, and should come back and be passing through the United States, he could be arrested and convicted for interfering with Canadian property in Canada which was designed to be used in the conduct of this war. In other words, he could be arrested and convicted for an offense committed in a foreign country?

Mr. WEBB. Oh, no; I do not think so at all, I will say to my friend, because the words "United States" are defined in the bill and the act must be committed in the United States, as thus defined.

Mr. WALSH. But war premises includes like premises in a foreign country, and it is made a crime to destroy property in a foreign country.

Mr. WEBB. Oh, not at all. We can not legislate extraterritorially, as we say. The only case where we thus legislate is for a United States court in China, which we have extraterritorially over there, but we could not make a criminal law operate extraterritorially, except by treaty.

Mr. WALSH. Now, if the gentleman will listen to the reading of this concluding part of section 2:

> And all forts, arsenals, navy yards, camps, prisons, or other military or naval stations of the United States, or any associate nation.

Now, an arsenal in Canada is war premises under this act.

Mr. WEBB. No. The definition of "United States" would cover that and includes the Canal Zone and all territory and waters, continental and insular, subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, and certainly no Canadian territory would be subject to the jurisdiction of the United States.

Mr. WALSH. I am not contending that Canadian territory would be subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, but under section 2 of this measure you are making a Canadian arsenal or Canadian fort or a British fort or a French fort or an Italian fort war premises, and in the further provision of this bill you impose a penalty for acts committed on war premises. My inquiry was prompted by the thought that that was not just as it was passed by the House committee in its original form.

Mr. WEBB. I can say to my friend that is the identical language that the Judiciary Committee presented to the House and which the House adopted.

Mr. WALSH. It was not in the original Senate bill, and my recollection was that we agreed to the language of the Senate bill in considering the bill in the Judiciary Committee of the House.

Mr. WEBB. The gentleman remembers that the House Judiciary Committee rewrote the Senate bill 383, because that confined these injuries to fire and violence. Now, we struck out the idea of fire and violence and make a man guilty of a crime if he in any way injures any of these war premises or war utilities or war material where he has reasonable ground to believe that such injury might impede or retard the progress of the war. We have made the bill very broad and under it it seems to me that every man who is charged with sabotage, or whatever it is—I have never learned exactly what the word means, but it has been used frequently and I think I have the idea—so every act, whether it be violence or by stealth, which may injure the prosecution of the war, will be caught under this bill because it is very, very broad.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, the gentleman appreciates that I in no way in the past opposed the measure——

Mr. WEBB. Not at all. I know the gentleman desired to perfect it, and helped to do so in the committee.

Mr. WALSH. But my recollection was when this matter came up in the committee the words "or any associate nation" were not included, but I know the recollection of the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary is probably accurate.

Mr. WEBB. I will say to my friend the Judiciary Committee of the House put the words "or any associate nation" in the bill. They were put in because we thought it was necessary, as they had arsenals and manufacturing plants over here just as useful in the progress of the war as ours, and we put in a new section providing that any man who designedly makes false or defective tools or machinery for the purpose of delaying the progress of the war, we get him and make him guilty of a like crime. If there are no further questions, Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to have a vote on the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

AMENDING SECTION 4067, REVISED STATUTES—CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 467).

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the House conferees I desire to call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 9504, and I ask that the statement, which is very brief, be read instead of the report. It explains the conference report. I can explain it very briefly, but it is explained in the statement of the conferees.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the conference report. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The statement was read.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9504) to amend section 4067 of the Revised Statutes by extending its scope to include women, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 3.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1 and 2, and agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9504) to amend section 4067 of the Revised Statutes by extending its scope to include women, submit the following written statement explaining the effect of the action agreed on:

On amendments Nos. 1 and 2: Simply transpose the word "a," so as to make the text read "a declared war" instead of "declared a war." The House recedes on these amendments.

On amendment No. 3: The Senate recedes on this amendment. The Senate having added no other amendments, the act is left as it passed the House with the exception of the slight change made by amendments Nos. 1 and 2.

E. Y. WEBB,
C. C. CARLIN,
A. J. VOLSTEAD,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill amending section 4067 of the Revised Statutes so as to include women among alien enemies. The bill we present here to-day for your adoption is just exactly like it passed the House originally. The Senate amended it, but the Senate receded.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

OVERSUBSCRIPTION TO LIBERTY BONDS, HAINES CITY, FLA.

Mr. DRANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for one minute in order to read a telegram.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

HAINES CITY, FLA., 11.01 p. m., April 5, 1918.

Hon. HERBERT J. DRANE,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.:

We are pleased to report to you one second after 12 o'clock a. m., eastern time, that 70 citizens of Haines City, Polk County, Fla., have subscribed to the third liberty loan $22,300, which is over three times our allotted quota.

STATE BANK OF HAINES CITY.

[Applause.]

Mr. DRANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 458).

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 9314) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service, and ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9314) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read the statement.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9314) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 4 and 9.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 6, 7, 8, 10, 11, and 14, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 3: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$37,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "$8 per day"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendments numbered 12 and 13: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 12 and 13, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amended paragraph insert the following:

"LEGATION BUILDING AT SAN SALVADOR.

"For the erection at the city of San Salvador on ground presented by the Government of Salvador of a suitable building, to be constructed of reinforced concrete, for the use of the legation to Salvador, both as a residence of the minister and for the offices of the legation, $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, said sum to include $10,000 for the purchase of the necessary furniture for the building: Provided, That the President is hereby authorized to accept on behalf of the United States the plot of ground graciously presented by the Government of Salvador as the site for the erection of a legation building or buildings."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9314) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report as to each of the said amendments, namely:

On No. 1: Corrects a total in the bill as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 2: Fixes the rate of not exceeding 10 cents per mile to diplomatic and consular officers in going to and returning from their posts as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 3: Appropriates $37,500 for the International Boundary Commission, United States and Mexico, instead of $47,500 as proposed by the House and $25,000 as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 4 and 5: Strikes out the per diem allowance for the commission on the boundary line work, Alaska and Canada and the United States and Canada, as proposed by the Senate, and fixes the subsistence allowance of the commissioner when absent from Washington on official business at $8 per day as proposed by the Senate instead of $6 as proposed by the House.

On No. 6: Fixes the allowance for actual expenses of the judge of the United States Court for China when sessions of the court are held at other cities than Shanghai at $5 per day as proposed by the Senate instead of $10 per day as proposed by the House.

On No. 7: Appropriates $25,000 for the International High Commission as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 8: Strikes from the bill the provision authorizing a representative of the International Geodetic Association to vote with representatives from other nations as proposed by the House.

On No. 9: Restores to the bill the provision as proposed by the House making certain unexpended balances of appropriations for the Fifteenth International Congress available until expended.

On Nos. 10 and 11: Limits the pay of post allowances to consular and diplomatic officers to those stationed in belligerent countries and countries contiguous thereto, and reduces the appropriation therefor from $800,000, as proposed by the House, to $700,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 12 and 13: Appropriates $50,000 for the public building at San Salvador, $10,000 of which to be expended for furniture therefor, and makes certain verbal corrections in the bill.

On No. 14: Appropriates $2,000 for an addition to the legation building at Peking, China, as proposed by the Senate.

H. D. FLOOD,
J. CHARLES LINTHICUM,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Virginia yield for a question?

Mr. FLOOD. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman state the difference in the amounts for this building at San Salvador between, when it passed the House originally, and what is now provided in the report?

Mr. FLOOD. There is $10,000 difference in the appropriation. It is $10,000 less. The amendment as it was finally adopted by the House was not very clear, but what we intended to do was to appropriate $60,000 for the building and furnishings. The conference report provides for $50,000, $10,000 to be used for the furniture and $40,000 for the building—a difference of $10,000.

Mr. WALSH. Did not the original bill as passed by the House carry $60,000 for the building and $40,000 for the furniture?

Mr. FLOOD. The amendment adopted by the House was not clear, but the purpose of the House was to appropriate $60,000, not $100,000, and that was an increase over the reports of the committee, but our purpose was to appropriate $60,000 for the house and all.

Mr. WALSH. And the conferees have agreed upon $50,000?

Mr. FLOOD. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. This was the one that was to be erected in that ant country?

Mr. FLOOD. They had to have concrete.

Mr. WALSH. They had to have concrete on account of the appetite of the ants?

Mr. FLOOD. Yes.

Mr. GILLETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOOD. Yes.

Mr. GILLETT. I notice that the minority representative did not sign the conference report. Did he not agree to the report?

Mr. FLOOD. He was not present.

Mr. GILLETT. He did not object?

Mr. FLOOD. I do not think so. He was for all the items as they went through the House.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FLOOD. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. I was not paying strict attention to the reading of the report. I think I heard something about a legation building at Peking, China.

Mr. FLOOD. Just an improvement.

Mr. BRITTEN. Was that carried in the House bill?

Mr. FLOOD. No.

Mr. BRITTEN. It was inserted in the Senate. How much money?

Mr. FLOOD. Two thousand dollars.

Mr. BRITTEN. I would like to say that the building is in a bad state of repair, with wooden bathtubs full of slivers, a building falling apart and the foundation rotting away.

Mr. FLOOD. The Department of State made no representation to the House in reference to the improvements, but did make them to the Senate, and asked for $2,000 for improvements, which was allowed by the Senate and concurred in by the House conferees.

Mr. WALDOW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOOD. I will.

Mr. WALDOW. In changing the appropriation for building at San Salvador, you have not changed the specification of the building itself in any way? Is it still going to be a concrete building?

Mr. FLOOD. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

RIVERS AND HARBORS.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the river and harbor bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the rivers and harbors bill. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 57, noes 0.

So the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10069, with Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10069) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, it was agreed that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KENNEDY] would use some time.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. WATSON of Virginia having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Young, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2316) to promote export trade, and for other purposes.

RIVERS AND HARBORS APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY]. [Applause.]

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, this rivers and harbors bill comes before the House at the most important time for such a measure in the history of the country. In the fall of 1917, before the stress of the added freight from war conditions was felt at all, our railroads had failed in their effort to transport the ordinary business of the country. What was true of the Union generally was peculiarly true of the State of New York.

Along the northern boundary of the United States there lie the Great Lakes, the greatest bodies of inland water in the world, all leading down to and ending at the city of Buffalo, and then from Buffalo across the State of New York the great Empire State has constructed the Barge Canal, which ends at Albany and is connected with New York Harbor by the Hudson River.

We are all told to save food, that that will win the war; and we are told also not to eat bread made from wheat flour because we here can eat bread made from corn meal and other substitutes, and the wheat flour can be transported and used, as they are accustomed to using it, on the other side. Most of the wheat comes down through the Lakes to Buffalo, and when it reaches Buffalo, what do we find? We find that that great port, with a tonnage of 18,000,000 tons annually, has so narrow an entrance, only 200 feet, that navigators are afraid to bring their big boats in, and they end and begin each trip in terror of disaster.

However, the War Department and the committee said to us, when we urged that situation, that they had removed one obstacle to navigation at Buffalo—the Lackawanna coal trestle, and that we could wait another year to see what the effect of that was and what we needed, and although a year is a long time, and although commerce is rapidly growing, and although the Barge Canal will be used for the first time and increase tonnage immensely, we have acquiesced in that decision, and are willing to wait another year and run these constantly increasing perils.

But down at the other end of the State of New York there is quite a different situation. Along in May of last year, after war had been declared, the Secretary of the Navy wrote a letter to the chairman of this committee, and I want to read that letter:

Hon. JOHN H. SMALL, M. C., NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington.
Chairman Committee on Rivers and Harbors,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SMALL: In a letter of May 7, 1917, regarding the approaches to the navy yard at New York, I quoted from the General Board as follows:

"Deepen, widen, and straighten channels through Hell Gate to Long Island Sound to a depth of 35 feet, and eventually to 40 feet, with a channel adapted to the use of vessels up to 1,000 feet in length."

While deepening and straightening the channel through Hell Gate will be of unquestioned advantage to the commercial interests of the country, the strategic value to the Navy is so great that I believe consideration should be given to securing this channel of 40 feet depth at the present time. While in the beginning a concession was made to obtain a depth of 35 feet and ultimately 40 feet, it is considered that it would be highly desirable, both from an economical standpoint and from a strategical standpoint, to have the work, after it was once begun, continued until the depth of 40 feet had been obtained throughout, and the straightening of the channel, in order to allow the easy and free passage of large ships as well as to prevent the formation of tidal eddies and currents, had been accomplished.

It will be readily understood that with a 40-foot depth of channel leading to the navy yard from the south and an equal depth through Hell Gate would practically double the strength of our fleet if concentrated in Long Island Sound, for the reason that the exits at Ambrose Channel and Montauk Point are so far apart that it would take double the force to contain our fleet in these waters in order to guard the outlets at both of these points to prevent the egress of our fleet.

A deep channel through each entrance is desired in order to permit of the passage of vessels at all stages of the tide and without undue risk to the large and very expensive battleships of the near future, and also to permit the passage of these vessels through either entrance after having been injured in an engagement off the coast in the immediate vicinity. New York, being the center of commercial interests on our coast and the great commercial activity and wealth extending particularly to the northward of this point, increases the probability of an engagement somewhere in the vicinity of the eastern end of Long Island Sound. This also increases the desirability of having a deep channel through Hell Gate in order to carry a vessel or vessels safely through that may have been injured in an engagement in the vicinity of Block Island or Montauk Point.

Sincerely, yours, JOSEPHUS DANIELS.

That was transmitted with a letter from the Secretary of War, which also indorsed the immediate 40-foot project, and requested the committee to make an amendment to insure 40 feet at once instead of 35 feet now and 5 more later. That letter reads as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, May 15, 1917.

Mr. JOHN H. SMALL,
Chairman Committee on Rivers and Harbors,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. SMALL: In the river and harbor bill, which I ventured to send for the consideration of your committee and for introduction into the House, I undertook, as you know, to provide for the continuance of necessary projects and the introduction of such new projects only as were directly concerned with the national defense in the present emergency. Many very desirable projects had to be omitted in view of the situation, and I have desired as far as possible to refrain from suggesting additions to the program contained in the bill. I have, however, taken up with the Secretary of the Navy the situation respecting the channel through Hell Gate in the harbor of New York, and after a full discussion of the subject the Secretary of the Navy has written you a letter in which he recommends that the bill be amended so as to provide for a 40-foot channel at that point. The bill under consideration looks to a present depth of 35 feet, and my judgment at the time the bill was drawn was that while the ultimate depth of 40 feet was contemplated the present improvement to 35 feet was all that could be at this time undertaken. As the result of mature reflection and in view of the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy, I beg leave to concur in the suggestion that an amendment be introduced providing for the present increase in this proposed depth to 40 feet. In other words, I am seconding the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy, and I trust that you and your associates on the committee will find it possible to make this one change in the proposed measure.

Cordially, yours,

NEWTON D. BAKER.
Secretary of War.

In response to those two letters from the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of War the bill on August 8 was passed containing the following provision:

East River, N. Y.: For improvement in accordance with the report submitted in House Document 188, Sixty-third Congress, first session, and for a 40-foot channel through East River and Hell Gate, in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 140, Sixty-fifth Congress, first session, $1,250,000.

Now, gentlemen, let us bear in mind the order of events. The Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of War concur in a letter in which they ask the immediate securing of a 40-foot channel through Hell Gate, and they ask the committee to frame the proper amendment so that that depth may be secured instead of 35 feet at once and 5 feet later. In response to that suggestion this House and the committee of the House passed the amendment which I have read. And then what followed? After the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy had both recommended the immediate prosecution of the 40-foot project the War Department construes the act which we have drawn under their direction, which we have drawn in consultation with them, to act in accordance with those letters—the War Department construes this amendment, which they have helped to prepare to carry out the intention of the letters, as one which means a 35-foot project now and a 40-foot project later on.

This would be astonishing, it would be amazing, if it were fiction. It is all the more astonishing and amazing to find that it is true, and the most astounding part of it is that the representative of the War Department, Col. Newcomer, a man who stands well in his profession and with this committee, and of whom I have only kind things to say, comes before the committee and displays an absolute ignorance of all the facts contained in these letters.

In the first place, the Secretary of the Navy says that it is of the utmost importance that we have two exits—the one at Montauk Point by way of Hell Gate and the other through Ambrose Channel; that we have those two exits and entrances for the vessels of our fleet, because they may be damaged; there are likely to be engagements there, and the fleet ought to be able to come in through Hell Gate as well as through the other channel.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What is the date of the letters?

Mr. DEMPSEY. The two letters were transmitted in May. The amendment, which was adopted in accordance with the letters, was passed in August.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Last year?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Last year, 1917; and the testimony to which I am now going to refer, the testimony of Col. Newcomer, was given in 1918. He absolutely knows nothing about it. He testified to the contrary of both letters. I am going to call attention to his testimony. I examined him before the committee. I read:

Mr. DEMPSEY. What is the draft of the largest battleship, * * *?
Col. NEWCOMER. The heaviest draft is about 32 to 33 feet. That is the normal boat in normal condition. Of course, damaged they might draw more.
Mr. DEMPSEY. Suppose that one of those boats was damaged in the sound and wanted to get in that way to the Brooklyn Navy Yard, might it not draw very easily under those conditions 37 feet?
Col. NEWCOMER. I should think that is quite conceivable.
Mr. GALLAGHER. What is the tide there?
Col. NEWCOMER. About 5 feet, giving 40 feet at high tide.
Mr. DEMPSEY. But supposing there was an enemy ship pursuing our ship in the sound?
Col. NEWCOMER. I think the enemy would not get that far. We have fortifications in the sound that the enemy would hardly pass.
* * * I understand also that it is a matter of importance to the Navy to get that 35 feet available, not for handling disabled battleships, but for handling good battleships for strategic reasons, and they want to get that as soon as they can.
Mr. DEMPSEY. How long does the flood tide last, and at what times does it occur—that is, the full flood tide?
Col. NEWCOMER. That occurs substantially twice a day, and it shifts at all times in the day at different times of the year.
Mr. DEMPSEY. How long does it stay at the highest mark?
Col. NEWCOMER. It lasts about an hour.
Mr. DEMPSEY. Then they have 2 hours of high water during each 24 hours; so that if a battleship was disabled it might have to wait 11 hours before it could get in.
Col. NEWCOMER. I do not think that you will find that the Navy is fearing any trouble with their battleships lying in here—

And he pointed to the Sound.

Contrast that testimony with the letter of the Secretary of the Navy which I just read, which says that the great wealth of the United States is located north of Long Island Sound, so that an engagement is likely to happen there; that we must have two exits for battleships; that we must have those entrances and the channels 40 feet deep at once, in order to enable the great battleships that we are now constructing to come in through Hell Gate, and it displays absolute unfamiliarity with the facts, which render it necessary that a depth of 40 feet be obtained immediately. I am not criticizing the colonel. He is simply an Engineer officer. I am coming to that later. We ought not to put upon his shoulders the responsibility of deciding all these questions. I am not criticizing Col. Newcomer. I am criticizing the committee, ourselves. We have a good committee. We have an able and diligent chairman. We have members who attend the meetings. Why should we not adopt a policy of our own? Why should we not have something to say about these matters? Why should we leave them all to a man who obviously is unable to grasp the details and weave them together? Here he comes in and testifies in direct contradiction of both of these letters, which were written just before the amendment was adopted, and both of them written in order to secure the adoption of the amendment. The Secretary of War specifically pointed out that he wanted this single amendment adopted, so that we would have a 40-foot channel immediately, in conformity to the wishes of the Secretary of the Navy. And then Col. Newcomer gives this testimony.

Let me point out another piece of testimony upon this question. Here are these two letters, urging logically, and convincingly showing the necessity for this 40-foot channel immediately. Yet on the 4th of January, in the hearings at page 6, what does Col. Newcomer say about it? He testifies as follows:

We understand that the question of when the 40-foot depth should be provided should be left to the future entirely; in other words, whenever circumstances develop—

They might, you know, at some time. He said it is possible. Of course, he did not know anything about this letter of his chief. He did not know anything about the letter of the Secretary of the Navy. He says it is possible that circumstances might develop—which indicate a need for that, then the estimates could be submitted under authority already given, and Congress will determine, of course, whether it is ready to proceed with the 40-foot project.

Now, gentlemen, that is the astonishing state of the testimony upon which the committee has failed to provide for a depth of 40 feet at Hell Gate, the work to be done at once. And I am calling attention, first, to the right of this House to have its laws obeyed when solemnly enacted upon due consideration, for a most important purpose, to which their attention was directed by the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of War. I am calling attention to the right of the House to have legislation obeyed when enacted under such circumstances, and of such grave import. After we had done what the Secretary of War asked, after we had done that which the Secretary of the Navy said was imperative, a colonel of engineers construed the act contrary to its plain language, contrary to the two letters, as not meaning what it says upon its face, but as meaning that we should have a 35-foot channel, and if eventually Congress so determines, a 40-foot channel. If circumstances should perhaps or peradventure arise, and there became evident a condition—which apparently he does not anticipate at all—then, under those very remarkable circumstances, if we enact future legislation, we are to have 40 feet.

The thing to which I direct attention is this: A year ago, when I had the pleasure of speaking to this House, I said I did not agree with the idea that engineers should tell the committees of this House just what kind of legislation they should pass. I said that if business men were going to build a railroad or develop a waterway they would call upon engineers to advise them as to the feasibility and cost of the project, but they would not dream of taking their advice about the business aspects of it. And yet under this rule adopted by the committee, and adopted for good purposes, the deliberate action of Congress is nullified. Understand, I am not criticizing the committee. I say that the committee and its very able and distinguished chairman adopted this rule with the best motives and for the highest purposes. They believed that they were adopting that policy in order to conserve expenses during a time of financial stress. But in what has it resulted? Why, it has resulted in 21 men, chosen from varied walks in life, with wide and extended experience, whose judgment would have been valuable upon these questions, waiving their judgment in favor of one subordinate employee of the War Department, a gentleman of standing in his profession, whose judgment would be good and excellent upon engineering projects, but I believe that there is not a member of the committee whose judgment would not be fully as valuable, if not more valuable, upon any business proposition. How infinitely more valuable would the combined judgment of the committee be.

Members are sent here from the 435 districts covering the entire country, because the people believe that they will be able to conduct the legislative business of the country wisely; that they will provide for its protection in war and for its happiness and prosperity when at peace. The people who sent us never dreamed that we would surrender the right to legislate to any executive department, much less to an employee. The country needs, in this time of stress and difficulty, the continued exercise of the combined wisdom of this House. The Executive needs us and will need us, and we should exercise diligently and conscientiously the legislative duties which we were sent here to perform. We have no right to delegate them or to yield them to anyone else.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What would happen to one of our ships, injured in the way which has been described, near the entrance to that sound, if the 40 feet of water were not there? That is a practical question.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I am going to answer it in just that way. I developed it subsequent to this letter of the Secretary of the Navy. The Secretary of the Navy says in this letter that this is the most probable place for a naval engagement to take place. Col. Newcomer says that if we have 35 feet it would not do if a battleship were disabled, because it would undoubtedly draw 37 feet. Now, they have there a tide of 5 feet, but it lasts only one hour, twice a day; so that if a battleship were disabled it might have to wait 11 hours, exposed to the fire of the enemy, exposed to foundering, exposed to going to pieces, without being able to get in. The Secretary of the Navy directed attention to that condition and asked that it be remedied. The House, in accordance with that request, remedied it; and then a subordinate official of the War Department, whom I am not criticizing personally, but who can not do everything and can not know everything, not having these letters in his mind at all, construed our provision, made to meet these conditions, as doing exactly the opposite thing. And then the committee falls into his present recommendation, ignoring the letters of the two Secretaries, ignoring all that occurred. These letters were put into the RECORD last year when we passed the bill. All the circumstances and history of the case were ignored because Col. Newcomer says he does not think it is necessary, and he is sure there will not be any battle where the Secretary of the Navy says there is likely to be a battle, because Col. Newcomer says there are fortifications there which would prevent the enemy from coming in, and the Secretary of the Navy says directly the contrary.

Now, I say, gentlemen, we are providing for war. It is a most serious business. We have an able committee with an able chairman. We have members who are conscientious—because the members of the Rivers and Harbors Committee are conscientious—and they attend the committee hearings. If they had taken this matter into consideration, this misinterpretation of the law would not have stood for one moment.

Now, let us take the situation in the city of New York. Ninety-one million tons of cargoes pass through the city of New York, and the values annually run way up into the billions of dollars.

I believe, and we all do, that the shipping of this country is going to be vastly increased during the coming year. We all expect that we are going to have new ships with which to carry all kinds of supplies to the allies, with which to transport our own troops and munitions abroad, and the strain on the harbor at the city of New York at the end of Hudson River, at the foot of the Great Lakes, the strain on the harbor of the seven great trunk railroad lines entering there is going to be increased enormously. If there is one place in the whole world in which America is interested, if there is one place on which the eyes of the United States should be directed in the shipping question, it is that great metropolis of which we are all so proud.

I voted yesterday morning, and I intended to vote—and I voted and will vote with full knowledge—that we should have 40 feet in Charleston Harbor, with only 3,000,000 tons of tonnage, and yet we hesitate to give 40 feet to New York, with 91,000,000 of tonnage. Forty feet to Charleston Harbor, with only a few million dollars of cargo, and we hesitate to give 40 feet to New York, with the value of its cargoes running up into the billions. Now, so far as the State of New York is concerned, we do not know at the present time any North or any South; we do not know any West or any East. We know only the United States. [Applause.]

We ask the gentlemen of this committee, and we ask the gentlemen of the House, to look at this matter in the same way; and we ask it to right an obvious wrong; we ask you to do that which should have been done in committee, and I trust that this committee and the chairman of the committee will recognize the necessity of this amendment and not force an individual Member to propose it on the floor, or, if it is proposed, that the committee will adopt it.

Why, New York is doing its part, and far more than its part, at this time of national stress. The first liberty loan was $3,032,729,000. And how much of that do you suppose the great Empire State patriotically and promptly took? It took $1,108,067,000; one-third of the entire issue was absorbed in that State.

The second liberty loan was $4,617,532,000, and the State of New York took $1,413,045,800, again about one-third of the entire issue.

Of the third liberty loan, the city of New York alone is allotted $900,000,000 and to-day the leaders of the campaign in the present loan telegraphed Washington saying:

We will not take simply our allotted quota, we will not take alone $900,000,000, but we will take a billion and a half dollars.

[Applause.]

Our great State, too, has contributed $29,270,000 to that greatest of all war-time philanthrophies—the Red Cross—which is doing and will do more to mitigate the suffering and horrors of the war than all other agencies combined. It reaches every one of our soldiers and sailors here and abroad. It diverts and entertains them when in camp; it relieves their sufferings on the battlefield; and it smooths their pillows and nurses them back to health when wounded and in the hospital.

New York has not given of its money alone. It has contributed as generously of its young manhood—349,352 men have enlisted in the Regular Army since the declaration of war, and 38,267 of them came from the State of New York; 150,000 men have enlisted in the Navy since the outbreak of hostilities, and 12,900 of them have been contributed by New York State.

And yet, gentlemen, with Charleston with 40 feet, with Norfolk 40 feet, with the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy demanding that we have 40 feet immediately, with this House having passed the amendment upon that recommendation, believing it was clear and could not be misunderstood, a subordinate in the War Department interprets it to mean 35 feet, and says: "Why, sometime in the future it may be, perhaps, that Congress may see fit to legislate for 40 feet." And the committee not inquiring, doing what it believes to be their patriotic duty, adopted the present bill of the War Department; but it is not its bill, it is the bill of a subordinate. The letter of the Secretary of War has never been changed; the letter from the Secretary of the Navy has never been withdrawn or changed. Col. Newcomer says there is no danger, and the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy say that there is acute danger. Col. Newcomer is not in touch with the department. I say, in view of the fact that the honor of the House is involved, in view of the fact that when we pass legislation its terms should be obeyed and carried out, in view of the fact that Col. Newcomer is mistaken in every item of his testimony—I examined him at length, and the other members of the committee did not know what I had in mind; but I had these facts in mind, for I thought the temper of the committee apparently was to follow the colonel of engineers instead of the Secretary—and I thought the proper place to call attention to it was here on the floor of the House, where a great wrong could be righted, where the patriotism, loyalty, and devotion of the great Empire State could be recognized, where we could say that there was no North, there is no South; and that New York with its 43 votes will vote for Charleston; with its 43 votes will vote for Norfolk; and New York says that we have 91,000,000 of tonnage, worth billions of dollars, and we say that we ought not to be left without this protection to our fleet.

It is a serious thing, with all the great wealth of that city scattered along the Sound. The Secretary says that a battle may occur there at any time, and is most likely to occur, and why should not we have protection, so that a fleet can come and go, so that it can come into the navy yard and maneuver and fight strategically through two entrances instead of one?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SMALL. I yield the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I believe in that way you will be doing what the last Congress intended to do. Now, I am going to speak about other matters in regard to New York, but they are of minor importance. What I have been directing your attention to is vital and goes to the life, salvation, and safety of the great metropolis of this Republic.

I am going to speak of some other things, but they are of less importance. I am going to direct the attention of the House to some other improvements in the city of New York when it comes to the amending stage of the bill.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman says that he has an amendment to propose so far as this channel is concerned?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. BOOHER. Will the gentleman please read it, so that we may have it before us?

Mr. DEMPSEY. It is to strike out the numerals "$2,200,000," in line 24, page 2, and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

Six million dollars, and the Secretary of War is hereby directed to prosecute the work of improvement with a view to securing a depth of 40 feet in the channel through East River and Hell Gate immediately.

Mr. BOOHER. Does the gentleman remember the testimony of Col. Newcomer that $2,000,000 is all that could be expended profitably at this time?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes; I remember the testimony of Col. Newcomer, and I remember that in connection with his other testimony. He testified also that there was no danger of any battle in Long Island Sound; that the fortifications would prevent that, in direct conflict with the testimony of his own chief and the Secretary of the Navy. I remember also that he testified that the 35-foot channel was all that was required by the act, and that that testimony was given, although he knew or should have known that these two letters had been written asking for 40 feet immediately. I have in mind also the testimony of Col. Newcomer that the East River channel through Hell Gate would not be used by the larger ships, which is in direct conflict with the statement of the Secretary of the Navy that we need the 40-foot channel for the use of our largest battleships. I had in mind all of the testimony of Col. Newcomer, and while I regard him as a high-minded, honorable gentleman, I think that he is overworked and is liable to make many mistakes. I believe that we can spend the money to make this improvement. I believe that we can make the improvement and have it for use in this war. I believe that it is imperative that we do have it for this war. I believe that Congress intended we should have it, and I believe that this time it should be written in such plain language that he who runs may read, and there may be in the future no misinterpretation, no legislation by interpretation, but simply and solely obedience to the statute and enacted law. There will be a 40-foot channel, except at Hell Gate, as appears from the following testimony of Col. Newcomer, viz:

The CHAIRMAN. So, omitting any reference to the width of the channel, a depth of 40 feet exists (between the upper bay and Long Island Sound) except at Hell Gate and except at Diamond Reef, and the improvement at Diamond Reef is now under construction to a depth of 40 feet?

Col. NEWCOMER. Yes, sir.

A channel is no deeper than its shallowest part. It would be a waste of the work of excavating to a depth of 40 feet at all other points to secure 35 feet only at Hell Gate. This waste should be avoided and this much needed 40-foot channel should be obtained immediately. It will be worth many times its cost in the added protection it will afford to billions of property in and near New York and to the millions of people living there.

Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, as a former member of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors I wish to congratulate the present committee on the bill which is now under consideration before the House. It seems to me that the committee has carried out the express wishes of some of the Members in the last session, wherein we endeavored to have the bill made a war measure. Certainly it bears every resemblance of being of that nature at the present time, and it is a great gratification to me to look over the bill, as I have casually, and find that there has been removed from it by the committee the character of items that caused the criticism some of us made against former bills. It is the first one, I think, of the kind that the House has had before it, and I especially wish to congratulate the chairman upon the auspicious way in which he has conducted the difficult task of the chairmanship of that committee. The work of river and harbor improvement throughout the country is one of great value to the Nation, and it is possible to have a bill of a kind that avoids the nature of criticism that has been offered against it previously. I am glad, indeed, as I say, to be able to most heartily approve of the action of the committee at this time.

The short time that I have remaining I wish to use in reference to the order which was adopted by the House this morning in connection with the soldiers' mail. I introduced last week a privileged resolution, which the House has just recently adopted, asking for certain information from the Postmaster General. The resolution is as follows:

House resolution 296.

Resolved, That the Postmaster General be requested to furnish the House of Representatives, if not incompatible with the public interest, information relative to the amount of mail matter which has been addressed to members of the American Expeditionary Force during the past 30 days of the class which has now been restricted in transportation; also information relative to the amount of mail matter that has been sent to members of the American Expeditionary Force by the Committee on Public Information, how it has been distributed, and whether mail matter of this kind has been restricted in further transportation.

At the time of introducing the resolution I addressed a letter to the Acting Secretary of War asking for information relative to the amount of parcel-post packages that were being sent to soldiers across the seas, and the reason for the restriction. The following is a copy of the letter:

MARCH 28, 1918.

Hon. BENEDICT CROWELL,
The Acting Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: According to an official announcement, I understand an order has recently been issued restricting relatives of members of the American Expeditionary Force sending to them packages by parcel post. I would greatly appreciate information relative to the necessity of the issuance of such an order.

My correspondence indicates that such parcels have been of great comfort both to the senders and recipients. I respectfully ask for full information in the premises.

Yours, very sincerely, ALLEN T. TREADWAY.

As you doubtless are aware, the order of the Post Office Department was issued March 29 and went into effect April 1. That has since been postponed in actual operation until April 15. I sincerely hope that still further postponements, if not entire withdrawal, of that order will seem advisable to the Post Office Department. I have received no information relative to the amount of parcels post or mail matter being sent abroad by the Committee on Public Information, but I am reliably informed that there has been a very large amount of that class of mail matter sent over. My criticism is that that class of mail matter is allowed to be sent to boys overseas, and for what reason? No one knows. They are getting all they want of the knowledge of the war situation and conditions first handed without information being forwarded to them by the so-called Creel Bureau here in Washington; but it is a well-known fact that great quantities of that class of matter has been placed in their hands overseas. Mr. Chairman, if the mails are being clogged by any kind of material and any supplies are being delayed in transportation that are necessary, let us, for goodness sake, stop that kind rather than the home packages from the parents, and brothers, and sisters, and relatives, and friends of the boys in the trenches. [Applause.] If there is one thing that will encourage the spirit of the brave boys over there, it is the feeling that those at home are thinking of them and are remembering them by these little mementoes, whether useful or otherwise. [Applause.]

I fail to see, Mr. Chairman, the reason for the order restricting parcel-post mail to the soldiers, provided this other class of mail to which I refer is allowed to continue to occupy space on transports. Further, the order that has been promulgated by the Post Office Department is so absolutely impossible and impracticable that it would be better to tell the parents and the boys in the trenches outright that they can not receive packages from home rather than use this sort of postal departmental subterfuge, as the order very plainly is. It provides that in order to receive packages from home the soldier must make application to his commanding officer that he desires such an article or articles and that his written request has been approved by his commanding officer and duly forwarded to this country and then is indorsed by a red-tape notice as follows:

This parcel contains only articles sent at approved request of addressee, which is inclosed.

In making public this announcement, the Official Bulletin of Mr. Creel carries the news on the front page of his daily publication under big headlines, and states "wide publicity is requested" of the new order concerning the shipment of parcels to soldiers.

I am wondering how many boys will receive those welcome little remembrances of the dear ones here under any such regulation as this. Could there be anything more absurd than that sort of permission?

Mr. SMALL. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. TREADWAY. Certainly.

Mr. SMALL. I am not sure in my recollection, but is it not true that Gen. Pershing has recommended that the distribution of the mail to our expeditionary forces be taken over by the War Department?

Mr. TREADWAY. I understand, Mr. Chairman, that after the mail reaches the other side our Postal Department avoids any further responsibility by saying that this mail has been transferred to the war clerk, or person with some such title as that. In other words, after the mail is taken across the ocean, they seem to want to shake the responsibility of delivering it to the boys. That is the amount of it.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLACK. In our hearings before the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads we had up this matter of the distribution of mail after it got to the front, and the official authorities stated to our committee that it was the wish of the military authorities that, after the mail reached the boys at the front, that it be distributed by the military authorities. That was the testimony.

Mr. TREADWAY. That is very proper; and I do not think there would be any criticism of that method at all, provided it will expedite delivery to the boys.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I will.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I would like to know whether or not in the gentleman's investigation—I did not hear all of his remarks—he ascertained why there is so much delay in the transportation of mail from this country before it is delivered?

Mr. TREADWAY. I can not positively answer that question, because it was not in the line of the inquiry I was making; I was inquiring the reason for the adoption of the order which was given out but which has now been postponed from April 1 to the 15th, and will go into effect at that time. I received a very courteous letter from The Adjutant General, stating the amount of mail that was being transported to the soldiers, which is of a very large amount, and I will insert Gen. McCain's letter in connection with my remarks. The letter is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
THE ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, April 5, 1918.

Hon. ALLEN T. TREADWAY,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. TREADWAY: Referring to your letter of March 28, 1918, requesting information relative to the necessity of the issuance of an order restricting relatives of the members of the American Expeditionary Force sending packages to them by parcel post, I have the honor to inform you that the amount of mail, parcel post, and boxes, going to our troops in France was growing out of all proportion to the number of soldiers serving abroad. A committee embracing all departments concerned, investigated this subject and found that up to date the amount of such freight amounted to an average of 250 tons per week. This was fast interfering with the handling of urgent war supplies. It can readily be seen that with any considerable increase in the number of men abroad it would have very seriously hampered the prosecution of the war.

Very truly, yours,

H. P. MCCAIN,
The Adjutant General.

But that does not cover the point I am speaking of, namely, the relationship between the people here at home and the boys at the front. I have a large number of letters that have come to me during the past week referring to the gratification of the boys at the front and the relatives of the boys at home at being able to send to them over there these little packages and comforts and so on that have been going. Not only is it a comfort to them, but it actually keeps the spirit of the boy encouraged, as I have already stated, and there should be the very greatest reason from a military standpoint to retain that right and privilege to the boys.

Mr. REAVIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I will.

Mr. REAVIS. In line with the encouragement that mail from home gives the soldier I saw in an English paper in the library not long since that an order had gone out by the head of the English Army that if it was impossible to get both food and mail to the boys in the trenches to send mail.

Mr. TREADWAY. I thank the gentleman for the reference. While they must have physical support in the way of food, the mental and moral support of receiving mail is tremendous. Let me just read a few words of an extract from two letters to a father from a boy in the trenches:

Just received three boxes, lots of letters, and some papers and magazines. Box with cigars and candy; box with rock candy, bakers, and crackers; and box with fruit cake. Wow! Great! You can just believe, mother, I am some happy to-night.

From the same boy a few days later:

I wish you could see the pleasure every box brings to Mac and I, for we share the contents of each other's boxes. I think I have received every package you have sent—thanks to the splendid packing. Quite a few fellows get boxes that are pretty well battered up, but only one of mine has ever had as much as a string broken.

Now, there is satisfaction enough to pay for the transportation of those two boxes to that boy. [Applause.] And so I could continue, Mr. Chairman. Here is a letter from another father:

I have just read with great interest your championing of the rights of the boys who are at the front with reference to their mail matter, and I want to congratulate you on the stand you have taken. The boys at the front will appreciate this, and I am going to make it a point to cut out several of these clippings and mail them to the boys. It is a perfect crime the way the inefficient men in office in Washington are handling this situation. The idea of trying to rob these boys of the only comfort they can get because our Washington officials have not been efficient enough to prepare for this work. I am sure you will feel well repaid for your efforts, having performed such a pleasant task as you have undertaken.

And another, from the father of a young lieutenant:

I was very much pleased to know that you had asked for an investigation of the order forbidding the sending of packages to our Army in France.

One of my sons is a lieutenant in the — Infantry, and we have been sending him certain things regularly since he left here last September. While I can not say that these are absolutely necessary, I am confident that it not only gives pleasure to those who send but also a great pleasure to the men who receive such packages. Of course, if it is necessary to stop this as a military necessity, either on account of lack of transportation or any other reason, the decision will be accepted with good grace. I am glad to see, however, that before this is accepted you have asked for an investigation, and I trust that as a result some means will be found which will enable us to keep in touch in this way with our boys in France.

If it is true that the mails are being filled with literature sent out by the Committee on Public Information, there can be no question that it will be better to stop such literature and send other articles to the boys—

And so on indefinitely through these various letters.

Let me read you an anonymous letter from a mother. She signs herself "A mother of four sons in the Army." The letter is written from New York:

There can be no substitute for the appreciation known to come from a mother, father, brother, or sister's hand. Our boys leave us and go to the other side. We may or may not ever see them again. They go over for a period of two or three years. They are unlike the French or English, who are allowed from time to time, by reason of accessibility, to return again to their homes and see members of the family. With our boys it will probably be never, until and unless the war is over.

That is a very strong point to my mind, that these boys can not have the opportunity for an occasional furlough that the boys of our allies have. They are there permanently, and let us keep in touch with them the very best we can. [Applause.]

A little further on this letter says:

Who would deny that a boy in the trenches will not fight harder while life remains or will die happier when wounded and he feels that his last hour has come, if he has the appreciation warm within his heart of a package which has just come from mother, brother, father, or sister, as the case may be?

It seems to me such evidence as that, coming from the heart of a mother with four boys "over there" fighting for our cause to-day is more worthy of consideration than the request that room be made in the various transportation shipments in order that the Creel bureau may furnish a little more so-called information to those boys, which they do not need. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TREADWAY. Can I have three minutes more?

Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa. I yield three minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. TREADWAY. Possibly there is no need of my using the time, Mr. Chairman. I have so many other extracts, but I will read this one in closing:

I know from their published letters that they need all the encouragement and sympathy that they can receive in the way of letters and useful remembrances from their home folks. My only son is "over there." I have not heard from him for many weeks, and I know what anxiety and longing for news of him means. If, then, lack of news from our dear boys means so much to those at home still enjoying and surrounded by the comforts of life, how much more must it mean to our brave lads battling in that seething hell in France, surrounded by the horrors and discomforts of this wicked war.

And so I might continue, Mr. Chairman. I hope as the result of the resolution the House has adopted to-day that we will be provided with the information which that resolution calls for, and know how much mail matter is being sent by a department of which, it seems to me, we can very readily spare the shipments and allow the space that they are occupying to be devoted to the space that these mothers ask, in order that they may be given the satisfaction of providing these little comforts for the boys "over there." [Applause.] I trust that the action of the House will be supplemented by a reversal of the stringent order that the Postmaster General has had adopted. [Applause.]

I yield back the balance of my time, and I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields back one minute. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER].

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield so that I may have a telegram read?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Certainly; with pleasure. The gentleman wishes to have a telegram about the liberty loan read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the telegram.

The Clerk read as follows:

HOLDENSVILLE, OKLA., April 6, 1918.

TOM D. MCKEOWN,
Washington, D. C.:

I am pleased to advise that Hughes County has gone over the top, having oversubscribed by $350,000 its full quota to the third liberty loan within one hour after campaign opened to-day.

W. T. ANGLIN, Chairman.

[Applause.]

Mr. BRITTEN. If the gentleman will permit, I would like to know who sent the telegram and where it is from. Some of the Members of the House did not hear.

Mr. McKEOWN. The telegram was from Mr. Anglin, from Holdensville, Okla., one of the counties where the antidraft riots progressed last summer.

Mr. BRITTEN. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I congratulate the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McKEOWN] and his constituency on the information just conveyed to the House in this telegram.

The information from all over the country, as disclosed this morning, is that upon this, the anniversary of the entrance of the United States into this war, the people are responding with enthusiasm, not only with their plaudits but with their dollars from their pockets, to sustain the Government in the awful conflict in which we are now engaged.

This is the anniversary of the day on which the resolution was passed by Congress in which it was declared that a state of war existed. As the days of the year have passed and gone, it has been made more and more evident that there was no other course left open to us. Germany's purpose to overrun the countries across the sea and then invade our country is no longer denied by anyone who has investigated the facts. They had already fired upon our flag, sunk our ships, destroyed to a large extent our commerce, ordered us off the seas, and murdered our men, women, and children and were becoming more aggressive and defiant every day, having boldly notified our President of their intention to continue to sink our ships, destroy our commerce, and slaughter our people in violation of all law, human and divine. Of all civilized nations they are the only one who without hesitancy violate all agreements, all treaties, all laws, and all solemn obligations. With such a nation you can not temporize. There is only one course, and that is to destroy it. When the Kaiser is dead, when Germany is destroyed, when autocracy is suppressed and despotism annihilated, then and not till then will the peoples of the earth be safe, democracy established, liberty enthroned, and Christianity made secure. [Applause.] Therefore our task is to help in every way possible to accomplish this result, and we will accomplish it by the help of our God, the God who is always for justice and the right. We must not, we can not, and we will not fail. To fail would bring to us our first national defeat. From 1776 to the present, in all wars in which we have engaged, we have fought for liberty, and always for some sterling principle of right, and have been successful. We fight now for liberty and right, and we shall prevail. We will be victorious. [Applause.]

On this day, the anniversary of the passage of the resolution declaring that a "state of war" existed between the Imperial German Government and the United States of America I desire to put into the RECORD some letters from the boys themselves, showing how they feel about existing conditions. I want to read one, first, written by Dillard W. Brown, Company I, One hundred and fifty-fourth Infantry, Camp Beauregard, La., dated January 26, 1918. I clipped it from the Itawamba County News, published at Fulton, Miss., by Mr. Theron D. Harden. The letter is as follows:

To the people of Itawamba County:

I want to thank my friends for the many compliments I have received on the letter I wrote some months ago. I do not deserve any credit for it, but was glad to know they agreed with me on a few statements I made in that letter concerning this war.

Many changes have taken place since I last wrote you. The fields have lost their golden green, the forests their leaves, and all the beauties of nature have turned to barren waste.

Remember this was written in January, and we know that was true.

This is only a natural change and deserves little notice. The change that is most impressive to me is one that grieves my heart to think of and causes my life to be overshadowed with sorrow. Since I wrote you last several of my Itawamba County soldier friends have crossed death's chilly tide. They were loyal and patriotic and deserve much credit for what they did. It is true that they died of natural causes, but deserve the same honor as the boys who are being slain by the German bullets. If it was in my power, I would erect a monument to the memory of Aud Nabors, Oscar Sheffield, Audie South, Elmer Shields, and Lenard Crouch that would be visible to every mortal eye and place a bouquet of flowers on their graves as a token of love, that would perfume the air with the sweetest fragrance that was ever wafted across the red hills of Itawamba. To the bereaved let me say, "Grieve not; you have paid a debt to your country that deserves respect from every living person, a debt, not of money, but of blood." I realize that it is hard and seems unjust, but I take the same attitude as a Roman mother did. She expressed my viewpoint in this sentence, "I rather have 12 sons die for this country than have one die against it."

[Applause.]

I understand that a great number of boys are to leave for the training camp soon. Let me bid you Godspeed and ask of you to make the best soldier possible. I hope that you have viewed the situation as I have and feel at the same time that you are doing your duty. I viewed the situation in this manner and hope you will view it from the same standpoint. I took it for granted that my father was standing on a distant hill almost surrounded by a desperate enemy. I could see this enemy inflicting severe blows to his body, torturing him in a thousand ways, and taking his property that he had justly won. During this vision I could hear a faint voice calling for assistance. What do you think I did? Do you think I ignored that call; and if I should have, do you think I deserve the name of an honest son? The answer would be most surely, "No." After he had clothed me, fed me, and protected me, advised me, and brought me up into young manhood, should I have resisted the call I would have deserved the name traitor and not the name of a son. Every young American is facing this same situation, and I hope you will meet it as an honest, red-blooded American should. Your country has protected you, has enacted laws for your benefit, has established educational centers for your good, and has made it possible for you to live in a Christian land unharmed and unmolested. Your country is now at war and is calling for your assistance. Are you going to resist the call after your country has done so much for you? Do you think you would deserve the name of a true American should you ignore the call? I can hear the American boys say no; we hate to leave our parents and friends, but we must do for our country what our country has done for us. We must march out like brave heroes against the foes and bring back victory to the old U. S. A. Boys, when you go with that spirit, victory is ours.

I wish for all of you peace, happiness, and good health in the pursuits of life you are pursuing. I leave you with this little poem; the author I disremember, but it expresses my sentiment:

"When the golden sun is sinking
And your mind from care is free;
While of others you are thinking
Will you sometimes think of me?"

Your friend,

DILLARD W. BROWN.

[Applause.]

You never heard a more patriotic sentiment than is expressed in that letter, and I am sure it finds ready response and approval in every heart present in this historic Chamber. [Applause.] This letter was written by a noble, patriotic boy from the good county of Itawamba, the county in which was born my distinguished friend from the State of Arkansas, who now sits before me, Col. SAM M. TAYLOR, who later lived at Verona, Lee County, Miss., and then removed to Pine Bluff, Ark., and now represents the sixth district of Arkansas so ably upon the floor of the House of Representatives. He came from the same character of brave, sturdy, and splendid stock of chivalrous southern people, from which came the boy who writes this beautiful letter which I have just read. No wonder this splendid boy, Dillard Brown, feels such sentiments, having been born amid surroundings such as exist in this good county and among as patriotic citizens as live in America and from an ancestry who loved liberty, righteousness, freedom, and truth, all of which gave him inspiration as he penned those beautiful lines. [Applause.]

Now, I want to call attention to another letter, written from "Somewhere in France," and dated February 9, 1918. I clipped it from the Maben Press, published at Maben, Miss., by Mr. E. Lovett. Now, listen to this letter:

DEAR UNCLE JOHN: You don't know how much I did appreciate your letter. It was such a cheerful one; it sure made me feel good.

Yes; I have quite often thought of the task we have before us, especially since I have been over here. You are the only person I have heard speak of it as you do. The majority of the people over there I don't think have fully realized just how large a task we have before us; it is awful large, I think. But if you people send us the stuff to win it with, there isn't any doubt in my mind but that we will come out victorious.

[Applause.]

This peace talk is just a farce, I think. I don't think there will ever be any peace effected until this kaiserism is downed.

Yes; I would like to come back soon, but we won't be back until we can bring Old Glory unfurled to all the world as the emblem of a safe, sound, and everlasting peace; and if I don't get back when they bring her back as that emblem, you can say, "He gave them all he had, helping to bring her back as the emblem of an everlasting peace."

[Applause.]

And I earnestly ask that all of you pray for me; pray that I may be spared to come back.

I have seen quite a bit of this country and like it all right, but nothing looks as good to me as the soil of the good old U. S. A. Yes; I have seen the place you spoke of. It is magnificent.

Write again and tell me all the news. With love and best wishes to you all.

Pvt. HERBERT E. COOKE.

[Applause.]

Did you ever hear anything better than that?

SEVERAL MEMBERS. No.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. That boy has as true patriotism in his heart as ever beat in human breast. Every word in his letter has the true ring of sincere, genuine love of country and of the right. He, too, sprang from noble, brave, and chivalrous southern stock, who have never failed their country in the hour of peril. [Applause.]

This is published in the Maben Press of date March 29, 1918, and is from a boy from Oktibbeha County, in the State of Mississippi. God bless these boys! God bless all our boys wearing our country's uniform! One of those letters was a message to his associates in the county in which he enlisted, appealing to them to come cheerfully, with the full appreciation of the great dangers which are ahead of them, but still with a determination to discharge the patriotic duty which rests upon one and all alike. The other was from "somewhere in France," sending the message back to us that if we send the stuff to them they will bring victory back and bring an everlasting peace, and that if he does not return when the message is brought back with the flag unfurled to the nations of the world as the flag which came at the crucial moment to rescue and save the civilization of mankind to "tell it to my people from whence I came that I gave my all to bring about this result." No nobler sentiment was ever penned than to tell them, "He gave them all he had helping to bring the flag back as the emblem of an everlasting peace." [Applause.]

This is not only the anniversary of our entrance in the war but it is also the day of the beginning of the third liberty loan campaign. Certainly with boys from all over the United States of America at the front and ready to go the people who stay at home while these boys fight for them and our country, and give their all, will cheerfully and promptly give their last dollar, if need be, to buy bonds and to sustain the Government, and to take care of these noble boys in every way. The man who fails to respond in this hour of peril to say the least falls far short of his duty. [Applause.]

I have done in the past and expect to continue in the future to do, as a Representative in the Congress of the United States, everything on the face of the earth I can do for these boys. I invite and request every father, mother, wife, and sweetheart in my district who has a son, husband, or friend in the Army or Navy to write me and send me the name and address of their loved one thus enlisted in the service of the country and I will do all I can to help him, and in addition I will watch and promptly advise them, if possible, should harm overtake him in this country or "over there." [Applause.]

When I was at home in November I spoke in a small interior town by the name of Hatley, in Monroe County, Miss. After I had spoken in a church there, where I was introduced by Rev. Jeff Rogers, a Baptist minister, and my longtime and true friend, and had a large audience, composed of splendid men, lovely women, and beautiful children, who desired to know something about the war conditions that existed, and I had told them as best I could in my speech, and was going down the road to the home of Rev. Robert L. Birmingham, another good friend of mine, who my friend, SAM TAYLOR, to whom I referred a little while ago, knows very well, to break bread with him and his good wife on that occasion, there was a delicate little woman out in the road pushing along a baby buggy, and in the baby buggy there was a beautiful little child. As I passed by she called to me and said, "Mr. CANDLER, please come here, I want to speak to you a moment." I walked out to where she was, and in substance the following conversation occurred. She told me her name and then said, "I want to congratulate you on your speech." I thanked her, and she then continued: "I was anxious to know what the facts were, and I am glad to receive the information which you gave me."

Then she said to me, "My husband has never seen our baby. He has gone to the war. Do you suppose he could get a furlough?" I said to her, "I do not know, but I am willing to try to help him get it." She said, "I would be so glad if he could come to see me one time more and see our baby before he goes to France." I said to her, "I will cheerfully do what I can and assist you in any way possible to secure a furlough for him, and I hope he may be permitted to come and see you and the baby before he goes 'over there'"; but not desiring to raise hopes which might not be realized, I added, "It is doubtful, however, whether he will be able to come or not." Then, looking up as the fire flashed from her eyes like a Spartan mother of old and with the tears in her eyes shining like diamonds in their brilliancy, lit up as they were by the holy fire of patriotism, she threw her head back and said, "Whether he returns to see me and the baby or not, whether he ever returns when he crosses on the other side, I shall always feel proud of him, because he is wearing the American uniform and is enlisted under the American flag, and has gone forth to fight the battles of our country, for liberty, for democracy, and for truth. If he does not return, I shall always honor him because he went to defend our country from the terrors of a country that is violating all the rights of humanity, and to keep them from coming here and killing little babies like they are doing over there, like mine in that little baby buggy." [Applause.] I am not surprised to see the tears in your eyes, my fellow Members, and to hear you applaud as I relate to you this real and true story.

I tell you the tears filled my eyes and flowed down my cheeks as that noble and patriotic little woman walked away pushing that baby buggy before her, in which she had her beautiful baby, and in my heart of hearts I breathed a prayer to Almighty God to take care of them and the soldier husband and father and bring him back to them safe. It is patriotism like that of the boy from Itawamba County, who wrote the first letter I read, and the boy from Oktibbeha County, who wrote the letter I read next, and the pure and holy patriotism that wells up in the hearts of the women of this country like the good woman at Hatley that is going to bring victory and glory to the American flag and that is going to destroy absolutely the Kaiser and despotism and autocracy beyond the seas, and give to the nations of the world the greatest liberty and happiness, peace, and glory ever known in the history of mankind. [Loud applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman's time be extended.

The CHAIRMAN. The time is in the control of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] or, in his absence, in the control of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BOOHER].

Mr. BOOHER. I yield further to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER]. [Applause.]

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I simply rise to thank the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi for his kind words with reference to myself and to the old county of Itawamba, where I was born. I first saw the light of day very near the banks of the Tombigbee River, which flows through this splendid county.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. That is the reason the gentleman from Arkansas is such an able and useful Representative in this House. [Applause.]

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, the first steamboat I ever saw was floating on the bosom of the Tombigbee River. The reference made by the gentleman from Mississippi to the county of my birth and to the district he represents, where I was reared, touches me deeply. Nearly all of the loved ones of my blood lie buried in the soil of the first district of Mississippi, so excellently represented by the able and honorable Representative, Mr. CANDLER, save one brother, who lies buried in the soil of the great battle field of Fort Donelson, Tenn. I am greatly interested in the welfare of the people of Mississippi, and especially in the people residing in the first congressional district.

When I first came to Congress the very first man to greet me was the friend of my youth, familiarly called here by all of us "ZEKE," who had been here some years before I came. He is addressed in this familiar way by the Members because they all love him and know him to be an honest, energetic, useful, and influential Member. We know that he works hard and looks after the business of the people of his district as well as matters affecting the welfare of the Nation. He is loyal to his country and stands by our great President and our boys in the military and naval service here and across the sea in this great world war with vestal fidelity. It pleases me to so speak of him because I knew of his early struggles in life, which tested his mettle as a boy and developed him into a true man with proper conceptions of the highest ideals and with a sincere sympathy with the best interests of the masses of the people. I am gratified to see him here now as a splendid Member of this the greatest legislative body in the world, always on the watchtower and with energy, ability, and fidelity serving his country and its highest destiny. Were there more men in the world like Mr. CANDLER the country would be safe and we would sooner secure peace on earth and good will to man, the condition so devoutly desired by us all.

May God bless him and give him a long and a continued useful life for his country. [Applause.]

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I sincerely appreciate this high compliment, so generously bestowed upon me by my good friend, the distinguished gentleman from Arkansas, who is recognized here as one of the best Representatives in this House, on either side of this aisle. He is close to us, and we all love and admire him. He has done great service, not only for his district but for the country at large, since he has been a Member of this House. He has many elements of greatness, his splendid ability, his large store of knowledge, his extensive experience, his charming personality and genial disposition; but when all these are supplemented with the fact that he was born in my district, in Itawamba County and on the banks of the Tombigbee River—taking all these together—a reason can readily be found for his universal popularity in this House, and his great usefulness and splendid success as a Congressman. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, now, in conclusion, let me say I am so glad we have no politics or partisanship in this House now; for, indeed, this is no time for divisions, for bitterness, or strife among us, but above everything it is the time to close up the ranks and present a solid front to the common enemy. Every German and German sympathizer in this country should be arrested and interned; every German spy and every traitor should be shot, and nothing permitted to retard in the least the onward march of our brave soldier boys to victory. He who stands in their way in this country or elsewhere is contributing to the shedding of their blood and in prolonging the war, and should be promptly destroyed. God grant that we may all do our full duty and thus be true to ourselves, our soldier boys, our country, and our God, and thus help to secure victory, and thereby bring honorable and lasting peace at the earliest possible moment. I thank you, gentlemen, for your very kind attention. [Great applause.]

By unanimous consent Mr. DEMPSEY was given leave to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON]. [Applause.]

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I was in the House on yesterday afternoon when the speech of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] was made. It is probable that my colleague from Illinois intends to reply to that speech. I think it is only fair to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] that he should be here. I think there should be a quorum here, and I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, may I be allowed——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman withhold his point for a moment?

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes; I will be very glad to.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I understand that if the point of no quorum is made——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Illinois that debate is not in order, pending the point of no quorum.

Mr. BRITTEN. I withhold my point of no quorum.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] seems to have been called from the Chamber for a moment, and I want to state that if the point of no quorum is made and sustained——

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Is this to be taken out of the time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON]?

The CHAIRMAN. No; not at all.

Mr. KEARNS. The Chair asked the gentleman if he would yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair asked the gentleman that question because he is entitled to proceed if he so desires.

Mr. BRITTEN. I assume that we are not trespassing on the time of the gentleman from Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. No.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. No; not at all. I wish to state that I understand that if the point of order is made, and if the Chair fails to find a quorum, it is then the purpose of the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to move that the committee rise, and if the committee does rise, then to move to adjourn, which will close the general debate upon this proposition under the order made yesterday. So that if a quorum is not present general debate will be concluded, and the opportunity for gentlemen to speak under general debate will probably be cut off.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I will say that what I particularly desired was to have the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] in the Hall of the House.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. BRITTEN. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. My information is that my colleague [Mr. HEFLIN] is in Greensboro, N. C., where he was called to fill a speaking engagement that he made some weeks ago.

Mr. BRITTEN. Under the circumstances, Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, I confess that it is with some hesitation that I proceed to reply to the most remarkable performance of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN]. I would much prefer to have him present, as I did him the honor to listen to his "declaration" on yesterday. I will, however, endeavor not to transgress the rules of the House in making reply. It is in keeping with the gentleman's characteristics that he should assail me and then immediately leave town. [Applause.] It is in keeping with his characteristics that he should make a speech assailing me, which he keeps out of the RECORD, so that I can not reply to it because it is not printed. By reason of his past record when he has been compelled by this House to correct statements which he has inserted in the RECORD that were not made on the floor I have no means of knowing now what will be printed, when he gets back, in what is supposed to be his speech of yesterday.

On the 7th of April, from a sense of duty which I could not resist, in the most humble spirit I made a suggestion as to the message of the President of the United States then before us. Mr. HEFLIN, of Alabama, says that it has no spirit of patriotism and indicates that it was such a speech as would give comfort to the Kaiser. I wish to say for his benefit that inside of three or four days the President of the United States again addressed this Congress and abandoned the doctrine of the return of Alsace-Lorraine, and did it splendidly, and in his announcement of the doctrine of self-determination showed that he agrees with the very proposition I made in this forum; and I never was so happy in my life as when I sat in this Chamber and heard that great President deliver the last pronouncement as to the terms of peace, in which he omitted a demand for the return of Alsace-Lorraine and stood strongly and solely upon the ground of the right of self-determination, an announcement by the President that struck the world as fair and right. Even the German Minister Hertling said that they could accept it if they could get exactly the same proposition from France.

And yet, yesterday, Mr. HEFLIN comes before the House and—apparently forgetting the President has adopted that theory—seeks to make a personal assault on me for calling attention to the righteousness of the proposition. Has he answered one single statement I made in this speech? No. Does he claim that I have misquoted history when the Emperor declared war in 1870? No. But he garbles it and grabs from it and then refuses to print his own speech, but distributes himself far away on some patriotic duty. I want to say to you that when he assaults the speech that I made and circulated he assaults the position taken by the President of the United States. I say, God bless the President for taking the position that we do not want to interfere or change the territory of governments of other countries, but stand for freedom of the seas and the rights of self-determination of small nations. [Applause.]

But he says my speech was not patriotic. I call upon you gentlemen to bear witness, you who heard me on that day, of one word that was unpatriotic. Have I ever complained of the Postmaster General or any member of the Cabinet? Have not I defended your Secretary of War when men of your own party have assailed him?

Let me read a few lines from the speech this distinguished gentleman from Alabama says was unpatriotic:

> I see no profit in fault finding, except where the immediate correction can be made without interfering with our preparation for this war, and I regard it as unwise to discuss in party caucuses anything that affects the successful carrying on of this war; nor do I intend, if I can master myself, to indulge in party claims or party criticism

If there has been any of that in this Chamber, I have not been the guilty man.

Again I said:

I pray God that during this war we may be big enough to wipe out this middle aisle which separates an American Republican from an American Democrat.

That was the tone of my whole speech. I simply was pleading for the President to consider the question whether we should go on and obey the demands of France.

Let me quote another word. I said on that day:

We will not abandon for one moment the league of honor with which we, with our coworkers, fight the Imperial Government of Germany.

Let him sometime show one word, one act of mine that has not been in the line of patriotic defense. But he jumps on me. Why does not he jump on some of my brethren on the Democratic side who voted as I did before the war and who stand as I do for everything we have got in the policy of the war? [Applause.]

Cheap peanut politics! He assaults me because I am a Republican and he hopes to make in his district some little cheap capital that he has been able to assault and insult me.

I purpose now to answer him if I have to get down onto his intellectual level to do it. [Laughter.]

I said in that speech, "For God's sake let us quit fighting each other and fight the Kaiser." Does that sound unpatriotic? He complains that I printed my speech. Well, I had to, people wanted to read it. [Laughter.] Some of you cruel Democrats bought them by thousands to read, I trust by reason of its patriotism, and possibly some on account of its literary merit. But he does not print his speeches, he telegraphs them, writes the headlines, and then they are sent back to him to pay the telegraph bill. [Laughter.] In order that you may understand about it let me read an editorial from the the Age-Herald, published in Alabama. Some of you gentlemen I suppose know whether this is a respectable editor and respectable paper. This is what he says about Congressman HEFLIN:

CONGRESSMAN HEFLIN BREAKS ANOTHER RECORD—CONGRESSMAN J. THOMAS HEFLIN, OF THE FOURTH ALABAMA DISTRICT, HAS SET A NEW RECORD FOR RAPIDITY OF SPEECH.

During the consideration of the prohibition amendment Monday the House was under the two-minute rule, which means that each Member was allowed only two minutes to express himself on the resolution.

Monday night Congressman HEFLIN sent to the Age-Herald by telegraph some 2,700 words of his speech, with the introduction, "HEFLIN holds House in rapt attention while he spoke on the prohibition amendment, in part, at follows."

Then the speech began to come by wire. Sheet after sheet of it rolled into the Age-Herald's office. The telegraph editor thought another deluge had broken loose. Of course he is used to handling some 30,000 words of matter by telegraph every night, but he usually has control of the dike and knows when the floods of messages are coming. But Mr. HEFLIN'S speech was simply overwhelming. When the first thousand words had reached his desk he thought surely Mr. HEFLIN had been speaking at least a minute and a half, but as the flood continued he thought the two minutes would soon be up. When finally the end came he sighed in despair and was heard to mutter, "Two minutes! What if he had spoken an hour."

[Laughter.]

Oh, the modesty of this man! [Laughter.] The alleged patriotism of a man who suspects you people every morning when you get up—"I have suspicion of 14 people," and never had the courage to name them.

Yes; he sent the telegram "collect," and wrote his own headlines. "HEFLIN holds House rapt." I have seen the House rap him several times. [Laughter and applause.] He sends a telegram "collect." But to continue the editorial:

But Mr. HEFLIN not only set a record for rapidity, he was after making another record, so he sent this flood of oratory "collect." Mr. HEFLIN'S long record in Congress makes his Alabama friends feel safe in the assurance that the Congressman knows the Age-Herald maintains a Washington bureau through which all its telegraphic dispatches are filed. But this bureau was too slow for Mr. HEFLIN. He was out for rapidity records and wished to show some real speed, so to save time he filed his dispatches without even the knowledge of the Age-Herald bureau. He wanted this burning speech to reach the waiting and breathless people of Alabama while it was still hot. He, no doubt, felt that extras would begin to fly from the Age-Herald's presses as fast as the dispatches were received.

The Age-Herald regrets that it was unable to make room in its columns for this wonderful two-minute speech, and it regrets further that it was unable to accept his flood of messages collect, and they were politely but firmy returned to their source.

[Laughter.]

Now you understand why he is angry with me. He could not get his telegram published after he wrote the headlines in any paper and has to pay his own telegraph bill. He is mad because I print my speeches and pay for them.

I am getting sick and tired of being bulldozed every time I express an honest opinion in the House. I have served here off and on and find that you are all pretty fair men; I believe you are honest, but every time this man from Alabama gets up in the morning in Washington and gets his trousers on he thinks that this country is about half dressed. [Laughter and applause.]

He goes tilting down Pennsylvania Avenue, usually in a long frock coat, with a white vest, with perfectly manicured eyebrows, and wonders that Pennsylvania Avenue does not tip to one side because he is all on that side. [Laughter.] Then when he comes into the House and walks down the aisle and casts his eye upon the ladies galleries, a hero, an Adonis, and then comes down here and bellows how patriotic he is and how traitorous you are, even without a megaphone he shakes the walls of Berlin [laughter], and that gentleman feels that God and he have a monopoly on all the good things and have the world by the short hair. So far as I am concerned, I am tired of it. He said there are no secret treaties. He did not know. There are the treaties; they have been public for weeks. He says he went to the State Department and they told him they had not received any. Of course the State Department has not received "secret" treaties, but they have been published all over this country, and one of the kindest things the New York Post ever did for our President was to publish those treaties, letting the people know what they had agreed on in advance, but HEFLIN does not know it. You can not blame him. There are 49 miles of bookshelves over here in the Library, and they could not hold what he does not know about these questions. [Laughter.] He knows enough to get up here and insult every man who has a feeling. "HEFLIN holds House in rapt attention; he makes a moving speech." He moves them out as a rule, and those on the front seats without umbrellas usually move back a little to avoid the perspiration and the saliva; but when he bellows, oh, how bad you are and how good he is, and he strikes that attitude so that the ladies in all of the galleries can see him. I give him and his friends notice now that I have had all I am going to take of it. [Applause.]

Why, when my friend BURNETT asked him why he did not enlist, his knees knocked together. He has the most patriotic mouth and the most cowardly pair of legs ever put on a human being. [Laughter.] Then every once in a while he says, "God of my fathers!" Why, the Kaiser, that old devil, is in the same business. He is like HEFLIN, he even puts God in as the junior member of the firm. [Laughter.] "HEFLIN holds the House in rapt attention"—written by HEFLIN, refused to be published, and he had to pay the telegraph tolls. I think that ought to be enough for him for a week and a half or two weeks; but all I want to say to you, gentlemen—and there are some things that I would much prefer to say if he were here—is that when he is asked to show what his patriotism amounts to, as he told our friend BURNETT, "I am willing to sacrifice my sister's son, but I can not go"—a great big, striking, fine, healthy-looking man, and God Almighty never made a man half as brave as he looks. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, I have restrained myself, and I am glad of it. I am glad I was not allowed to speak yesterday, because I might have gotten angry, and I have one rule of life, and that is never to get up mad in the morning. It is what keeps me well and a little stout; but I want to serve notice upon him and those who are trying to drive politics that if they can name one spot or place where I have ever tried to bring my party in on this floor, I shall resign from here. I love my party, but I would kiss it good-bye in one minute to save one man on the western line to-day, where our boys are. [Applause.]

Let him go with my boy, this brave man, with the large lungs, with the courage of a cock robin. Let him shoulder a gun and go with my boy. My boy has written me, and he says:

If any man attacks your Americanism, Dad, and I come back from Berlin with only one arm, so help me God, I shall take him on upon any rules laid down for fighting men.

[Applause.]

Let him show his courage instead of abusing his elders and his betters who are willing to give up their families for this country, and who will be silent when we think we can help the fellows over there. I am tired of it! If the Secretary of War is human, if he has made mistakes, for God's sake let us hide the mistakes from the world and from the enemy. We will win this war, but we can not win it by these men who have the brains of angleworms and the courage of cock robins, who swell and strut and sweat and spit in this body, and tell you that you are all cowards unless you agree with him; who says that he can see within your heart. Why, he does not know the difference between a heart and liver and bacon—never did have any conception of it. [Laughter.] Again I say, let us quit fighting each other and fight the Kaiser.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, I am very much obliged to you all. [Applause.]

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. FISHER], a member of the committee.

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the river and harbor bill during two days has had very little attention given to it in the general debate. With practically no opposition to any single feature of the bill, with a bill which is purely a war measure, naturally the discussion has drifted to other matters. That is quite a strange proceeding for a river and harbor appropriation bill, because those of us who have not been Members of the House but who have kept up with the measures before the House have watched with interest the debates of Congress as to the development of our waterways. This bill yesterday underwent the acid test, though probably many Members of this body did not appreciate it. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] is not opposing this bill. It is a war-emergency measure, and while he has heretofore always consistently, vigorously, and sometimes violently opposed river and harbor bills, this bill has been carefully scrutinized by him and, as a war measure, I am sure he will vote for it. His patriotism has won a victory over his opposition to all river and harbor measures. I was present when the very distinguished Member from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR], patriot that he is, returned from a visit to a training camp where he had a son who was preparing to leave for France. His son now is in France.

I know that he is proud of the fact that he had a son who can now serve the Nation so efficiently in its battle for democracy. But it was a strange procedure on yesterday to hear him in general debate speak of the recent senatorial contest in Wisconsin, and of other matters, none of which related to the provisions of this bill. Year after year, session after session, in season and out of season, he had fought rivers and harbors bills. I think the folks back in Wisconsin and the weeklies of Wisconsin and those magazines of the Nation that have loudest cried, "Pork, pork," when the river and harbor bill has been under consideration were at a loss to-day to know what to say of their leader of years gone by.

My proposition is that the absence of his attack on the river and harbor bill also demonstrates that a new state of affairs has arisen so far as the development of waterways is concerned. It is not my desire to criticize the conduct of the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin, but it is my desire to comment upon and praise the situation that now exists.

There has been a full realization of what bona fide water lines and water development would mean as a help to the transportation system of our Nation. There could not be a more appropriate time for the Nation to consider the question with all of its problems. It deserves very careful consideration. This attitude was shown by the Council of National Defense when about a year ago they appointed a very distinguished lot of men as a committee to study the inland water-transportation system and to make recommendations as to what could be done to rehabilitate it. It was then recognized that the whole transportation system of the United States was inadequate and there was great need of developing an ally of the railroads, which had been allowed to decline. This distinguished committee made an investigation and studied the situation carefully. The chairman of our committee invited the secretary of that committee, Col. Charles Keller, to appear before our committee and give to us the benefit of their investigation and research, so that we, who were charged with the duty to recommend to this Congress improvements along waterways, could profit thereby.

And just now I want to say a few words about the chairman of our committee. He is a most thorough student of the problems of water transportation. He is fully advised of the needs of waterways, and he is determined that their development shall be made upon a sound basis. If there is a man in this country who is a leader among those who have faith in the future of water transportation and strongly urge development of meritorious projects it is he. [Applause.]

We are all familiar with the very splendid letter that he wrote to the Secretary of War in which he gave the essential elements for successful water transportation. He particularly emphasized the duty of local authorities to provide adequate terminal facilities. This letter was sent to the mayors of the different municipalities where there was any sort of waterway. The Secretary of War sent this letter, with his indorsement, to all engineers in charge of river and harbor improvements. All this has brought about an intelligent discussion of those most important subjects. Our committee was fortunate in having before us Col. Keller, the secretary of the committee of the Council of National Defense. He has had years of experience in inland water development in the discharge of his duty as an engineer. He firmly believes that our idle rivers should be put to work; that they are nature's highways; and that in their development and use we have the solution of our very difficult transportation problems. To those interested in this subject I strongly recommend your reading his testimony before our committee and the report of the committee of the Council of National Defense, of which he was secretary, which is printed in the hearings just after his testimony. From all of the discussions we find the chief reasons for the decline of water lines has been that waterways are irregular and not continuous throughout the year; that there is a lack of adequate terminal facilities, which has discouraged both the shipper and the carrier; that there is a lack of cooperation and coordination with other transportation lines, which, among other things, prevents the issuance of through bills of lading; that railroad competition has been fair and unfair, and sometimes the rate cutting has completely throttled the water lines; that there has been lacking the cooperation of the communities; that we have had no well-defined waterway policy for our country, and capital has not been interested because of the uncertainty of profits. Our railroad system, until a few years ago, was able to handle the load, so that we neglected the study of other means of transportation. Now that the load has become too heavy and has swamped them, legislation should be enacted to remedy, if possible, the evils of the old system.

We can not say this department or that department quit functioning on this proposition. The Chief of Engineers has repeatedly recommended legislation which he thought would help to rehabilitate the waterways, but Congress was content to postpone the consideration of such measures, for no breakdown of the railroads could be foreseen. It is up to this Congress to see that water lines are given a fair chance. It has been repeatedly stated that a righteous war brings on a great awakening. Now, it seems that never before in our country's history have we had so much discussion about the development of our waterways. We are confronted with a situation where the railroads are not able to carry the load that our industries demand. Industries are running at full blast and are tremendously increasing their output, all of which has to be transported somehow.

Some complaint has been made about the tugboats and barges that are being built by the Government for use on the Mississippi River to be used in hauling iron and coal for use in war industries. I want to say that that project was carefully considered by the Chief of Engineers as a war emergency and met his hearty approval, and he recommended that it be adopted. The Government will lease the towboats and barges upon equitable terms. The Government was pressing industries to increase their output of war essentials—for materials used in battleships—and the answer given was that the transportation system could not furnish them sufficient raw materials. The solution given that problem by the Chief of Engineers was an intelligent handling of the proposition. The matter was presented to the President, and it met with his approval. If ever there was an appropriate time for helping war industries increase their output by relieving congested transportation and at the same time giving a stimulus to river navigation this opportunity furnished it.

The question of transportation should be given very careful study along broad lines. It should be treated as a whole, of which the essential parts are railroads, waterways, and electric lines. In the present crisis we need every available agency of transportation intelligently and efficiently utilized. There is a load for each. We have seen a congestion of cotton held in our Southern States awaiting shipment to cotton mills in the New England States relieved by an order of the Director General of the Railroads sending many trainloads to ports where ships delivered the cotton to the New England points, thus preventing further congestion of railroad freight in the East. We have seen thousands of auto trucks using our splendid highways, thus doing their part to hurry war essentials to embarkation points. We are familiar with the frequent use of the auto truck for handling freight between our many large cities and for short hauls. Our water lines have likewise their part to play. Gen. William Black, the Chief of Engineers, has stated that "Not one pound of freight should be shipped by rail that can be shipped by water." We have greatly improved our inland waterways as well as our harbors by the expenditure of hundreds of millions of dollars. No better time could be found to take advantage of this development. Water transportation is cheap. If rail rates are destructive of particular water lines, the present Government control offers a splendid opportunity for a reconstruction of rates upon an equitable basis. If it takes legislation to compel the use of water lines, now is the time to consider it; but the right of way given war materials and foodstuffs acts as a compelling reason for a shipper to use a water line if there is one available.

We could ask no better time to bring about a cooperation and coordination on the part of other transportation agencies with water lines, for much of the load would be a welcome shift for the railroads. The wide discussion of the development of river navigation with the pressing demand for help for the railroads has awakened communities in their efforts toward the rehabilitation of water navigation. Many new and adequate terminal facilities are either being constructed or plans drawn for their construction. Every ton carried by water relieves the freight cars, so that they can be utilized for carrying foodstuffs, coal, and all war materials. Aid given the solution of the transportation problem of our Nation is now a patriotic service, but these favored communities having rendered that service by the development of water lines as an aid to the railroads will after the war flourish far beyond those communities depending solely upon rail transportation.

Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT].

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I was much surprised a few minutes ago to hear the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] so vehemently express his indignation that any criticism should be offered on this floor as to the efficiency of the Post Office administration. I had supposed that the innumerable letters which have been cited here, and of which I have cited some, showing the delays in the transmission of letters between the soldiers in France and their homes, of itself was enough to naturally excite criticism. The last complaint of which I heard was of a boy who wrote home saying that he did not receive any letters, but that the camp was flooded with tons of speeches of the Secretary of the Treasury; and I can think of nothing that seems to be more like asking for bread and being given a stone than for a soldier to ask for letters from home and have the Postmaster General send him a franked advertisement of his his colleague in the Cabinet, Secretary McAdoo.

It may be, as is suggested, that it is not entirely the fault of the Post Office administration—that it is in part the fault of the Army officials, of the French Government—that these letters do not reach their destination more promptly; but every day here at home we see evidences of administration which make me, at least, suspect that some of the fault is in the administration itself.

I recently had an experience which shows that the Post Office administration, in my opinion, deserves some criticism right here at home. I saw in the paper a few days ago, and doubtless you saw it, that the merchants of Washington were sending their letters to New York by special delivery in order to have them reach their destination the next day. If they used the ordinary method of transmission, they could not be delivered in that length of time, so they put on an extra 10-cent stamp in order that they might be delivered in one day after leaving here. Now, obviously that is good for the finances of the Post Office Department, of which its chief is so proud, but it is not very good service for the merchants, and it is no wonder that business men outside of Washington are constantly criticizing the department, as we all know they are, and it is not strange that that feeling should be reflected here.

Now, the other day I was going away to a certain city about an 18 hours' journey from here and I wanted a copy of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the next morning, when I should reach there, so I asked my secretary to mail it to me. When I left in the evening I asked him if he had mailed it, and he said that he had; but, conscious, possibly, of the uncertainties of the Post Office Department, he told me he had put a special-delivery stamp on it.

The letter started in the morning, and I left at night. When I reached my destination the next noon I asked for it, but it had not arrived; in fact, it had not arrived the next morning, but it did reach there the next evening, 30 hours after my arrival. And then, on Thursday I desired to send a letter to my secretary, which I wanted him to get on Saturday morning, and, mindful of my previous experience, but foolishly still trusting the Post Office Department, I mailed it on Thursday morning with a special-delivery stamp on it. That letter was delivered to my secretary not on Friday or on Saturday, but on Monday morning. It did reach Washington on Saturday evening, according to the stamp on it, but arrived after the office had closed. If I had sent a telegram, the Western Union would have looked up my secretary's address and have delivered the message to him, but probably that was too much to expect of the Post Office Department. At any rate, that letter did not reach the post office in Washington until Saturday evening. So I could have left where I was stopping several hours after that letter left; I could have come to Washington by train and spent a whole day here, gone back and had half a day there before that letter, mailed by special delivery, had reached its destination here in Washington.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GILLETT. Can I have a couple of minutes more?

Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for two minutes more.

Mr. GILLETT. A friend of mine, to whom I alluded in regard to the delay in my first letter, told me that he had telegraphed to New York for the letter that I wanted particularly, and it had been mailed to him by special delivery, and it took exactly one week for that letter to go a journey of 24 hours.

Now, gentlemen, when such things happen, when the merchants of Washington are compelled to send their ordinary business mail by special delivery to New York so that it can be secure—and I think no doubt your experience is like my own, and I do not remember the time when my mail was so uncertain and unreliable as it has been of late—when these things are constantly occurring, the gentleman from Indiana should not be surprised when gentlemen of this House, reflecting the ordinary criticism which the business world feels, do occasionally vent their complaints here in this body. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If I understand the complaint of the gentleman with reference to the foreign mail to France, it is on the character of the mail that is sent.

Mr. GILLETT. My complaint of the foreign service is of the delay, both in first-class mail and in packages.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. But the question of tonnage, as the gentleman must know, necessarily enters into it?

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly. I did not enter into that.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. But I understand that the gentleman stated they were sending pamphlets or something from the Treasury Department?

Mr. GILLETT. The soldier said there were tons of Secretary McAdoo's speech being delivered in the camp.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. And the gentleman thinks that is being done to the exclusion of letters?

Mr. GILLETT. I do not know whether it has been or not. I did not indicate that. I said they thought they had a just complaint in receiving that instead of receiving letters.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has again expired.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. DENTON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. DENTON. Mr. Chairman, something has been said about the question of terminals in connection with river transportation. That there should be adequate terminals, we all agree.

Two things are necessary for water transportation. First, we must have an adequate channel, and, secondly, we must have the proper terminal facilities to take care of the commerce. But without the first of these, it is useless for municipalities to expend large sums of money in constructing terminals. This is the case to a great extent along the Ohio River. Until we get the channel we have no use for the terminal. Indeed, considerable use can be made of the rivers in many instances when a proper channel is secured, even with very inferior terminals. But the best and most expensive terminals are of no value without the channel. In the lower Ohio Valley the difficulty at present is that during a great part of the year the river is so low that transportation is seriously interfered with, and at times entirely stopped. The object and purpose of erecting dams in the Ohio River is to give that section a 9-foot stage of water the year around. When this has been done it will be profitable to organize companies to build boats and barges and engage in river transportation on a large scale. But until this has been done, lack of an adequate channel will render it unprofitable to engage in river transportation in this section extensively.

That the municipalities along the lower Ohio will gladly furnish the proper terminal facilities to handle the traffic, there is no doubt. At the present time such traffic as there is, is handled quite successfully through privately-owned terminals. Almost all the railroads have lines running to the edge of the water at the present time with terminal facilities sufficient to load and unload freight.

I can say for the city of Evansville, which I represent, that she will do her part to make transportation on the Ohio River a success. This city, of about 100,000 population, has all modern facilities and its citizens are among the most public spirited to be found in the land, and they are ready and willing at any time to make any expenditures that will be of benefit to the community. No city of its size in the Union is more progressive. The city has the largest colosseum in the State; the largest and finest municipal playgrounds; extensive parks; unexcelled hotel and banking facilities, and if there is anything that Evansville has not, that she ought to have, if you will tell us what it is we will go and get it. Terminal facilities will be furnished to the entire satisfaction of Congress. The satisfaction of the people of this city with the present administration of its affairs is clearly shown by the recent mayorality election, in which the present Democratic mayor, the Hon. Benjamin Bosse, was reelected by an overwhelming majority, in a city that is about evenly divided politically, carrying 30 out of 31 precincts.

The recent congestion in freight traffic has brought home to the people, as nothing could have done, the importance of utilizing to the fullest extent our rivers as a means of transportation, and has vindicated the wisdom of those who, in the face of strenuous opposition, have championed the improvements of our waterways.

The cities along the Ohio River have secured great relief during the past year by means of river transportation, hampered even as they have been by lack of an adequate channel. If this river had been thoroughly improved the congestion in freight traffic in the lower Ohio Valley would have been greatly relieved, if not entirely obviated.

One of the greatest obstacles to river transportation has been the opposition of the railroads. As the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] stated yesterday, in some instances they have carried their opposition to the extent of buying up all the sites suitable for terminals for river transportation. But we have now entered upon a new era in this country in the matter of transportation. Since the railroads have broken down and the Government has taken charge of them there is every reason why river transportation should be encouraged as a means of relieving the congestion. With the railroads controlled and operated by the Government opposition to river transportation will vanish. What will be the result after the close of the war? We can not tell. But one thing is certain, the people are going to demand ample transportation facilities hereafter. If the railroads can not give this, then the Government must and will. The people will never be satisfied to go back to the conditions that existed for more than a year prior to the time the Government undertook the operation of the railroads. Much will depend, of course, upon the success of the Goverment in this enterprise. If Government operation is successful, I for one do not believe that the transportation system of the country will ever be given over again to the hands of private owners for operation. What the people want is service. The railroads are a public utility more important to commerce even than State and county highways. They must be made to meet the needs of the public, for the interests of the public are far above and more important than any private interests, and if operation of these roads by the Government gives the people the relief sought for no doubt satisfactory arrangements will be made whereby the Government will continue to operate the roads for the benefit of the public. Under these conditions we may look for the greatest encouragement of river transportation, instead of its obstruction which we have had heretofore.

I have received many requests during recent months, as no doubt have most of you, to assist in having embargoes lifted and cars furnished for shippers, but I do not think transportation has been interfered with as much along the Ohio Valley as it has been in some other sections for the reason that we have had the benefit of the Ohio River.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for one minute more.

Mr. DENTON. The cities along this river were enabled to relieve the coal famine to a great extent, and to relieve the congestion in other ways by the use of the river, even in its present condition. When this great natural waterway has been so improved as to give us a 9-foot stage the year around, with the cooperation which we may naturally expect from the railroads under changed conditions, the Ohio River will become one of the greatest transportation mediums of the country.

Another fact that is emphasized by this bill is that everything is being subordinated to the prosecution of the war. As has already been stated, no new projects are contained in this bill, unless they are war measures. Much as many of the communities may need improvements coming under the jurisdiction of this committee, I prophesy that you will find very little complaint. The people realize that we are at the greatest crisis in the history of the Nation. We are at war with the greatest military power that ever existed. We are fighting not only for our liberty but for our national life and freedom, and everything must be subordinated to the winning of the war. Until this conflict has been brought to a successful conclusion the American people must have and will have but one thought and purpose. [Applause.]

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, a few days ago I took occasion to comment in the House upon the unwisdom of our ratio of bond issues to taxation. I expressed the opinion that we should collect more taxes in proportion to the amount of bonds that are being sold to finance the war. The view was expressed at that time by certain Members that business could not stand higher taxation; that higher taxes would cripple business.

I desire now to further refer to that subject and to answer the claim that business will be crippled by increased taxes. I wish to take up the case of the United States Steel Corporation. I refer to that concern for a number of reasons. The first is that it employs 25,000 men, or thereabouts, in my own district, and I believe that comment of this kind ought, like charity, to begin at home. I refer to that concern also because it is the largest employer of labor in the United States.

I refer to it because, on account of its wealth and influence, of the power that it wields, it has been able to get along and carry on its operations without recognizing the right of men who toil to organize, to form themselves into labor unions. The United States Steel Corporation has never recognized any such right upon the part of the men who work for it. Itself constituting the greatest industrial organization in this country, having, as has been charged in the courts, a monopoly of ore supplies, enjoying enormous influence and wealth, thoroughly organized itself, its vast activities carried on under the direction of one or two supreme heads, it has denied to the 275,000 men who work for it the same right, the right to organize and to bargain collectively with their employer.

I also refer to this corporation because it has steadfastly refused to give recognition to the basic eight-hour day. It has refused to allow the principle advocated by the President of the United States, that society has reached the point where it recognizes the justice of the eight-hour day. Men are now compelled to work for the Steel Corporation 8 hours, or 10, or 12 hours, or whatever number of hours the employer demands, without any regard to overtime or of the justice of the eight-hour principle. Therefore it seems fair, in view of all these things that distinguish this great industrial concern, that we should take it as a type and look to it and see what it is doing in this time of war and national distress and what profits it is realizing.

I hold in my hand the report for 1917, recently issued to its stockholders by the United States Steel Corporation. It is not a clear report. I do not think that an accountant could take this report and find out what the net profits of the Steel Corporation were for last year. I will not presume to say that the report is intended to mislead; I will not make that charge. I do say that the profits that the Steel Corporation was able to make during last year are so covered up in it that, although it purports to be a real exposition of that subject, it is impossible for any man, accountant, layman, or whatever he may be, to tell from the report just what it earned.

There are, however, statements in this report that throw some light upon its operations. For illustration, the report states that the net earnings of the Steel Corporation for last year were $304,000,000. That is to say, the net earnings, after deducting "allowances for estimated proportion of extraordinary cost of facilities installed by reason of war requirements and conditions, also taxes—including an estimate of $233,465,435 for account of Federal income, war income, and war excess-profits taxes payable in 1918—but exclusive of charge for interest on outstanding bonds, mortgages, and purchase obligations of the subsidiary companies," amounted to $304,161,471.53.

The report states that after making those deductions the net earnings of the corporation were $304,161,471.53. How much would have been shown if those legitimate items had been added—and they ought to have been added if the statement was intended as a candid presentation of the earnings of the company—how much they would have been shown to be with such items included can not be learned from this report.

I do observe, however, the statement that $233,465,435 has been set apart to pay Federal income, war income, and war-excess-profits taxes payable in 1918. Using that as a basis, and making the best calculation that an expert can make from these figures, which is, take them as 32 per cent of the taxable income of the company, the net earnings of the Steel Corporation for last year was in the neighborhood of $729,000,000. So much for that.

Now, let us see what the earnings of the concern applicable to dividends were according to its own statement. This corporation has $508,302,500 common stock, commonly believed to be practically pure water, without hardly the color of value having gone into the assets of the company. It has $360,281,100 of 7 per cent preferred stock and has a bonded debt, it and its subsidiaries, of $586,828,875.89. Out of the $304,161,471.53 net earnings, as shown by its report to remain after making all deductions for taxes, replacements, and so forth, charged off, the Steel Corporation paid $25,219,677 as the dividend of 7 per cent on its preferred stock, and the interest on all its bonded indebtedness amounting to $30,125,594.67, making a total of $55,345,271.67, which, taken from the earnings of $304,161,471.53, shows that for 1917 alone the net profits of this corporation applicable to the common stock were $248,816,199.86, which was 49 per cent earnings upon the common stock of that corporation for the space of one year.

How can it be argued that a corporation earning such dividends as that can not stand further taxation? How can it be argued that corporations which earn practically 50 per cent upon their common stock, after paying all charges of every kind, should not in this time submit to further taxation? In 1914 the Steel Corporation made only $23,496,796; in 1915, $75,833,833; in 1916, $271,531,730, compared with its prewar average profits of $63,585,777 for the years 1911, 1912, and 1913.

What would have been the taxes of this corporation under the British law, according to the British rate of 80 per cent on excess profits and 25 per cent on average prewar earnings? The Steel Corporation for the prewar years of 1911, 1912, and 1913 earned an average of $63,585,777 annually. On this average the British rate is 25 per cent, or $15,896,444, with a rate of 80 per cent upon the excess above that, which would have yielded the further sum of $371,531,378.40. The figures are based upon the statement in the report of net earnings of $304,161,471.53 plus the sum set apart for Federal taxes, $233,465,435, which makes a total income upon which taxes are to be paid, as admitted by the report, of $537,625,906.53. So that if the Steel Corporation had been doing business in Great Britain instead of America, in place of paying taxes of only $233,465,435 to the Government, it would pay $387,427,822 taxes to the Government. So that by being in the United States instead of in Great Britain this corporation saves the tidy sum of $153,962,387 in taxes in one year.

Had this corporation paid taxes according to the British rate of 80 per cent upon their excess profits it would still be able to place to the credit of the common stock 18.9 per cent for 1917 alone. Is not that enough in these war times? Is not that enough profit for even a war contractor to make in this time when men are laying down their lives for the flag?

The Steel Corporation is merely a type; it is merely one of many concerns which are making enormous profits. Such profit-making concerns may be numbered in thousands. I have no sympathy with corporation baiting, and I hope never to be guilty of it. But also I have no sympathy with profiteering when the country is torn with distress, when a million firesides are desolate, and when anguish is entering into a million American homes.

The matter of vast profits being earned that I have referred to relates to the ability of concerns situated as the United States Steel Corporation is to pay a greater rate of taxation than they are now paying. It relates to the justice of requiring higher rates of taxes from such concerns. It relates to the necessity, if we are going to present a clean face to our soldier boys when they come back from France, of having done our duty here while they were doing their duty over there, that we shall increase the taxes on those who are making big profits out of the war and make them furnish the money, so far as they are able while our boys are furnishing the manhood on the battle line.

But there is another aspect to this matter, a purely economic aspect, which does not heed the question of justice, which assumes that profiteers have the right to make all the money they can and that they should not be stayed in their operations. That is, whether it is good from an economic standpoint that we should allow such low rates of taxation at this time, and to issue bonds to get money to carry on the war. We are faced with an inflation of prices such as this country never saw. It began with the outbreak of the war in Europe. We then began to issue more money in this country. We have inflated the per capita circulation from $34.35 in 1914 until it is $49.70 per capita at this time. Practically all of that inflation took place before we entered the war. The result of that inflation was that prices went up and up and up until when we entered the war there had been an increase of over 50 per cent above prewar prices.

Of course, not all of that increase in prices was due to the inflation of circulation. Some of it was due to the laws of supply and demand. The least part of it was due to such laws. The most of it, in my judgment, was due to the fact that we inflated the circulation in this country and that there was a great return of American securities held in Europe prior to the outbreak of the war, those securities being sent back and resold in this country, which furnished a basis of credit and thereby business was stimulated and credits inflated and prices grossly increased. In addition to that, of course, was the fact that foreign countries were permitted to float their own securities in the United States to the extent of—I do not know how much—perhaps as much as $2,000,000,000, and that also furnished a basis of credit and aggravated the inflation.

But the fact remains that we have had an increase in prices of the necessaries of life since we went into the war of 21 per cent, according to the statement issued the other day by the Department of Labor. Now, we have not inflated the circulation very much since we entered the war. But we have issued bonds to the amount of billions of dollars. The bonds that have been issued in this country have been used largely as a basis of credit. There has been a tremendous stimulation of business. There has been a great increase in circulation due to that fact, and the result is that we have had this further increase of 21 per cent in prices since we entered the war. That great increase I attribute principally to the fact that we have been financing this war with bonds instead of financing it with taxes. The result, stated in another way, is that a man who had a dollar last April now has only 79 cents. The men with money all did one of two things. Either they were content with what they had, as far as a man with money is ever content with what he has, and they invested it in tax-free Government bonds and hid their money away so that we could not take it to help pay for the war, or they put it out and started it to work doing something. A man can not afford to hold idle money when it is going down as it has gone down in purchasing power during the past year. A man can not afford to hold idle money to-day, because it is going down still further, if we continue these bond issues. Therefore, he has got to put it into business or industry. And what is the result? There has been a tremendous stimulation of industry. Business is stimulated to a point that this country never saw before.

The inflation of circulation and stimulation of business has made money plentiful, it has fallen into the hands of almost every class of citizens, and the people of the country are going on a joy ride of extravagance and financial profligacy. That applies to all persons more than professional men and those working for salaries; they have had the least out of this change. Practically all other classes are spending money with a free hand as they never did before; they are consuming more than they ever did before; they are eating more food and better food; they are throwing more food away; they are throwing away money on automobiles, fine clothes, and luxuries as they never did before. All this means a waste of our strength and resources. Business is so stimulated that there is a greater consumption of raw materials of all kinds. There is a congestion in transportation; there is a general riot, as you might call it, of waste, lost motion, and extravagance going on all down the line. This does not injure alone the people who are spending the money, it does not hurt alone those who are wasting it, or the business men who are making the money freely and spending it in the same way; it hurts the Nation and it hurts the country as a whole and hinders us in carrying on the war.

Now, I have got to the point. It seems to me that every man who loves his country would want to devote its energies to essential things. We are giving too much of America's strength to things that have no relation to this war. Not one-tenth of our possible strength is going into pressing the war to victory. Men are busying themselves with making money. No man has the right to make money at this time beyond his absolute needs. We must curb business activity by laying a heavy tax on its profits; we must take away the inducement to profiteer; we must turn back into channels of war use all the waste of raw materials and muscle now consumed in profit-making business enterprises; we must release for war purposes the men, the capital, and the materials which have been diverted to activities which have no bearing on the war. This can be done effectively only by heavy taxation on profits.

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY].

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to speak of the Federal farm loan banking system. I never had any faith in its success or the wisdom of establishing that system. I am now more thoroughly convinced than ever that it is a failure, and in many instances frauds are perpetrated on the Government. The people of this country at this time are called upon for taxes and loans by the billions and tens of billions, while at the same time for this Federal Farm Loan Board large sums of money have been appropriated and squandered. The law provides for annual detailed reports, which have not been made. No report was made for that portion of the year 1916 after the enactment of the law, some five months. But a report was made in 1917, not in detail, not in an intelligent manner, not in such a manner that anyone can figure out whether the system is a success or failure, except to show that in the appropriation of $460,000 for expenses an additional sum of $540,000 was taken from the money secured from the sale of bonds. Some 3,800 associations have or had been formed up to the time the report was made on the 30th of November last. That number of associations was created or approved of throughout the country, and the bank located at Spokane, Wash., showed a loss of over $62,000 up to that time.

I have here a carefully prepared statement of the operations of this law and the board created under that law. To my mind it is most startling in that it squanders the money of the people now raised at a time when we need money so badly for carrying on this great war; that it is the next thing to criminal in spending the money in this way. The loans made by this board are not the best loans in the country. They are made chiefly to men who can not go to their local banks where they are known and where the property is well known and obtain the desired loan. I know of an 80-acre tract of land that sold some five years ago for $3 per acre on which this board has made a loan of $15 per acre.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Has not that land been changed or improved?

Mr. FORDNEY. Not a particle; no improvements from the time it was sold until now. There was no timber on it when sold. It is a most startling thing, and I only mention it because it is startling.

Mr. STEENERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. STEENERSON. Was not the money borrowed on the express agreement to improve this cleared land?

Mr. FORDNEY. I do not know, but I do not believe so.

Mr. STEENERSON. Does not the gentleman believe the fact that the farm-loan banks have loaned money to farmers at a low rate of interest, say 5 or 6 per cent, has encouraged agriculture?

Mr. FORDNEY. I doubt very much if it has. Let me say to the gentleman that in their great anxiety to get into business that board, as herein stated—and I take it from the official statistics—has borrowed money on their bonds at 4½ per cent and invested the money in liberty bonds at 3½ per cent, a loss of 1 cent. That is in order to get into business and do something, and furnish positions for men without actual experience in finance. Let me call the gentleman's attention to a statement here; and this is not my statement, but I take it to be correct, because the party making the statement claimed to know what he was talking about:

> None of them (the members of the board) had any previous experience in large-scale banking, business, or financial affairs. Some were politicians and others were connected with farmers' organizations or with benevolent funds, while most of them, including members of the board, favored Government aid, control, and ownership.

Then this man whom I quote goes on and states that some of these men have socialistic tendencies in favor of Government ownership of everything. Down with the Stars and Stripes and up with the red flag is their motto generally.

Mr. STEENERSON. Who is the author of this?

Mr. FORDNEY. A Mr. Ingalls, whose name I shall print with a statement—an editor in the city of New York.

Mr. STEENERSON. I would like to say to the gentleman that the activities of the farm-loan banks in my district have been very beneficial. At the time they started business it was difficult for farmers to obtain renewals, on account of war excitement. A great many insurance companies and large lenders on farm mortgages had refused to extend their loans, and it came at a time when it was absolutely necessary to have some assistance.

Mr. FORDNEY. I have no doubt that many of the loans are meritorious and made in good faith and on good security; but I say the major portion of them, in my opinion—and that was my opinion when we were passing the law would be the result—are made to men who can not borrow money from men who know them and know the value of their property.

Mr. STEENERSON. I can say that several hundred thousand dollars have been placed in my district, and I believe they are absolutely safe. They are placed as first mortgages on cultivated land, and they have been careful in that section to loan money only for the purpose of improving the land or paying off another mortgage.

Mr. FORDNEY. I want to accept the gentleman's statement as correct, because I know the people of his district are honest and intelligent, for they show their intelligence by returning to Congress so often my good friend.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

The statement heretofore referred to is as follows:

A REVIEW OF THE FIRST ANNUAL REPORT OF THE FEDERAL FARM LOAN BOARD.

[By R. Ingalls.]

INTRODUCTION.

This article relates only to the 12 Federal land banks and to the National Farm Loan Associations in each of their respective districts through which they make loans.

The other parts of the system, i. e., private concerns organized under State laws and appointed to serve the Federal land banks as agents, of which there are four, and joint-stock land banks, of which there are also four, are not discussed.

The Federal Farm Loan Board consists of four members, whose appointment was made by the President and confirmed by the Senate, with the Secretary of the Treasury ex officio the chairman. None of these has had any special training in farm finance.

The board appointed the registrars that serve as trustees for the bondholders, the appraisers that pass upon the loans, the director of the Federal land banks that make the loans, and the examiners that inspect the system.

None of these officials, although they have entire charge of the lending and bonding operations, can be identified with any other mortgaging or banking system or institution. This is by express provision of law.

As a fact none of them had any previous experience in large-scale banking, business, or financial affairs. Some were politicians, and others were connected with farmers' organizations or with benevolent funds, while most of them, including members of the board, favor Government aid and ownership.

That is to say, they are socialistic and are opposed to private enterprise and to the mobilization, through cooperation, of the farmers' credit and other resources, or the ideas that started the movement for improving agricultural conditions.

All this is shown by their individual words and actions, as well as by the board's report, and may be one of the main causes of the unfortunate situation into which the system has fallen.

This article, in an abridged form, first appeared in the United States Investor, of Boston.

CHAPTER I.

On August 7, 1916, or three weeks after the Federal farm loan act was approved, the Federal Farm Loan Board started the work of organizing its system.

According to the act the board must require quarterly statements of its associations and banks, and publish consolidated statements thereof. This it has not done, nor has it made any orderly publication of its rules and regulations.

The board must also annually make a full report of its operations. It made no report in 1916, although at the end of that year it asked more money of Congress for heavy salaries, which was granted.

The first annual report covers the 16 months prior to November 30, 1917, but contains very little from which the true state of the financial and other affairs of the system can be determined. The report is dated December 29, but copies of it were not generally distributed until late in January and February of this year. Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo, the chairman, thus hints at a motive for this shortcoming:

"There is a small minority of bankers bitterly opposed to the system. They now think they have found their coveted opportunity to attack it. Their first step has been to instigate a call for a report of the 12 Federal land banks. * * * Their next movement will be to institute a suit testing the constitutionality of the Federal farm-loan act * * * to alarm investors who have already bought the bonds and to dissuade others from buying bonds." (Borrowers' Bulletin, January, 1918, official.)

So the absent information about these banks, which are involving the Government in their enormous present and future liabilities, must be sought from outside sources, with the dim light afforded by this meager report and some bulletins of the board.

From these it is learned that by December 1 last the board had granted, or was about to grant, charters to 3,814 associations, or about two for every three rural counties; that through them the Federal land banks had approved $105,136,529 loans and closed $29,824,655 of them, and were to permit another large portion of them to be withdrawn at a loss of the expense in getting them; and that applications for $114,624,211 more loans were pending and others were pouring in by the millions upon millions of dollars.

Also it is learned that the Federal land banks had impaired their $9,000,000 of capital stock by $540,000, although they and the board had received $460,000 for expenses from Congress. The deficit of the land bank at Spokane was $62,531.07, while there is nothing to show whether the condition of the other land banks is any better or worse.

So since the board has made no financial statement, it may be assumed that the business cost the Government at least 3.56 per cent of the closed loans, or over 1 per cent of the approved loans. To recoup, the board allowed the Federal land banks an interest spread of only one-half a point.

True, the spread is to be taken yearly out of unpaid principal, and all the loans were made for long terms. But it is plainly too small for placing mortgages on the books, and so means a loss for an indefinite period, in view of the constantly swelling volume and heavy cost of new loans.

Whether the earnings gradually and normally resulting from loans closed on even a wider spread would ever be large enough to meet defaults, collect dues, find investors, and generally to conduct the business is open to doubt, unless the land banks reform their practice—on which I will comment below—of financing 36-year loans by 20-year bonds.

Then after the Federal land banks had issued $26,970,000 of bonds their sales stopped and they found themselves saddled with a big mass of approved loans and some engraver's bills, without cash to meet their obligations or to continue business with.

The claim that the liberty loans interfered is true, of course, although they were oversubscribed $1,035,226,850 and $1,617,532,300, respectively. But it is somewhat surprising that the board did not appeal to the Secretary of the Treasury and try to obtain from this $2,652,759,150 oversubscription the relatively few millions of dollars which the land banks then needed.

Perhaps all that would have been required, if the board and its system possessed public confidence, was to show wherein the farmers are in want and that the 4½ per cent farm-loan bonds are exempted from taxation and deemed "instrumentalities of the Government of the United States." (Federal farm-loan act, sec. 26.)

This would have been more just than to have taken the money out of the liberty loans, as was, in appearance, subsequently done.

The inference is that the Federal farm-loan system is as useless in war as prophecy said it would be in times of peace. In the face of the fact that the demand for prime farm mortgages is actually greater than the supply, the poor sales of Federal land-bank bonds can not logically be ascribed to the general condition of the money market.

So overanxious was the board for action that it could not await mortgages for security. It bought $10,139,529 of United States bonds and certificates at 3½ per cent. (Report of Comptroller of the Currency, 1917.) If it authorized the issue of a corresponding amount of 4½ per cent bonds against them, it caused the land banks to lose 1 per cent interest thereon; and such appears to be the case, since the first bonds are dated May 1, while the first loans were not made until the summer of 1917. (Borrowers' Bulletin, January, 1918.)

CHAPTER II.

So the causes of the collapse must be sought within as well as without the system. But whatever they may be, these banks were for the time being "in virtual bankruptcy," according to Senator PENROSE (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Dec. 18, 1917), although the Government had advanced them $8,891,270 free of their capital stocks, appropriated $460,000 more for their expenses, and given them rent free headquarters and the free use of the mails for their bureau and various free services of the departments of the Treasury, Justice, and Agriculture, besides total tax exemption.

If the amount represented by these privileges were thrown upon the land banks instead of upon the taxpayers, this Government farm-loan system would be more expensive than any other and could not endure.

In December, before filing its report or making a budget, the board went before the Senate and House Committees on Banking and Currency. These committees, without giving previous notice to the press or even a chance for opposition Members to be heard, drafted a bill and hastily railroaded it into a law which authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase at par $200,000,000 of the land banks' 4½ per cent bonds within this year and the next.

These banks will probably lend one-half of the proceeds at 5 per cent and the remainder at 5½ per cent, making a gain of $1,500,000. They will also save the discount of perhaps 5 per cent at which the bonds would have sold if they had been dumped on the market, thus gaining $10,000,000 more.

So this purchase means a new subsidy of $11,500,000, not to speak of the vast public fund it has immobilized. If this calculation seems too large, it certainly could not be reduced below the discount at which the Government's own bonds are now selling.

The secrecy and haste of the board and Congress, like the inchoate report, naturally invite unpleasant surmises. Indeed, the mere enactment of the bill argues something wrong with either the system or its management, and probably both. So it may be asked whether suspected incompetency deserves concealment or whether a system apparently so defective is itself worth the staggering price the taxpayers are going to pay.

Commissioner Norris excuses the Government's assistance of the Federal land banks by comparing it with the temporary relief to be extended through the War Finance Corporation to private enterprises necessary or contributory to the prosecution of the war. (Commercial and Financial Chronicle, Mar. 9, 1918.) Apparently he overlooks the special purpose of that corporation and forgets that the Federal land banks have been enjoying the cash and credit of the Government and every other imaginable privilege from the start and have not made good with them.

To be accurate in his comparison, the commissioner would have to assume that the War Finance Corporation had become overwhelmed by debts, and that it was saved from a breakdown by the Government's buying up its obligations and taking over the management. The commissioner's specious arguments and their reaction upon himself are a not unusual consequence of the reasoning by analogy into which he was tempted. Analogies are for rhetoric rather than for logic and can not deceive anybody that thinks for himself and is patient enough to analyze.

But it is by analogy of the Federal reserve banks that the Federal land banks were instituted, to be dominated by the Government under a special act in derogation of free banking laws. It is by analogy of the Nation's asset currency that a bureau was established in the Treasury Department, through which owners of farm land may transform their notes and mortgages into governmental paper and cash them at their face value. It is by analogy of the fiscal services and the circulation privilege of national banks that land banks are authorized to issue bonds deemed instruments of the Government of the United States and to receive deposits of public funds at low interest rates.

And it is by analogy and its fallacies that Congress will be expected to duplicate for loans to farmers every dollar that it may hereafter appropriate for any other object, public or private, so long as this politically incepted system, freed from civil-service rules and placed in the hands of appointees detached from the banking and financial world, shall continue in existence with the powers which it possesses to bestow or withhold favors according to district, State, or person.

The Federal farm-loan act is the reverse of the doctrine that President Wilson taught as a private citizen, professor, and writer, as shown by the following passages in his History of the American People, volume 5, page 103:

"Errors of opinion began to prevail there (the South during the Harrison administration) as in the new regions of the West like those which swept through the crude Colonies in the unquiet days which preceded and followed the War for Independence—hopes that the credit of the Government itself might in some manner be placed at the disposal of the farmers in the handling and marketing of their crops."

That Mr. Wilson held to these views, so contrary to the act, after he became President, until he changed them for some unexplained reason, is evidenced by an address delivered before Congress on December 2, 1913, in which he said:

"The farmers, of course, ask and should be given no special privilege, such as extending to them the credit of the Government itself. What they need and should obtain is legislation which will make their own abundant and substantial credit resources available as a foundation for joint, concerted action in their own behalf in getting the capital they must use. It is to this we should now address ourselves. But we must not allow ourselves to depend upon extraordinary expedients."

CHAPTER III.

The regrettable thing is that not one-tenth of the $209,351,270 already appropriated will, if the present course be pursued, increase agricultural production at all. (Commissioner Norris, quoted in CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Dec. 18, 1917.)

Over 90 per cent of these Government loans will be closed simply to enable some favored rural landowners to exchange old for new mortgages at lower interest rates. The only effect so far has been to help in this way about 30,000 of a special class at the expense of the rest of the people. Tenants, of course, can not be helped, and they range anywhere up to 50 per cent of the 13,800,000 farmers. (Agricultural Yearbook, 1916.)

The board openly avows its intentions by a pamphlet, which it significantly entitled "Old Mortgages for New" and widely distributed among farmers. This official document adroitly assails the business of private banks and lenders, conveys the idea that current charges and interest rates are excessive, and explains to the borrower how he can get easier terms by transferring his debt to the Government. (United States Treasury Department, 1916, Circular 3.)

The board is not content with getting only the mortgages of the private banks, it also wants to take deposits away from them. The "banks have had more farmers' money and money derived from farmers' business than ever before." (Id.) So the board published another widely distributed pamphlet showing that national farm-loan associations can accept "savings accounts and pay 4 per cent interest thereon," and suggesting the use of that right. (Id., 1916, Circular 5.)

The associations can issue deposit certificates convertible into bonds, or instruments of the Government. (Federal farm-loan act, sec. 11.) That is to say, the Government practically guarantees the certificates, although it has no power under the act to stamp or certify them, or to control the aggregate amount to be issued. The output of these certificates, together with the bonds of the land banks, could impose a troublesome burden on the Government.

To hasten this liquidation of private mortgage business the board, besides much traveling, is using "methods of mail-order houses" and has sent out "323,828 letters and 2,032,000 bulletins," to which must be added the redistributions and correspondence of the land banks and associations. Also it published a serial article "syndicated to 700 newspaper, having a circulation of 26,000,000," (Annual Report, pp. 6, 26, and 27.) A rather unnecessary expense, since a mere posting of notice suffices when governments offer money below market prices.

The board believes the loans thus drummed up will flow in at $12,000,000 a month, the ultimate limit set by other more enthusiastic officers being the $800,000,000 estimated to be annually maturing of the $4,000,000,000 of recorded farm mortgages. Owing to present high prices of money, the holders of these old mortgages would pay liberally to get rid of them.

Had the board only thought of this, it could have saved the Government much of the expense of this refunding campaign. But since the board was seemingly seeking undivided glory, it must now regret that it failed, in selling bonds, to apply to this the more difficult branch of the business those methods of mail-order houses so successfully used in getting loans.

The Federal land banks will never get back the foreign capital that the board helped to be taken away from agriculture, because the tax exemption, or chief attraction, of their bonds ends at tidewater. Whether the domestic capital that the board started liquidating can be retained depends upon so amending the act as to give effectivity to individual initiative and private enterprise. This the board partially admits by agreeing to some features of a bill for this purpose now in committee. (Id., pp. 21–23.)

The board had "no available figures showing the cost of business. (Letter of Secretary Flannigan, December, 1917.) Nevertheless, in spite of this lack of exact knowledge, it prescribed a flat rate of 5 per cent per annum for loans. This, although subsequently raised to 5½ per cent, is for the reasons stated below still insufficient, and while it may subject the Government to loss can not save the best refunding mortgagors more than 1 point on interest. Moreover, it will be difficult to make all loans at the same interest rate and schedule of charges in a country as large and diversified as the United States.

The borrowers ought to have been obliged to pay prevailing rates, to be reduced after the war if they then appear excessive. This the borrowers could do soon enough under the clauses which enable them to make prepayment and to alter the terms of loans at their own will. (Federal farm-loan act, subsecs. 2 and 5, sec. 12.) The board erred in this. Also it made a blunder in allowing the Federal land banks to issue 20-year bonds and to invest the proceeds in 36-year loans. (Circulars, Jan. 24, 1918.)

CHAPTER IV.

The only means for paying dues on the bonds is the receipts from borrowers in small annual installments. Under the law their principal payments must be placed in a trust fund and can not be used for interest on bonds or any other expenses. (Federal farm-loan act, sec. 22.) The annual interest on each $1,000 bond is $45. According to the board's own amortization tables, each $1,000 loan at 5 per cent will yield only $44.24 interest in the tenth year, and gradually less in succeeding years. (U. S. Treasury Department, 1917, Cir. 7.)

By profitably reinvesting excess yields of the first nine years there might possibly be enough money to meet interest outgo until the nineteenth year. But only $69.37 will be left to pay the $90 interest due in the last two years of the bond.

The tables further show that no land bank, after paying 4½ per cent interest on the bonds and earning 5 per cent interest on loans and 5½ per cent interest compounded on reinvestments, will have more than $558.39 in the trust fund at the end of 20 years for paying principal on any $1,000 of its bonds.

The situation will be even worse, because the trust funds are being reinvested in long-term loans, which still further protracts recovery. The use of principal repaid on new loans for meeting maturing bonds would be robbing Peter to pay Paul, since against each loan a bond of the same amount is being issued. Nor is the capital stock available, since it is gradually to be immobilized in advances to the associations and individual borrowers.

Prepayments on loans might help. But they are not likely to total much, since the borrowers must know they will never get money again as cheap as that now being lent to them. Rather there will be defaults, and costly ones, from deaths, disabilities, crop failures, and panics, not to mention moratory laws. The board says, "Most of the mortgages will run for 36 years, and you (the borrower) may not live until your debt is paid off." (Borrowers' Bulletin, October, 1917.)

The average size of the loans is about $2,000. (Ann. Rept., p. 20.) They are being made "at heavy expense." (Id., p. 24.) Experience of private lenders is that it required about three years and 30 to 50 per cent of the principal to carry such a small loan on default through to foreclosure and a reinvestment of the money. Yet the Federal land banks have not provided for accumulating a surplus for this or "for a limitation of risks" or for a protection against "anticipated losses." (Id., p. 16.)

With the same improvidence they are making loans from day to day as applied for, without matching the loans and bonds in respect to the due dates of either interest or principal. Consequently, even though not one cent be lost on loans or spent in business, the land banks will have no more than $53,839,000 with which to meet at maturity the $100,000,000 of bonds now probably authorized.

The only escape from insolvency is more big appropriations from Congress, unless the future deficit—$46,161,000 from these first issues alone—can be refunded by new bonds. Perhaps such a refund is the alternative contemplated, since the board has full jurisdiction over the system to the exclusion of the courts at vital points.

The registrars are the trustees; they are appointed by the board, but can not bring foreclosure suits or sell the collateral in order to pay the bonds. (Federal farm-loan act, secs. 4, 18, 19, and 22.) No receivers can be appointed for failed land banks, except by the board; and it alone decides whether there shall be any dissolution or liquidation. (Id., sec. 29.) In brief, has a bondholder any right at all that he can enforce in the courts? Even if he has any enforcible right, very little advantage would accrue from it in view of what the borrowers could and might do.

As the act was passed the borrowers can add their costs and also the amount of their obligatory shares to the face of the mortgage, and thus delay the complete recovery of this outlay until the last year of the loan or reduce the funds available for productive purposes. Bonds have presumably been issued against this outlay, thus impairing the guaranteeing value of the initial capital stock, as well as its increases that come from the 5 per cent contribution of every loan granted.

The borrowers can use capital stock for unsecured advances to their associations for expenses; also through these associations, they can deduct one-eighth of 1 per cent of the unpaid principal of each loan at every interest date for commissions; and in this way they can materially reduce the income of the land banks. Moreover, they can not only designate the interest rate and period of new loans, but can likewise alter closed loans in these respects, and by repeated renewals make them perpetual. (Id., subsec. 5, sec. 12.)

In other words, while the board regulates the tenor, term, and effect of the bonds the borrowers can prescribe these qualities for the underlying mortgages. The board has no power to prevent the borrowers from doing this since the act expressly provides that the trusteeing of the collateral shall be "by assignment * * * reserving the right of substitution of other mortgages." (Id., sec. 19.)

This incongruity were bad enough without the other absurdities mentioned; and yet this is not all. Congress can make mortgages on urban dwelling houses as eligible as farm mortgages as the security for the bonds, and may do so to comply with the unmistakable demand of union workmen; and so the security does not rest as it should upon contractual relation between the land banks and their bondholders, but depends upon what Congress might do from time to time.

CHAPTER V.

By reason of these statutory provisions the future security of the bonds has an unknown character and value, while their term is the 20 years advertised plus a possible indefinite extension. Conversely, the bonds can be retired at the land bank's option five years after issue. (Id., sec. 20.)

Owing to the amortization of the underlying mortgages, many must, as a matter of law, be so retired before maturity, because their outstanding principal can never legally exceed the amount of their collateral. (Id., sec. 19.) The bondholder can not be awarded any premium or other compensation for this disturbance of his investment.

Since the bonds are not payable only in gold their redemption might be coincident with some paper-money era, and the constitutionality of their tax exemptions is still to be tested. Such bonds, whether refunds or original issues, must have ups and downs in the market. Quite naturally large institutional investors, like life insurance companies, have announced their preference for the old-style farm mortgage, whose book value always remains the same as its face value. (Interviews with the companies' officers, New York Sun, Dec. 27, 1918.)

In the view of all this, the bare statement of Commissioner Norris that "there is nothing unsound" in lending for 36 years money that must be repaid in 20 years is not altogether reassuring. (His article, Commercial and Financial Chronicle, Mar. 9, 1918.)

Maybe the Federal land banks, with their Government aid, can "renew their maturing obligations," as he puts it. (Id.)

But does the commissioner intend that the private joint-stock land banks, soon to be formed in numbers, shall adopt these same practices? If so, then farm finance within a few years will have sunk again as deep into disrepute as it fell in 1893 after the crash of the old farm-mortgage craze.

The security issued under the Federal farm-loan act is actually worse than the kind it was intended to replace. Unless the act or management be reformed deficits are possible, although bad conditions could go on unnoticed for some years owing to the long term of bonds and loans. However, the Federal land banks are "in substance an incorporated bureau of the Federal Government." (Gov. Charles E. Hughes in his opinion on the act's constitutionality.)

Hence the taxpayers must in honor protect the bondholders from any defaults, even though the Supreme Court knocks out the act. The country is perhaps rich enough to bear further heavy appropriations, but it can not so easily endure the setback agriculture must suffer if it relies upon a system organically wrong that has proved itself useless for emergencies.

So there is a reverse side to the sanguine hopes that Commissioner Norris expresses of avoiding the consequences of not properly matching bonds and mortgages. Indeed, from his public announcements in the Chronicle that funds for retiring the bonds are to come from such uncertain sources as the renewal of obligations and from "voluntary prepayment by the borrower and foreclosure for default," it may be concluded that he is experimenting on untried ground, has abandoned true land-credit principles, and is depending on the credit, unfortunately not yet established, of the land banks.

In attempting to refute the true reasons for the predicament of the Federal land banks, Commissioner Norris, discarding the argumentative style, resorts to such denials as "It is a wide departure from the truth to suggest," etc.; and to such unsupported assertions as "It (a land bank) will have accumulated a large reserve, because its business is bound to be very profitable." (Id., Mar. 9, 1918.) However, the commissioner disproves his own case in the same article by making the amusing inconsistency that "an agricultural bank does not pay in the ordinary commercial sense." (Id.)

Instead of requiring the associations to pay their obligatory share subscriptions and the costs of the loans in cash, each land bank has in most cases added these sums to the principal of the loan, and is recouping them by issuing bonds up to the full amount of the mortgages. By thus incurring a corresponding liability for every such increase of capital stock or assets, each land bank is not only impairing the guaranteeing value of its capital stock; it is also preventing its shares, including those held by the Government, from being withdrawn until the maturity or redemption of the bonds.

This results from the provision which forbids capital stock to be reduced to less than 5 per cent of outstanding bonds. (Federal farm-loan act, sec. 7.) Is one-fourth of the capital stock which represents the associations' subscriptions being held in quick assets, as the act requires? (Id., sec. 5.) If not, then it may be assumed that the Government's original stock contribution of $8,891,270 and 5 per cent of the new $200,000,000 appropriation will be a permanent investment.

Supervision, which would seem to be the board's chief duty in the system, is in the case of the 7,638 national banks more cheaply and efficiently done by one sole officer—the Comptroller of the Currency. Being too large for mere supervision, however, and not having enough other legal duties to justify the large salaries and expenses of its members, the board exercises managerial powers to an unnecessary extent, assuming the officers of the land banks to be competent.

CHAPTER VI.

This top-heavy arrangement and duplication of work, giving rise to complications and delays, are also responsible in part for the high cost of business. So it is generally agreed that should the act not be entirely repealed or annulled, the board must be abolished or reduced in size, or else that the land banks must be reduced in number or replaced by one single institution. The board naturally recommends the latter alternative. (Annual Report, p. 20.)

A very important point should here be noted, which is: The Federal land banks are nonprofit making. Being apparently managed for the borrowers' sole benefit, they have no adequate sources for accumulating a surplus; and so, if their bonds go to a discount, they can not easily make good the resulting deficiency in their funds; in fact, their lending operations would be blocked.

The latest bid on the bonds was 99 in a market showing symptoms of a further decline, after an announcement by the board that the Government does not guarantee them. So the depletion of funds might begin almost any time, since all but $104,214,741 of the Government's appropriations were allocated by November 30, last, and since $100,000,000 of this remainder is not available until the next fiscal year, while the aggregate of loans being approved every month equals expectations.

Nevertheless, the act gives the borrower the option to say whether these bonds shall be used instead of cash in making his loan, and allows him to tender them at par in payment of dues on his mortgage and share subscription. (Federal farm-loan act, secs. 12, 22, and 23.)

This favors prosperous farmers, who can buy the bonds at the expense of necessitous farmers who can not buy them. It also deprives the land banks of advantages coming from any premium on their own credit, and will also interfere with the accumulation of surpluses. A similar provision, before repeal, damaged even an institution as strong as the Crédit Foncier de France.

Another objection lies in the method of paying off loans by a series of installments that becomes fixed when once specified in the mortgage. The loan, of course, is the present worth of the series. Consequently if any prepayment should be made a new series would have to be calculated. Prepayments exactly divisible by $25, however, must be accepted if tendered after installments of the first five years, and be "duly" credited on the mortgage, i. e., by a amortization plan. (Id., secs. 12 and 22.) The board admits that "the cost of these new calculations would be prohibitive." (Annual Report, p. 26.)

But costs is not the only possibility. A series of sums different in size from the original installments might not be a valid lien on the mortgaged property, while a new mortgage could not prevail against the rights of intervening third parties to the title. The board suggests a way by which the land banks may account for a prepayment without losing their liens. (United States Treasury Department, 1917, circular 7.)

But this way leaves the installments fixed at their original sums, and so affords no relief to a borrower desiring to reduce his annual dues. It would have been better had the act embodied in the amortization plan the arrangement of the German landschaften or of the American building and loan associations, under which all the mortgagor's payments go into a sinking fund and may be increased or withdrawn with the leader's consent. This would have allowed annual dues to be changed without affecting the mortgage.

Contrary to the case of such an association, however, the obligatory shares of a borrower under the act do not total the full amount of his loan, nor do his credits on them offset his debt, nor may they be withdrawn within the span of a borrower's active life. These shares equal only one-twentieth of the loan, and their only relation to and effect upon it is to increase the borrower's actual interest 5 per cent over the written rate in the first year and a considerable percentage over the written rate in subsequent years.

The product of $50 at 5 per cent annually compounded for 36 years is $343.60. This is the addition to interest that the borrower pays for a $1,000 loan. The only part of the $50 that he can ever withdraw is what his double liability may leave of it in some future generation. Nevertheless, this assessment will not help the land banks much in accumulating funds, since it will be nearly all absorbed by the interest on the bonds issued against the shares.

The board attempts to square this with the farmers by speaking of dividends to them. (United States Treasury Department, 1916, Circular 3.) But it does not explain how borrowers can make distributable profits out of themselves. The whole thing is a badly modified adaptation of Austria-Hungary ideas, and looks like camouflage to cover up overhead charges of a cumbersome and costly system.

Eventually the borrower will see through it and realize that he is paying more than the apparent interest, and that he can not easily rid himself of his long-term obligations; also that he can not, without probable foreclosure, sell his mortgaged farm or pass it on to heirs unless the new owner is eligible for membership in the association guaranteeing the debt. (Federal farm-loan act, sec. 12.) The board has ruled that no executor or administrator, as such, can be a member of an association.

The inconveniences of these features, irritating and worrying the borrower, will necessarily affect the moral risk of the loans. To make matters worse, during the last two years members of the board, like political campaigners, have exaggerated the financial distress of the farmer and promised that the Government would get him money at impossibly cheaper rates than those of private lenders. (See speeches of Chairman McAdoo and Member Quick.)

CHAPTER VII.

In a similar vein the board gives assurances that the Government will soon be making loans without any delays or "economic waste" in examining titles. Since one of the land banks turned down only two titles out of 1,056 examined, the board seems to deduce "that the mortality of the average run of farm titles in this country is no greater than one-tenth of 1 per cent." (Annual Report, p. 21.)

One year's experience of just one lender, and that lender being a newly formed Government bank, is a poor criterion by which to strike averages for use in revolutionizing the land-title business of the entire United States. But this is exactly what the board proposes through an amendment of the act, which "we shall suggest at some future day, with every confidence that its necessity will be as readily recognized by Congress as by ourselves." (Id.)

The board leaves the details of this innovation to the imagination, but by obscure sentences indicates that it will make the loan requirements of the Federal land banks "less exacting than those of other institutions," but will at the same time protect them from "a largely increased percentage of bad titles," that would naturally result from such leniency. (Id.) Statements like these, while they may attract applicants for loans, are not, of course, intended for investors in the bonds.

The Federal land bank at Louisville, Ky., after having granted a $1,200 loan to an Ohio farmer, George Neundorfer, charged him $139.99 for expenses, etc. This is nearly 12 per cent of the principal or considerably more than the usual charges of a private lender. Mr. Neundorfer requests, "so as to save other farmers from disappointment," that publicity be given of the following items:

Application	$0.50
Application fee	5.50
Appraisal	4.00
Bringing abstract down to date	2.25
Extra abstract work demanded by bank	65.00
Affidavits	2.50
Stamps for note	.24
5 per cent of principal for stock	60.00
Total	139.99

Unquestioably the various defects in the act and errors of managing the system are why the board had to get $200,000,000 in January from Congress. And Congress, evidently alarmed by them, provided in making the appropriation that as long as the Government holds any of the bonds or the majority of the stock of the Federal land banks it shall continue in control.

But since the system was established upon the solemn promise that it was to be cooperatively financed and managed by the farmers, and since influential farmers' organizations are insisting upon that promise, the borrowers will probably get the control back again. The country was reconciled to the system by similar arguments, and everybody thought that it would be extended only gradually as the farmers proved their ability for it.

But the board went wild in its discretionary powers, and tried to do within a few months what could not rationally be expected inside of many years; and now through these amendments it hopes to hide or avert the trouble which its reckless course brought upon the system.

Disloyalty to cooperative principles has given the board about the same standing among farmers that it enjoys among bankers on account of its novel financial methods and lack of conservatism. It is incredible that a body of intelligent men, attached to the Treasury Department and knowing war conditions, should have authorized the land banks to make enormous commitments without first finding the money for meeting them and to grant cheaper loans than justified by the cost of business and the rate at which money could be borrowed on bonds.

Such practices would subject any private State or National bank to official investigation, and they exemplify how easily one depending upon public funds and the Government's credit can drift into evil ways.

If Congress had refused to give the $200,000,000, some members of the board and some officers of the land banks would undoubtedly have been compelled to resign. The appropriation staved off disaster but did not save reputations.

The worst that was predicted does not now look improbable. The Reclamation Service was to be repaid its expenditures by 10 annual installments from each settler on the land benefited. These installments, although not drawing interest, had to be extended to 20 years. Then the Government, in order to avoid stoppage of work if not insolvency, gave the service $1,000,000 and authorized it to issue $20,000,000 of bonds, and has so far invested $114,044,801.26 in it within 15 years. The farm-loan system in a little over one year has about trebled the Government's loans to private individuals.

The creation of bureaus is a means by which Congress delegates legislative power or assigns executive or judicial powers to avoid direct responsibility for the expenditure of taxpayers' capital or other consequences and to contravene the orderly division of government established by the Constitution; and if democracy falls it will be through them.

When a bureau has once been created Congress usually forgets it and does not again awake to the dangers of it until called upon for appropriations to make good the waste and loss occasioned by the reckless exercise of its unsupervised discretion. Not unfrequently those appointed to manage bureaus could not be elected by popular vote to anything.

CHAPTER VIII.

It may not be amiss to recount a few of the alleged happenings so far in the Federal Farm Loan Bureau. Congressman FORDNEY says he himself sold a piece of land for $2.50 the acre which the purchaser claims to have mortgaged to the Government at $15 the acre. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Jan. 4, 1918.) Senator MCCUMBER asserts that he has information from a great many sources that in certain sections of the country loans are being made for more than the full value of the land upon which the loans are being taken. (Id., Dec. 17, 1917.)

Some credence to the Senator's remark is given by Commissioner Norris himself when, in apologizing for letting each of the Federal land banks become in the main a refunding institution, he says: "It must make loans partly for refunding purposes, because it can make no loan except on first mortgage, and most farmers have existing mortgages on their lands." (Commercial and Financial Chronicle, Mar. 9, 1918.) Thus by the commissioner's own admission most of the loans made by the Government seem to exceed in amount the limit set by the liquidating private lenders.

The price of cotton is not fixed. Southern planters, it is alleged, are hoarding cotton, and have resorted to the land banks for support until its price rises to 40 cents the pound, etc. Although these rumors may not be fully substantiated, they are not more ugly than some of the board's own official statements and records.

As a sample, the board commends as "simple words full of human interest" the following remarks of a 72-year-old man, eligible for a loan to be wiped out when he is 108 years old: "We own our land and want to improve it, and are not particular how. We are not beholden to Uncle Sam, but do appreciate," etc. (Annual Report, p. 9.)

A South Carolina country banker says, so the board approvingly relates: "There is nothing that would do us so much good as to dump in this State sufficient money to take care of our standing loans, which, if not directly, are indirectly composed of farm loans. (Id., p. 7.)

Such trivialisms were unbecoming the report of a great system, but they are of service in showing the bias of the board. Title abstracts of irresponsible people were tendered by associations in district 12. (Borrowers' Bulletin.) "Most loan committees and directors approve loans that are excessive" in the associations of a certain other district. (Id., January, 1918.) The Federal land banks may lend to "alien residents" on land "rented" and "not under cultivation" and in drainage and irrigation districts, despite risks which the board admits. (Annual Report, p. 15.)

Thus the security is not all as good as the mortgages offered by many a private company, and it is also somewhat different from the promised kind. It is not necessarily a small improved tract tilled by the borrower's own hand under official inspection. In fact, all the boasted statutory restrictions are nugatory as safeguards, since by other provisions of the act their violation does not invalidate the mortgage nor oblige these borrowers' banks to foreclose. (Federal farm-loan act, subsecs. 10 and 11, sec. 12.)

Hence they can legally take any kind of mortgage. Moreover, the board, discouraged by the task of helping small farmers economically, recommends that the maximum for loans be raised to $25,000, so as to increase the proportion of profitable business. (Annual Report, p. 25; also Secretary McAdoo's 1917 Report.) That is to say, if the board's advice prevails, the original intent of the act would be modified to no good for the security, while the privileges of the system would be utilized by planters and other big speculative landowners, who could just as well be financed by private capital and who have not the remotest right to Government aid or special favors.

By contrast with itself and on the very pages whereon it tells of drumming up millions of dollars of farm loans, the board, however, issues a note of warning and despair. "Directors of the land banks are inclined to look out for the interests of their own States." (Annual report, p. 11.) Most of the officers and directors of one bank and some in another of the banks were, in fact, compelled to resign. (Id., p. 12.)

There is "doubt whether competent secretary-treasurers can be secured" for the associations. (Id., p. 24.) Incidents like these, even though they should occur in only one of the Federal land banks, would affect all of them by reason of their mutual liability; so it is to be hoped that none of these loans was closed. "In many parts of the country the organization of national farm loan associations is inspired by a desire of individuals to create jobs for themselves." (Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo, Feb., 1917.)

Here is one of many instances to show that Mr. McAdoo has not overstated the truth: A real estate agent formed an association, made himself secretary-treasurer, and got the members to buy land from him. The land was "all unimproved, timbered, and undrained." The members were "all irresponsible tie-cutters and possessed no live stock or any farming tools" and "couldn't possibly handle five acres apiece," let alone the 80 to 160 acres apiece that he had sold to them. (Borrowers' Bulletin, Jan., 1918.)

There must be a whole lot more that the board has not divulged, else it would not have concluded that "it is doubtful whether the management and control of any bank can be safely delegated to the borrowers," (Annual Report, p. 13), nor have come out as it has, practically in favor of "one single bank," in which the farmers shall have no voice. (Id., p. 20.)

Be it known, however, that no borrower has so far had any say. All officers and directors of the Federal land banks were appointed by the board, and none can act without its authority. The board should not try to escape any deserved censure by hiding behind the farmers.

NEW YORK CITY,
307 East Seventeenth Street, March, 1918.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT].

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, before making some brief observations along the line of the suggestions made by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON], I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting therein an editorial which I recently wrote for my home publication headed "The true spirit of 1918."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, this true spirit in 1918 was referred to by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON], and my conception of that spirit as enunciated and amplified in the editorial is this: The gentleman thinks that corporations should pay more taxes. I am in hearty accord with that, provided you do not go too far; that you do not go so far as to destroy their activity and hence the taxing value of their properties. I believe, according to statistics, that the purchasing power of the dollar is just about one-half what it was in 1914. In view of that fact the only possible hope for the existence of the salaried man and the laboring man is that a readjustment be made by increasing their salaries. When you increase the wage then the net income of the corporation referred to is necessarily reduced, unless it is made up by increased prices. I am in accord with the gentleman from Alabama, providing, as a gentleman stated here the other day, some one will tell me when a pig becomes a hog. In other words, just how far are you going to tax these corporations so as not to destroy their usefulness or depreciate the taxing asset and their productiveness.

I have gone so far with that view that in this article I speak of I assume a certain advanced position. I do not believe that the article is a classic, such as is "The American's Creed," which should be dedicated to the P. O. S. of A., the Jr. O. A. M., and other patriotic societies of the country, written by my friend Mr. Tyler Page, an attaché of the House, and for which he received $1,000 from a newspaper in Baltimore, embodying, as it does in 20 lines, the broadest possible conception of the fundamental principles of this Government, of the rock upon which it rests, of the war, its objects, and the fruitage of the final triumph over German autocracy, if not savagery. But this little editorial article says this, and I shall be personal, because I have a sense of pride in the fact that I have conducted a newspaper plant for more than 37 years, though I am sure I do not look it, and in all that time I never discharged a man nor reduced a wage, but always raised a wage. In this crisis I raised the wages of every man in the place, and I made this announcement under the caption of "The True Spirit of 1918," that in order to meet the depreciated purchasing power of the dollar, we would raise the wages, but not raise the price of the paper nor of the business production in any detail, upon the theory that this is no time for accumulation, but that every resource and every energy of the country should be applied to winning the war. Therefore and therein I agree with the gentleman from Alabama that, if necessary, you go right straight up to the limit of the profit of corporations above their fixed charges, sinking fund, reasonable dividends, bond interest, depreciation, and so forth.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman, and I suggest to the gentleman that before he concludes, as a part of this interesting symposium he is giving, that he include a word of approval of the river and harbor bill.

Mr. FOCHT. Well, of certain portions of it, that is, the navigable part. I do not like the aeroplane portion of the bill, that which provides for the further raising of the bed of the Mississippi River, which is now much higher than the adjacent land. I at least am prepared to pay tribute to the ability and certainly the sincerity of our friend who has so ably championed this bill, and, notwithstanding the assaults that have been made by various Members upon the provisions of the bill, I must say I admire his challenge to the House, not only as an exhibition of courage, but as one of confidence and assurance, evidently born of full knowledge and certainly of honesty of purpose, or he would not have asked the Members of the House to produce one single case provided for in the bill that was on dry land or where the willow trees grow through the bridges, or where they had to use artesian wells to raise a fog in the neighborhood.

In other words, Mr. SMALL did this, and it impressed me. He offered a challenge to my eloquent and able committee friend, Brother FREAR, to name an instance, or, as he put it, "Cite me an instance where there might be possible suspicion of graft."

This bill has been called a pork-barrel bill and a graft bill, and if anything would cause me to vote for it it would be due to my confidence in the manner in which Mr. SMALL presented the case. He is a good advocate. I do not say an apologist, because I am somewhat convinced of the merits of portions of the bill, and possibly I would feel more like voting for it at some other time, for the reason there is nothing you can do with the money if now appropriated that would be helpful in the war, because——

Mr. SMALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOCHT. I will.

Mr. SMALL. May I suggest that any criticism of the bill indicating any item in which it would not be helpful in the war would also be welcome.

Mr. FOCHT. Oh, it would; I had no idea that the gentleman would hazard——

Mr. SMALL. This bill was framed under war conditions.

Mr. FOCHT. That is an awful chance you are taking, my friend, because it may take a long while to dredge these little creeks.

Mr. SMALL. Will my friend undertake to mention an item which will not help in the war?

Mr. FOCHT. I was for years a friend of Senator Quay. His home was on the banks of the Ohio, near where Beaver River flows into that majestic stream; where Aaron Burr sailed forth with his flotilla down to Blennerhassett; and there for long years, it seemed as though the years would never end before they got those dams along the Ohio River, and do you expect this war to last as many years as it took to complete the dams I saw them working on there? If so, God help the universe. We will all be under the daisies, and there will be nothing of humanity left, all ground to ashes and translated into another existence.

Mr. SMALL. May I make a further suggestion?

Mr. FOCHT. I am going to be as generous as I can and accept this water bill "jolly," because I want the gentleman to give me time to touch upon the subject which I really had in mind when I asked the indulgence of the House.

Mr. SMALL. I think the gentleman will have that opportunity; but without conceding the correctness of the gentleman's suggestion about the Beaver River, at the present moment does the gentleman know of any project to construct locks and dams——

Mr. FOCHT. On the Ohio. I referred to the Beaver River just incidentally and historically.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SMALL. I yield three minutes additional to the gentleman. I suggest that in the Ohio River 27 dams have been completed already.

Mr. FOCHT. How long did it take to build those dams?

Mr. SMALL. Since the project was adopted in 1910 substantially all of them have been constructed, and since that time with the appropriations carried in this bill we will have 9 feet of water the year around from Pittsburgh to Cincinnati, a distance——

Mr. FOCHT. A very valuable piece of work, I realize——

Mr. SMALL (continuing). Of 460 and odd miles from Pittsburgh to Cincinnati.

Mr. FOCHT. That is eight years ago. I know of a dam that was constructed way back in 1897 or 1898——

Mr. SMALL. But whether the criticisms of the gentleman as of that time are merited or not, I will remind him at least that is ancient history, and we are talking about the river and harbor bill of 1918.

Mr. FOCHT. We want to anticipate what is going to be done to-morrow; that is the idea. What happened yesterday is gone, and the information desired is how to do things to-day. I hope you will be able to work out of the bill something in full harmony with the spirit of the times and in step with the march of advancement, and ultimately result to great good to a great people.

Mr. SMALL. I expect the gentleman to admit it has been done.

Mr. FOCHT. I appreciate the gentleman's great services rendered and would be willing to vouch that some good will follow.

The discussion this morning seemed to be around the question of political management, or management in a political way of the Post Office Department, or, rather, that those who criticized the Post Office Department attempted to make it a political matter. Now, I doubt very much whether there is anybody on this side or the other side who would for a moment attempt to cope with the Postmaster General as a master mind in political manipulation, and I do not say that to his discredit. That is his business, even though his activities may be in bad taste.

By way of digression I just referred to a man whose real virtues will not soon be written at great length any more than it took a hundred years for the popular mind to comprehend the broad, humane purposes of Napoleon Bonaparte, and the great mind and great service of Matthew Stanley Quay can not be seen nor comprehended nor appreciated now, and were not in the generation in which he lived, for the reason that he had his opponents just as any man who seeks preferment is bound to be assailed. As John Gay said:

He who free from malice would pass his days
Must live obscure and never merit praise.

This may all apply to Postmaster General Burleson. Who knows, and who cares? Nobody.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. FOCHT. I would like two minutes more, if you please.

Mr. SMALL. I yield two minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. FOCHT. Now, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] had his mind, it seemed, centered upon one idea, and that was that these, what I call observations or information furnished the House, constituted a political assault, or were in the spirit of an attempt to gather some political advantage. I do not think so at all. At least, what I am about to say is not offered through any such spirit.

I read into the RECORD here not long ago a letter from Dr. Warfield, of the Wilson College, at Chambersburg, Pa. Dr. Warfield has a son in the Army in France and is justly proud of him, and he would go himself, as we would all go, if necessary. I did not hear the inflammatory speeches to-day, and I do not care much about these assaults on the question of men's loyalty here in the House or elsewhere. Take it for granted, we are all loyal. When we find some one who is not, we understand what can be done to him. If he stands by any enemy flag he is simply a traitor; and there are laws, I think, to take care of a traitor.

Now, Dr. Warfield told in detail about sending letters to his son and how that son had written him and lamented the fact that he had never received any letters; that of two packages received by him, one was badly crushed and the other had had the contents removed. It seems to me that that ought to be regarded as information; that the Post Office Department should appreciate the fact that we do not condemn their management because they have been overloaded with something that is entirely new, or that the Post Office and the railway post-office clerks of the country are overworked and underpaid, which fact has been established.

Exploring a new field, like delivering mail throughout the camps of Europe, is something quite untried for the Post Office Department. But I can not agree with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] as to the nonexistence of such deficiencies. I have just recited this one of many instances. I will now bring something nearer home, which we will be reasonable enough to concede is in part the result of congestion; that is unavoidable.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FOCHT. I would like just one minute more, and then I will surely stop.

Mr. SMALL. I yield to the gentleman one minute more.

Mr. FOCHT. That is with regard to the delivery of mail right here.

I have repeatedly used every possible precaution with regard to the dispatch of mail to my home town, which is 200 miles directly north of here, on the Northern Central Railroad, a line over which the Buffalo trains go from here and from Philadelphia and New York. Probably 50 trains a day go each way past that town on that and another line. And yet the postmaster himself, Mr. Chance, a fine gentleman and who understands his business, virtually told me, when I brought him numerous, not 2, 3, 4 but 50, cases where letters had been mailed here of a night at, say, 10 o'clock and that had not reached their destination 200 miles away, on a run of five hours, for two and three days, even though they had a special-delivery stamp on them. And I found that the only hope of getting letters from here on the following morning after they were mailed would be to take them myself not to the post office over at the House Office Building, not to the city post office even, but actually out into the station, and hand them to the clerk who handles the mail on the car.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. FOCHT. Just one minute in which to finish.

Mr. SMALL. I yield to the gentleman one minute more.

Mr. FOCHT. I am not willing to suggest a new Postmaster General, nor am I able to supply one under this administration. Certainly the Democratic Party could not get a better politician, and it may be that no one else could fill this bill any better at this time, and I doubt whether you could get a better postmaster than Mr. Chance. I am willing to allow the thing to rest as the result of congestion caused by war conditions, but let us hope that Mr. Cox will not consider that these observations, such as I have made—concrete, specific, definite—are offered through any desire to gain political advantage for my party. Let us hope that inasmuch as they exist, and it can not be denied that they exist, both parties act harmoniously in the hope of breaking the embargo or the deadlock in the distribution of the mail on the battle fields of Europe and at home, wherever it may be, and that in this effort there may be accomplishment in the elimination of some of this mail—I do not know what to denominate it, but it has been characterized here to-day, I think, sufficiently well for everybody to understand what is meant by Creel excess of junk. Let there be first dispatched not nonessential mail but personal mail that goes to your family, goes to your boys at the front. This ought to be 100 per cent delivered. By harmonious activity here I am sure that can be accomplished without anyone being subject to the criticism of any Member who has it in his heart to challenge a Republican on the ground that he is making these charges for political advantage.

[From the Lewisburg Saturday News.]

THE TRUE SPIRIT OF 1918.

During this time of war and blood and world desolation the true national spirit is manifesting itself on every hand. That spirit carries the thought and cherished hope, as well as determined resolution, that this Nation shall live on for future generations of free men, and for distant centuries to applaud. In this sacred national spirit the aim is to survive the storm and not to think of profit or accumulation at such a time.

This suggestion comes straight home to the Saturday News at a time when many publications are advancing the subscription price, and justifiably so since the cost of all materials is constantly advancing. But the Saturday News has a covenant with its patrons, and that is that if all pay then our price will remain the same, and every sacrifice will be made to meet our part of the contract. We do not hope nor aim to profit during this struggle to maintain liberty's priceless jewel—just to live it through and win! Although we have met the higher cost of necessaries by advancing our employee's wages, we are not going to advance the subscription price.

BENJAMIN K. FOCHT.

STORY OF THE AMERICAN'S CREED.

The idea of laying emphasis on the duties and obligations of citizenship in a national creed originated with Henry S. Chapin and was first announced by him in Educational Foundations in September, 1916. The contest was to have closed in December, 1916, but patriotic societies, among which the Vigilantes figured prominently, asked that the closing be postponed until Nation-wide publicity be given the announcement.

In March, 1917, the city of Baltimore, as the birthplace of the "Star-Spangled Banner," offered, through Mayor James H. Preston, a prize of $1,000. Committees were then appointed to pass upon the creeds submitted. These committees were: (1) A committee on manuscripts, consisting of Porter Emerson Browne, Henry S. Chapin, Hermann Hagedorn, and representatives from leading American magazines; (2) a committee on award, consisting of Matthew Page Andrews, Irvin S. Cobb, Hamlin Garland, Ellen Glasgow, Julian Street, Booth Tarkington, and Charles Hanson Towne; (3) an advisory committee, consisting of Dr. P. P. Claxton, United States Commissioner of Education, and other National and State officials.

Several thousand creeds were submitted to the committee on manuscripts. Fifty of these were turned over to the committee on award, and "Creed No. 384" was selected as the best. The envelope containing the author's name was opened in New York City March 6, 1918.

It was then disclosed that the author of No. 384 was William Tyler Page, of Friendship Heights, Md. His creed was selected because it was not only brief and simple but remarkably comprehensive of the best American ideals, history, and tradition as expressed by the founders of the Republic and its greatest statesmen and writers. Those authorities are appended in the key below. Inquiry developed also that the author was a descendant of a President of the United States, John Tyler, and of a signer of the American Declaration of Independence, Carter Braxton; that he was born in Frederick, Md., the birthplace of Francis Scott Key; and that he attended the public schools of Baltimore, the birthplace of "The Star-Spangled Banner."

THE AMERICAN'S CREED.

I believe in the United States of America as a Government of the people, by the people, for the people, whose just powers are derived from the consent of the governed; a democracy in a Republic; a sovereign Nation of many sovereign States; a perfect Union, one and inseparable; established upon those principles of freedom, equality, justice, and humanity for which American patriots sacrificed their lives and fortunes.

I therefore believe it is my duty to my country to love it, to support its Constitution, to obey its laws, to respect its flag, and to defend it against all enemies.

Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MAGEE].

Mr. MAGEE. Mr. Chairman, I have heard so many charges upon the floor of the House in reference to expenditure of public funds that I desire to make a suggestion. It seems to me that the greatest legislative body on earth owes it to itself and to the country to take some appropriate action that will eliminate forever all probable cause for a Member of the House to rise in his seat and charge that public moneys are being unwisely, unlawfully, and shamefully expended.

To this end I have introduced a resolution to amend Rule X of the Rules of the House by striking therefrom the several standing committees on expenditures in the several departments of the Government and substituting in lieu thereof a committee on public accounts. I have not taken this action in any spirit of criticism of the work of such standing committees. Undoubtedly these committees have rendered valuable services in the past. I do not know the full extent of their active functions now. I have heard some discussions in the House, instituted by one of more of these committees, in reference to the appointment of an additional clerk or increased compensation for some employee.

My motive in introducing the resolution is purely in the public interest, and the resolution is not intended to reflect in any manner or degree, directly or inferentially, anything of a personal nature.

I have been impelled to introduce the resolution to meet existing conditions, and particularly in view of the vast expenditures required for the vigorous and successful prosecution of the war. As I understand, the estimated expenditures for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, aggregate nearly $20,000,000,000, including loans and prospective loans to our allies. The estimated expenditures for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, as stated by the recent distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations last December, aggregate, in round figures, $12,000,000,000, which estimate, in my judgment, is too low, and much more than this amount will be needed to meet the actual expenditures of such fiscal year.

In my judgment, during the period of the war an annual expenditure of $15,000,000,000 is a very moderate estimate. This sum is almost beyond human grasp. As a yearly expenditure it would mean, in round figures $41,000,000 per day, $1,700,000 per hour, $28,000 per minute, and over $450 every second.

The question in my mind, as to these vast expenditures, is, What responsibility rests upon each Member of the House? In my judgment, a greater responsibility rests upon the Members of the House than upon the Members of the Senate, because under the Federal Constitution all bills for raising revenue must originate in the House.

Since the declaration of war the Congress has invested the Executive with tremendous and extraordinary powers during the duration of the war. We, upon this side of the aisle, have most generously supported every measure demanded by the Executive for the vigorous and successful prosecution of the war and will continue to do so. In addition, take, for instance, the act creating the War Finance Corporation. Under that act it would be possible for those vested with authority to carry out its provisions to so abuse their power as to make one man and at the same time to break financially a competitor. We must assume that this law will be executed wisely, impartially, and solely in the public interest. This act also will require the raising of vast sums of money.

It is apparent that to meet the public needs during the war the taxpayers of the country must submit to further heavy exactions, and that patriotic American citizens must subscribe for and purchase, even to the point of great personal sacrifices, many billions of dollars worth of liberty bonds. Our Army and Navy at home and abroad must be equipped and maintained in the most efficient manner. The hands of the administration must be resolutely upheld, and all the needs of the Government for the vigorous prosecution of the war must be supplied by the people of this country.

Taking into consideration that the estimated visible wealth of this country is something like $230,000,000,000, it at once becomes apparent, in view of our enormous expenditures and of our future financial requirements how important it is that our citizens who pay heavy taxes and who subscribe for and purchase most liberally liberty bonds, shall have absolute confidence that the Congress will see that the vast sums of money raised and provided shall be expended by the Government lawfully, wisely, and economically.

In the declaration of war we have pledged all the resources of the country for the vigorous and successful prosecution thereof. In view of the foregoing facts, and in view of existing conditions, and the probable long continuance of the titanic conflict in which the Nation is now most actively engaged, I most respectfully contend that the responsibility of a Member of the House does not end with the authorization of these vast expenditures. There is, in my judgment, an additional grave responsibility resting upon each Member to do all within his power to ascertain whether these vast expenditures required by war are being lawfully, wisely, and economically made. We are entitled to have this information and the country is entitled to have it. [Applause.]

It is impossible, in my judgment, under existing conditions to obtain this information. It is hardly practicable, and probably not desirable that any one of the existing standing committees on expenditures should make a particular investigation and report to the House under the limited jurisdiction of any one of these 10 committees. What we want and should have is one committee vested with the power to investigate all governmental expenditures and report thereon to the House.

My proposed amendment to Rule X, if adopted, will meet the exigencies of the situation. This is apparent from the results obtained and the great public benefits derived from the creation and existence of the committee on public accounts in the House of Commons.

The organization, character, and duties of this great committee have been excellently described by Mr. Thomas Gibson Bowles in his testimony before the select committee on national expenditure in 1902, to wit:

The committee of public accounts is a standing committee of 11 members—I think it has been increased now to 15—whereof 5 constitute a quorum. It was established in 1862; that was the date of the first standing order. The committee is nominated at the commencement of every session by the House of Commons under standing order 57, for the "examination of accounts showing the appropriation of the sums granted by Parliament to meet the public expenditure"—a phrase which, as will, I think, be seen, by no means completely describes the duties it performs, those duties being considerably wider than that phrase would suggest. The chairman of the committee is by usage appointed from amongst the members of the committee belonging to the opposition. Though not restricted to the ground covered by the comptroller and auditor general in his annual reports on the appropriation accounts, the committee in its usual practice is guided by those reports in its selection of subjects for consideration, and of the officials, whether accounting officers or others whom it directs to attend for examination. The comptroller and auditor general calls its attention to the points whereon question has arisen during the audit of those accounts conducted by himself and his staff, and the committee elucidates each point and reports on the whole to the House. Thus the comptroller and auditor general is to a large extent the acting hand of the committee. He detects the points of question, presents them with such information concerning them as he has obtained, and leaves the committee to pursue them further, to consider them, and report on them. It is therefore essential that the preliminary work of the comptroller and auditor general should be well and thoroughly done, or the committee may fail in its subsequent work, and in its final object of securing and enforcing parliamentary control over the public accounts.

The comptroller and auditor general, I may say, always attends the committee sittings, as does also a principal permanent officer of the treasury. Now, the functions of the public accounts committee extend beyond the formality of the expenditure, to its wisdom, faithfulness, and economy. Those functions, it must be remembered, embrace as well the receipt side as the issue side of the account. They amount to an enlarged revision of the comptroller and auditor general's report on his appropriation audit. They supplement the inquiries made by him and his officers in the course of that audit, by further inquiries made by oral examination, not alone of the accounting officer strictly so called, but of any other officials concerned in the expenditures whom the committee may call before them.

Moreover, and this is most important, the functions of the committee extend to a supervision over the form and number of the estimates for the grants in supply, any change in which should be submitted to be approved by the committee before being made, as was done in 1867 and 1881.

The committee has always shown itself, I may say, strongly opposed to any diminution in the number of votes of which the estimates are composed as being calculated to diminish the control over those votes of the House of Commons; it has set its face generally against making large votes of lump sums, and has favored the subdivision of votes rather than their inclusion in one. I have illustrative references here to a number of documents, with which I need not at present trouble the committee.

I may add that the functions of the committee extend to an examination of the executive action of the treasury as regards its compliance with the law. (See Second Report, 1900.) With so wide a horizon, so considerable a freedom in action, and so great opportunities in its methods of inquiry as the public accounts committee possesses, its capacities for public uses are great. It does actually on the appropriation accounts what the House of Commons does theoretically on the estimates, and does it to far more purpose, for it deals not with possibly inaccurate estimates of expenditure, but with the actual ascertained expenditure itself, and has before it for examination not alone a minister often imperfectly informed, but the very officers concerned with all the details of the expenditure, whom, in case of question, it puts upon their defense and elicits their first-hand explanations. As a check upon not merely extravagant or unauthorized expenditure, but also upon unwise methods of management, this committee is probably more effectual than the House of Commons itself. (Financial Administration of Great Britain, by Willoughby, Willoughby & Lindsay, pp. 228–230.)

On page 232 of this work is found the following important statement, to wit:

Another point of no little importance is the fact that this committee, both in its personnel and its work, is essentially nonpartisan in character. With the chairman chosen from "the opposition," there is no danger of the committee passing over delinquencies of the executive as a matter of party expediency. On only two occasions has the custom of choosing the chairman from "the opposition" been departed from. All officials interviewed emphasized in the strongest way possible this high character of the committee and the spirit in which it performs its duties.

Durell, in Parliamentary Grants, on page 134, in reference to this committee, says:

> The functions of the public accounts committee which have been so far dealt with are, in the main, those whereby it examines the actual accounts before it with a view to recording its opinion, in the first place, of their correctness as accounts, and, secondly, as to their "wisdom, faithfulness, and economy."

I think that it is entirely feasible for a great committee of this House to act in a nonpartisan manner and wholly in the public interest. I have the honor to be a member of the great Judiciary Committee of the House, and I have never observed any action taken by that committee in a spirit of partisanship. [Applause.]

The power to tax means the power to destroy, the power to confiscate all the property that a citizen possesses. It is a power that should be exercised with the greatest precaution and wisdom, and should be so exercised, particularly in time of war, as to gain the confidence of the persons taxed. Our people are most loyal and patriotic. They are willing to give all they have, if necessary, to preserve free democracies, and for the advancement of Christianity and civilization. They are willing to fulfill our pledge made in the declaration of war—the pledging of all the resources of our country.

We must not shirk our responsibility. If profiteering exists, it must be ruthlessly eliminated. Our boys have been going, are still going, and will continue to go over-seas, ready to make the supreme sacrifice if needs be for their country, and we must unitedly and fearlessly sustain them in upholding the most righteous cause that soldiers and seamen ever fought for. [Applause.]

Therefore, I want to warn you and to impress upon you that the responsibility of a Member of the House does not end with the authorization of vast expenditures. There exists the further imperative duty of seeing that public moneys shall be lawfully, wisely, and economically expended.

We, upon this side of the aisle, the minority, do more than ask you upon the other side of the aisle, the majority, to meet this responsibility; we demand that you meet it in the public interest and for the sake of our common country. [Applause.]

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STRONG]—how much time does the gentleman wish?

Mr. STRONG. Fifteen minutes. I probably will not use that much.

Mr. SMALL. I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STRONG] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. STRONG. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, what I wish to say will be somewhat in the nature of a report, which I feel, as a matter of duty, I should make to the House at this time, and because of the character of the report I shall make use of figures in the course of my remarks, and to avoid error I have made a note of the main facts I wish to discuss.

No doubt every Member of Congress recognizes the necessity, because of the war, of strict economy in Government expenditures, and I assume that every Member is glad to have facts submitted to justify the appropriation of public money for any particular project. I therefore respectfully call your attention to certain facts which alone will in a large measure justify the appropriations for two projects provided for in the pending bill, which facts no other person could submit unless having first obtained them from myself, or unless first making an investigation such as I made.

That you may understand how I acquired the information I refer to, I will explain that during the year 1900 I was retained by a firm located in New York City to prospect for and to purchase coal lands in western Pennsylvania. My investigations covered several counties, but my principal work was along the Allegheny River, where I found the greatest quantity and best quality of coal. I was employed almost constantly for a period of 15 years in searching for and purchasing coal property. There was no difficulty in finding coal in that country by its outcroppings on the hillsides, but, as in probably all hill countries, there has been more or less disturbance of the strata, creating what are called "faults," in places completely crushing out the coal, it was hazardous when purchasing to rely upon a superficial examination of the territory. Therefore, in order to ascertain for a certainty whether the strata or formations were in their natural position and the coal running an even and satisfactory thickness, I made use of drilling machines for the purpose of testing the coal and other minerals.

The result of my investigation will interest you in connection with the bill under consideration. In a strip of territory about 75 miles long and 5 miles wide on each side of the Allegheny River I put down about 800 test holes with my drilling machines. In connection with this investigation I made a general study of the geological formation of that country, with the following result:

I found that in western Pennsylvania there are 16 seams or veins of coal, 11 of which, at various points, are thick enough to be workable.

You know that because the Monongahela River was improved by the Government some years ago and because of the presence of coal the tremendous tonnage-producing manufacturing plants established in the Monongahela Valley have made that district the most wonderful industrial center in the world, and the same result is bound to follow the improvement of the Allegheny River. While it is not generally known, it is, nevertheless, a fact that there is more coal tributary to the Allegheny than to the Monongahela, and, in addition, the Allegheny district is rich in other minerals, which I will refer to later in my remarks.

It is true the Monongahela can boast of the famous Pittsburgh vein of coal. This vein, like the other strata in western Pennsylvania, rises to the northeast and dips to the southwest. When we go up the Monongahela to where the coal is being operated, we travel south from Pittsburgh. Going north, the last trace of the Pittsburgh vein is found in the top of a high hill in the southwest corner of Indiana County, one of the counties in the congressional district I have the honor to represent. North of this point the Pittsburgh vein is "up in the air," so to speak, and is not found again.

The several seams of coal under the Pittsburgh vein are in the following order:

Name of vein.	Thickness.	Additional depths.	Below the Pittsburgh vein.
	Feet.	Feet.	Feet.
Not named	0 to 1	88	88
Elklick	0 to 3	190	278
Not named	0 to 1	43	321
Bakerstown	0 to 4	80	401
Brush Creek	0 to 2	119	520

These veins are in what is called the lower barren measures.

We now come to the several veins of coal under the Pittsburgh vein, some of which, rising to the north, come to the surface and outcrop on the hillsides bordering the Allegheny River, and which are in what are called the lower productive measures:

Name of vein.	Thickness.	Additional depths.	Below the Pittsburgh vein.
	Feet.	Feet.	Feet.
Upper Freeport	4 to 6	83	603
Lower Freeport	4 to 6	51	654
Upper Kittanning	1 to 3	65	719
Middle Kittanning	1 to 4	45	764
Lower Kittanning	3 to 6	38	802
Clarion	1 to 4	70	872
Brookville	4 to 5	30	902
Upper Mercer	1 to 2	45	947
Lower Mercer	4 to 5	32	979
Sharon Block Coal	3 to 4	136	1,115

You will observe that the Upper Freeport, Lower Freeport, Lower Kittanning, and the Brookville are the valuable veins in the Allegheny Valley group. These veins are all accessible for drift mining on the river, except the Brookville vein, which is about at water lever and would be reached with a slope or short shaft.

The Lower Mercer and Sharon veins could also be reached with a shaft, but in view of the quantity of coal in the more easily accessible veins, they are not being considered at present by the Allegheny Valley operators within the zone of my investigation.

While it is true that the four veins of value mentioned as tributary to the Allegheny River, all of which are now being operated, do not run an even thickness over the entire area, in some places where one is thick the others being thin, it is conservative to say, after a careful consideration of my investigation, that they are at least equivalent to one continuous vein 7 feet thick, extending about 75 miles along the river and averaging 5 miles wide on each side, making 750 square miles, or 480,000 acres, containing more than 5,000,000,000 tons of marketable coal.

I also found the following additional minerals along the Allegheny River, all above water level and easily accessible: Three veins of limestone, one 15 feet thick, which, with water transportation, could be mined and shipped to the furnaces in the Pittsburgh district for fluxing purposes, or it could be burned and shipped by water to enrich the farms along the lower rivers.

Eight veins of clay, some of which are being used at the present time in the manufacture of pottery ware, building brick, fireproofing, sewer tile, silica, or fire brick, and furnace blocks, the latter being used for lining the great furnaces in the Pittsburgh district. These clay veins come to the surface at different points and extend along the river a distance of about 75 miles, finally running out because of the natural rise of the strata. Being easily accessible along the river and its tributaries, it is certain that, following the improvement of the river, the Allegheny Valley will become one of the greatest clay-product manufacturing centers in the United States. The Plaza Hotel of New York City was built of brick manufactured on the banks of the Allegheny River.

I also found seven veins of shale ranging in thickness from 12 to 50 feet, which, used in connection with certain of the clays, make vitrified paving blocks excelling others thus far in competitive tests.

The Mahoning sandstone, 40 feet thick, and another vein 30 feet thick, high in silica and suitable for the manufacture of glass.

We also have along the Allegheny River and its tributaries a vein of iron ore 20 inches in thickness. While this is not of appreciable value at present, I might mention as an interesting fact that from 1830 to 1850 14 blast furnaces drew their supply of ore from this vein, and the iron turned out was transported down the river in flatboats to Pittsburgh. It was from iron made on the banks of the Allegheny River that the guns were manufactured in Pittsburgh with which the Army of Gen. Scott was equipped when in 1847 he fought his way into the City of Mexico.

Beginning immediately on the top of the hills bordering the Allegheny River and along its entire length are beautiful farms, well cultivated and occupied by a highly intelligent people. During the years of my investigation I practically lived with these people. The city daily papers are delivered at their doors, and in the majority of the homes you will find a telephone. These men on the farms nowadays are, as a class, better posted on what Congress is doing than is the average city club man, and I have heard many bitter comments from them and from the business men in cities and towns along the river about the neglect of the Allegheny while other and less promising streams are favored.

I notice in the minority report on the bill under consideration, filed by the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin, that no particular criticism is made of the item for the Allegheny River, for which I commend his good judgment. In fact, his criticism of the bill is in general terms and somewhat against the improvement of all inland waterways. He points out that the average haul on the Ohio is 28 miles; then adds that the plan for the improvement of the Ohio includes 54 locks, and that of this number the first 20 are not fully completed. The expected results to follow the improvement of the Ohio or of any other stream can only be realized when the work is finished.

I read a recent newspaper item which appeared under the head of "Slack-watering of river boosts business":

PITTSBURGH, March 29.

Manufacturers along the banks of the Allegheny River are looking ahead. Already plans are being laid by several concerns for the opening and developing of coal lands in the upper river as soon as that part of the stream has been slack-watered. Millions of tons of coal are awaiting shipment by river, which only will be available when the proposed dams are completed. The Kittanning Iron & Steel Co. and the Carbon Steel Co., with mines on the Cowanshannoc Creek, one of the tributaries of the Allegheny River, 49 miles above the mouth, are making plans for the mining of its coal and for shipment by river to the plants on the lower shores. This mine is in the proposed seventh pool. The coal is said to be of the Kittanning seam and is of excellent quality for coking purposes. A number of years ago coal was mined and coked near that place, some of the coke ovens still being in existence.

The United States Aluminum Co. received a Federal permit to construct a coal tipple and erect dolphins on the left bank of the Allegheny River, Westmoreland County, 6 miles above Lock No. 3 and 22.7 miles above the mouth. The mine opening is exactly opposite Tarentum.

We of the Allegheny Valley are anxiously looking forward to the time when we will be able to develop our vast natural resources and find a market for our mineral and manufactured products by an inland waterway extending 2,000 miles from the Allegheny to the Gulf, but to realize all this the work so well and wisely begun on the Ohio and Allegheny must be completed. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I want to add, for the information of the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, that some few years ago I appeared before that body and made an argument in support of the Allegheny River project, at which time I submitted very many of the figures which I have given to-day, but at that time my investigations were still in progress. The figures I give now are up to date as the result of my complete investigation, which will explain the slight differences between the figures in my remarks to-day and those contained in my remarks on the former occasion.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STRONG] has made a very interesting address, particularly regarding the commerce on the Allegheny River. The gentleman called my attention this morning to an article in the Pittsburgh Post of April 5 giving some information regarding river tonnage on the Monongahela River, and I ask permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD by publishing this interesting statement, illustrating the growth of commerce there. The last reports of the Engineers gives the commerce for 1916 as 12,000,000 tons, while this clipping from the Pittsburgh Post indicates a tonnage of 20,000,000 for 1918.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks leave to extend his remarks in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following is the clipping referred to.

[From the Pittsburgh Post, Apr. 5, 1918.]

RIVER TONNAGE BREAKS RECORDS DURING MARCH—20,000,000 TONS TOTAL DURING 1918 IS FORECASTED—COAL BUSINESS HUGE.

Transportation on the Monongahela River has broken all records during the past month. The end of the present year will see figures beyond the 20,000,000-ton mark.

During the last month Lock 3, at Elizabeth, Monongahela River, broke all records when 1,392,460 tons were locked through, as against 1,073,720 tons during the same period last year. The lockages during the last month at this point were 1,243,000 tons of coal, 43,500 tons of coke; sand and gravel, 69,460 tons; miscellaneous cargo, 36,500 tons; lockages, 1,260. During the same period last year the amount of coal shipped was 969,000 tons; miscellaneous cargo, 28,700 tons; sand and gravel, 75,000 tons; and 944 lockages. The lock was out of commission for two days during the month on account of high water.

More than 25,991,000 bushels of coal passed through Lock 4, Monongahela River, during March. During the same time 1,658,000 bushels of coke passed that lock. This tonnage established a record, as the lock was in operation only 29 days on account of high water, while the mines were idle for a long period. One hundred and two thousand bushels of sand and gravel were locked through upstream during this period; also 47,000 cubic feet of lumber. The number of lockings both up and down stream during the month of March were 1,061.

The shipments for March show that the figures for the same period of last year were almost doubled. In 1877 the shipments of coal through this lock, which then was owned by the Monongahela Navigation Co., were 2,300,700 bushels of coal, on which tolls were collected amounting to $6,499.34, while the shipments for the entire year amounted to 14,440,200 bushels, on which the tolls amounted to $49,061.51. The shipments during the past month were almost double those of the entire year 41 years ago.

Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, before beginning I want to ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, during the extra session of Congress we were called upon to consider a vast amount of legislation made necessary by reason of the war.

One of the most important pieces of legislation was the war-risk insurance act. Under that law we granted to every commissioned officer and enlisted man, to every member of the Army Nurse Corps and Navy Nurse Corps, when employed in active service under the War or Navy Department, the privilege of taking out insurance up to the amount of $10,000, upon the payment by such persons of insurance rates based upon the American Experience Table of Mortality, the Government itself carrying the extra risk of insurance which a private insurance company would regard as worth many times the premium rate that the Government requires.

Under this law those eligible to take out insurance have very generally availed themselves of the opportunity. Many, however, have not, and this fact should call to our attention one of the provisions of the insurance act that we should modify at this time.

Under the law it was provided that all who were in the military or naval service on the 6th day of April, 1917, or who should be in such service at the time of the publication of the terms and conditions under which insurance would be issued, would be regarded as insured, regardless of whether or not they had made application for insurance, for a period of 120 days. It was also provided that all those in the service, as indicated, would have the opportunity for 120 days of taking out insurance, and all who would be enlisted in the service subsequently to the publication of the terms and conditions of the insurance would likewise have 120 days within which they could take out insurance. Early in February the Congress extended the time of those in the service when the act became effective to April 12.

The Congress did not provide that any person who otherwise would be eligible to take out insurance who failed to avail himself of the privilege within the time indicated would ever again have the opportunity of taking out insurance under the war-risk act. Let us consider this.

Why should a soldier who has omitted to take out an insurance policy within the period of 120 days following his enlistment be denied that privilege? We may be engaged in war for a number of years. Why should a soldier be compelled once for all to decide within the first several months after his enlistment that during the entire period of the war—which may be two years or five years or seven years—that he will or will not take out an insurance policy in behalf of his wife, his child, his mother, or other dependents?

I think if we study over the question we must come to the conclusion that there can be no good reason. Let me give a few cases to illustrate my point:

NEW RESPONSIBILITIES.

Here is a young man who has enlisted as a volunteer and who is but 18 years of age. As he leaves home to become a member of the Army his father is living and is amply able to support the family. His father is scarcely 40 years of age. There are other children—little folks, from 10 years old to a babe in arms—in that household. Why should the young man of 18 years be put upon notice that unless he anticipate all the future changes that may occur at home within a period of 120 days, and determine wisely within that time, he will be denied the privilege of revoking his decision after 120 days shall have passed by? After this young man has been enlisted for a period of six months, suppose the father dies. Who then, next to the mother, is the mainstay of the family? Who is the wage earner? Why, in our country we are proud to recall that thousands upon thousands of our boys—18, 19, and 20 years of age—have become the strong support of a family of a mother and little brothers and sisters. And yet, under the law as it now is, if the father die, and notwithstanding the fact that the young man by his enlistment has placed himself in such a position where he can not give the protection and support to the home that he would like to give, we say to him: "No; you must serve your country for two or for seven years; but, while your associates may carry insurance to protect their loved ones, you may not."

Suppose another case. Here is a young man who enlisted as a private and goes away from home, leaving father and mother well along in the sixties. A flourishing business is theirs. The young man sees no reason why he should carry an insurance policy. He is not receiving as a soldier the compensation that he was receiving in his business before he enlisted or was drafted. At home the family has the normal comforts of life and only a prophet could foresee that misfortune would overtake that household. Yet it is only the history of common experience, and brought to us by observation over and over again, that families of opulence and wealth are often brought to poverty through fire, through flood, through tornado, through disaster of one kind or another, that can not be foreseen any more than it can be withstood. Let us suppose that this home—a home of comfort when the young man enlisted or was selected under the draft—has become impoverished. The father may be able to make a bare living for his family during the days that he may live; but he may not be able to rally again, financially, and this young man is denied, under the terms of the law as it is, the privilege of doing what most of the soldiers have already done—the privilege of taking out an insurance policy that will give that last protection, and only substantial protection, that, as a soldier, he can give to his mother or to his father.

Again, here is a soldier, a private, who took out a policy for $500 or $1,000. His pay was small; the demands of those dependent upon him were large. More than that, when the campaigns for the floating of liberty loan bonds were made he subscribed liberally, he gave to the Red Cross, and the young man felt that he could not take an insurance policy greater than $1,000 or $2,000. The young man is industrious, capable, efficient. He earns a promotion—he becomes a corporal, a sergeant, possibly a lieutenant, a colonel. The needs of his family are no greater now, it may be, than they were at the time of his enlistment. But the young man is much more able to care for his responsibilities than when he was a private. Yet, after 120 days have passed by, he may not increase his insurance.

So I could continue, and without drawing upon the imagination, but merely suggesting that which is commonplace and within the experience and observation of us all, I could call attention to case after case of change of circumstances that would make it wholly desirable for a soldier to take out an insurance policy subsequent to 120 days after he enlisted when circumstances shall come about that no foresight could protect against.

WHY WAS NOT PROVISION IN LAW?

The question is asked, Why was this provision not placed in the law? Well, the question seems not to have received a great amount of attention, and yet as we look back two reasons seem to have been responsible for it:

First, the Congress desired that those in the service of the country would not delay, but that they would take advantage of the opportunity afforded.

Again, it was probably felt that unless a time limit were placed in the measure there would be some who would be indifferent to taking out an insurance policy who, after having suffered some disability, possibly of critical character, would, while under such disability and before being discharged from the service, throw a heavy responsibility onto the Government without paying very much for it.

PENDING BILL MEETS BOTH REASONS.

I believe that my bill will take care of both of these propositions. In the first place, there will constantly be the incentive to those eligible to take out a policy to do so within a period of 120 days, because during that period they will not need to accompany their application with any kind of certificate showing that they are on duty or that they are capable of reporting for duty. This added requirement, it would seem, would constitute a very impelling reason for one capable of taking out an insurance policy to act within the period of 120 days after enlistment.

Again, to prevent anyone from throwing the responsibility of the insurance onto the Government at a time when the applicant might be ill or disabled, my amendment provides that following the period of 120 days the application shall be accompanied by a certificate from an officer of the company of the applicant, or in lieu thereof a certificate from any medical officer in the service of the Government.

I have provided these two alternatives as regards certificate, for this reason: If a person is on duty, we may assume, as we do for the period of 120 days, that he is physically able to be on duty. I have provided that in lieu of a certificate from an officer of the company of which an applicant may be a member he may accompany his application by a certificate from a medical officer in the service of the United States, for the reason that it oftentimes happens that men are detached from the company to which they belong. They are granted furloughs, or they are on detached service, and it seems that to such men there should be accorded some opportunity of taking out an insurance policy, and it seemed to me that the practicable way to meet the situation is to provide that such a person could appear before any medical officer of the Government in any place and receive from him a certificate touching his physical condition indicating that he is fit for duty.

REASONS THAT SUPPORTED ORIGINAL MEASURE SUPPORT THIS BILL.

Every reason that impelled the Congress in the first instance to pass the war-risk insurance act applies equally as strongly in favor of the bill that I have now proposed, to the extent that there will be those who will desire to avail themselves of its provisions.

I approve most heartily of the statement of Secretary McAdoo before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, on August 17 last, when he urged the passage of the war-risk insurance bill, saying:

> When the Government destroys the earning power of the individual to that extent (that is, by drawing men under the selective-draft law into the military service at $30 or $33 per month when the earning capacity of these men is very high) destroys his insurability, and then drafts him into extra hazardous service, which may result in the destruction of his life or in permanently disabling him, it owes that man restitution. I use that word because it expresses my idea exactly.

Why, then, did we pass the war-risk insurance act in the first place? It was because we are taking men and women from their usual vocations within which they could take out life insurance policies in some one of the commercial life insurance companies of our country, and we are placing them in a service where the insurance companies could not continue to bear the insurance at the old rate, but would require premiums equal to eight or ten times the normal premium risk on each policy.

Now, that same condition exists with regard to those who may not take out the insurance policy within a period of 120 days. Those who may not and who will desire to avail themselves of the privileges of the measure that I am advocating will be those upon whose shoulders responsibilities have been placed for the most part following the period of 120 days. Can they be distinguished from those who took out an insurance policy within the period of 120 days? They are in the service of the Government. They are in a service that is hazardous. They are in a service that will prevent them from taking out an insurance policy in any of the life insurance companies at the normal premium rates that apply to people in civil life. Why should they not have the opportunity that their fellows have of taking out an insurance policy with the Government, they paying the normal standard premium for the insurance and the Government assuming the hazard for which private insurance companies would charge large sums?

There is still another consideration in favor of this bill. Under the terms of the law as it now is there are undoubtedly thousands of persons who have taken out policies within the period of 120 days after enlistment in order to be on the safe side. They are people who are in comfortable financial circumstances, and they do not have immediate dependents. However, they do not know but that circumstances at home will be modified after a period of 120 days, and in order to insure themselves against that peradventure they have been willing to write an insurance policy that they did not care for—place it in the name of somebody to whom they were not under obligation or responsibility for support, pending the time when possibly they would have responsibilities that the policy could serve to protect.

Under the measure that I have introduced, persons of that character could feel that they could wait until a responsibility presented itself and then take out the insurance in favor of the person toward whom the responsibility extended, and the Government would be saved the risk in the meantime.

And furthermore, while there may be men in the service of such means that they will carry a policy for an indefinite period pending the time they may need it, what shall we say of the humbler soldier, who is not financially able to carry a policy until he shall be in actual need of protecting some one? Shall we not let this soldier avail himself of the benefit of an insurance policy?

There is another feature of the law touching the war risk that the Government is glad to assume for the officers and privates in the service of the United States that I can not fail to call to your attention. We want to be fair by the private just as we want to be fair by the officer, yet what is the situation? Under the law the private receives but a small allowance to tide him over the period that he is in the service and to help him contribute something to the support of those who have claim upon him; an officer receives a compensation that is somewhat commensurate with his responsibilities. The pay of a second lieutenant is $1,700; the pay of a lieutenant general is $9,000; and of a general, $10,000. The other officers in the ratio of their rank and responsibilities receive salaries that fall in between these extremes. It will be seen that the officer can much more readily carry a large insurance policy, possibly the maximum, than can a young man who is merely a private drawing $30 or $33.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. But the amount he can carry is limited.

Mr. FRENCH. The limit is $10,000 in both instances. But the officer can carry that maximum much more readily than can the young man who is merely a private.

Mr. McKEOWN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. McKEOWN. Is it not a fact, however, that the officers are compelled to pay large expenses out of their salaries, so that they really do not net much more than a private?

Mr. FRENCH. Oh, it is true that they have very heavy responsibilities to meet. I was going to mention that. But it is also true that an officer, especially above the grade of lieutenant, can far more easily bear the item of carrying an insurance policy than can a private. The cost to the officer is no more than the cost to the private, and the private will often be limited to a small policy by the state of his finances. I submit we ought to provide an opportunity for the private, when he, through his merit and efficiency shall have been promoted to the rank of an officer, to increase the insurance that he would like to carry. Under the law as it now is he may not do this.

If as a private all that he can see his way clear to lay by from his allowance to carry an insurance policy will enable him to carry one of $2,000 or $3,000, when he shall be advanced to the grade of an officer and his compensation will permit him to carry an insurance policy that will protect those dependent upon him as they ought to be protected, under the law as it now is he will be denied the opportunity.

SUMMING UP OF PLAN.

One word in conclusion by way of summing up. If the bill that I have introduced shall be enacted into law, then what will the situation be?

First. It will permit those eligible to take out insurance under the present law to take it out after a period of 120 days after enlistment, which they may not now do.

Second. The incentive will continue to exist in the law to impel those eligible for insurance to act within 120 days; after 120 days application must be accompanied by a certificate of fitness for service.

Third. The Government will be protected from having thrown upon it insurance of persons who have delayed making application until they have become physically unfit, by the certificates that must be filed certifying to physical condition.

Fourth. The amendment should prevail, because—

1. Those eligible to insurance can not foresee the contingencies that may be thrust upon them by reason of changing home conditions following a period of 120 days after enlistment; and

2. Every reason that can be advanced in favor of the war-risk insurance idea urges the passage of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the time is about up within which we may enact this measure and be sure that we shall do the right thing by everybody. It will be up on April 12. Unless we shall speedily enact the amendment that I propose, I am fully confident we shall have furnished to us many illustrations from real life similar to those that I have suggested in urging the passage of the bill.

The measure is short and for the convenience of the Members I shall place in the RECORD a copy of the same. It is H. R. 10886 and reads as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions governing the time within which application for insurance may be made as set forth in section 401 of the act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, as amended by the act approved October 6, 1917, are hereby amended so that hereafter every person defined in section 400 of said act as entitled to make application for insurance may, during the period of his service, make application for insurance under said act: Provided, That when such application shall be made after a period of 120 days after enlistment it shall be accompanied by a certificate from a commissioned officer of the company of which the person applying is a member, setting forth that such person is on duty, or by a certificate from a medical officer in the military or naval service of the United States that the person making application is physically able to report for duty.

SEC. 2. That nothing in this act shall be construed to modify any obligations or rights which have heretofore accrued under the war-risk insurance act referred to herein.

Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EMERSON].

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a resolution of the board of education in the city of Cleveland.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The resolution is as follows:

To the President of the United States of America, Woodrow Wilson:

Resolution adopted by the board of education of the city school district of the city of Cleveland, Ohio, at a meeting held March 18, 1918, No. 7374, introduced by the president, Mr. M. L. Thomsen, indorsing universal military training.

Whereas there is a bill now pending before the Congress of the United States providing for universal military training and education for men between the ages of 19 and 21 years; and

Whereas one of the purposes of said bill is to improve the character of the young men of our Nation, mentally, morally, and physically; and

Whereas the passage of said bill in our opinion will materially aid and strengthen the resources of our national defense: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the board of education of the city school district of the city of Cleveland, That it is the judgment of said board that said bill now pending in Congress deserves the active support of the citizens of the United States, and that we favor its general purpose; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded by the clerk of this board to the President of the United States, the Secretary of War, to the Senators for the State of Ohio, and to the Representatives in Congress of the twentieth, twenty-first, and twenty-second districts of the State of Ohio.

M. L. THOMSEN,
President Board of Education.
ROBT. I. CLEGG,
Vice President Board of Education.
F. E. SPAULDING,
Superintendent of Schools.
SARAH E. HYRE,
Clerk, Board of Education.
J. G. HOGAN,
Director of Schools.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER].

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, my attention has been called to some misinformation written into the RECORD yesterday by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR].

It is to be regretted that a member of the important Committee on Rivers and Harbors who should speak with accuracy, knowledge, and authority, is so often guilty of the careless habit of inserting in the RECORD misleading an inaccurate statements on important questions relating to the development of our rivers and harbors. It will be recalled that the chairman and other members of this committee found it necessary at the last session to frequently check up and correct inaccurate statements made by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

On yesterday he referred in a vein of criticism to a report made by two able, competent engineers to the Shipping Board on the very important matter of extending and further developing barge navigation on the Black Warrior River in Alabama. Inaccurate statements were made relative to facts set out in a written report by these engineers. As a sample of such inaccuracies I call attention to the statement made by the gentleman from Wisconsin, that $21,000,000 had been recommended by the engineers in the report referred to for expenditure on the Black Warrior, whereas the report in fact recommended less than $2,250,000. I will later insert as a part of my remarks the report of the engineers.

Mr. SMALL. Who were the engineers?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Mason and Mr. Bentecou.

It will be seen from the reading of their report that the gentleman from Wisconsin had no knowledge of the facts on which it was based, nor the conclusions announced, nor the recommendations therein made. The report shows there is now being mined in territory immediately adjacent to the river large quantities of coal of splendid quality, and equal in every respect to that now furnished at Norfolk. The Navy purchases for all its needs at Pensacola, New Orleans, and Mobile coal mined in this section. In addition to the great quantity of coal mined on the river there is within 50 miles of my home city, of Tuscaloosa, more than a billion and a quarter feet of lumber cut every year. The report calls attention to the large tonnage in coal, lumber, and the finished products of iron and steel that can be diverted and transported by water, if sufficient barges are provided on the Warrior River. Attention is further called in the report to the large number of freight cars and locomotives that will thus be released and which are now greatly needed. I commend the report to the very careful reading of the Members of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama to extend his remarks in the RECORD?

There was no objection.

The report is as follows:

MARCH 2, 1918.

Memorandum regarding an examination of the Warrior River, Ala., and the problem of utilizing it, primarily, for the transportation of coal and, secondarily, of other materials.

1. The territory which must depend upon the Alabama coal fields for fuel is suffering from a short supply of coal. New Orleans has until recently depended largely upon water-borne shipments from Pennsylvania. That supply has been cut off and the service abandoned by reason of the increased demand at Pittsburgh and the unprofitable 1,900-mile river haul. As a result the railroads have been called upon to transport a large additional tonnage at a time when they were already taxed beyond their capacity by the conditions arising from the war.

2. The problem, therefore, is to provide for a supply of coal that will meet the present and the probable future requirements, and also to relieve the railroads of the transportation of a large low-rate tonnage and enable them to move other commodities with more efficiency.

3. The territory adjacent to the Warrior River is a well-developed coal field and can produce an abundant supply of coal that is satisfactory for bunkering ships and for industrial and domestic use.

4. The Warrior River has been improved by the Government at a cost of $11,000,000 and is being maintained at a further cost of about $200,000 per year. It has a capacity of about four times the present coal requirements and has been in limited use since 1915.

Since a remedy for the conditions can not be sought in building more railroads, we must obviously turn to the river for relief.

5. The records of the local companies which have operated boats on the river disclose the fact that navigation might be conducted with proper methods and adequate facilities and equipment at rates no greater than the existing railroad rates. On the other hand, the railroads do not consider the business satisfactory at the rates and can not haul a regular and ample supply.

6. The companies which have attempted to conduct transportation on the river have in great measure developed a suitable type of equipment, but they are confronted with many difficulties—lack of sufficient boats and proper terminals, of systematic methods and cooperation—and with the uncertainties entailed by war prices and general conditions.

It follows that there is no ground for dependence upon securing relief from the river in the near future through expenditure of private capital.

7. Transportation by river to be successful must fill the same requirements as transportation by rail—a regular and adequate service, full responsibility of the carrier, and absorption of terminal charges.

8. We are satisfied that those essentials can not be secured under private ownership and therefore recommend that the Government commandeer the equipment now existing on the Warrior River and, as far as necessary, on other accessible rivers, build certain other equipment, and create a strong commission to establish and conduct a transportation system on the Warrior River.

9. The total present demand for coal at Mobile and New Orleans is over 2,000,000 tons per year. The present requirement for bunker coal will probably be increased as soon as the permanence of the supply is assured, and there will probably be a further increase due to a call for export coal to Cuba.

10. We consider that equipment should now be provided to transport 1,000,000 tons of coal per year, and that this capacity will need to be increased as the market develops.

11. It should be possible to give service to the extent of 15,000 tons per month within three months after the existing equipment is acquired and to have the entire system in operation within six months.

12. We realize that this project is peculiar and differs in three essentials from the normal problems of inland-river transportation:

(a) The business to be done already exists in proper volume between the terminals.

(b) There are no problems arising from winter operations; no tie-ups and destruction from ice.

(c) The equipment largely exists and is partly now idle.

13. The sum necessary to establish this work is rather over $2,000,000, and, while we recognize that the course recommended is radical, we consider that the war emergency justifies it.

THE ROUTE.

The Alabama coal fields are traversed by the Warrior River, which has been improved for slack-water navigation with 17 dams and locks, the latter being 285 feet long, 52 feet wide, and 6½ feet on sills. The minimum width of the river is about 100 feet; the depth 6 feet.

The channel is crooked and requires moderate dredging in spots after floods, and also some removal of snags. During the two years past only minor interference has arisen from this cause. The distance from the head of navigation is approximately 450 miles to Mobile.

The route from Mobile to New Orleans is through Mississippi Sound and Borgne Lake, thence either to the Mississippi River by the Borgne Canal, or, for city delivery, via Lake Ponchartrain to a point on the new canal at Howard and Rampart Streets. The distance is about 150 miles.

The Lake Borgne Canal is 7½ miles long, 100 feet wide, and 7 feet deep, with one floodgate. It connects Lake Borgne with the Mississippi River, and belongs to the Alabama & New Orleans Canal Co. This canal and the storage facilities for bunker coal at Violet can be used under some equitable arrangement:

THE COAL.

There are four principal veins of coal which appear on both sides of the river. Their product has various characteristics and value depending on the analysis and the care in mining.

A few mines have been recently opened on the river, but are not yet fully developed. The larger mines on which the proposed supply would have to depend, at least temporarily, are on the railways near the river, and they are abundantly prepared to furnish the coal needed for bunker, industrial, and domestic use.

The bunker coal is generally washed, and its quality is equal to that now supplied at Norfolk, Va.

The railroad haul from the most convenient mines to the river is in all cases short, and if an equitable rate is fixed the cost would not be a serious charge upon the operators. Any difficulty, however, in securing access to the river tipples can be met by building short railroad connections.

TRAFFIC EXCEPTING COAL.

A small amount of miscellaneous traffic has been developed in the river, and it is probable that the downstream movement of lumber, pipe, pig iron, coke, etc., would soon reach respectable proportions if a good river service was sustained.

An indefinite but large return freight tonnage is quite possible. It can only be created by good management, proper terminal facilities, regularity of movement, and financial strength of the transportation organization.

EXISTING EQUIPMENT.

The equipment which has been found most suitable to the river is of the Ohio River type. The barges, however, are only 24 feet wide, and two Ohio River barges 26 feet wide can not be placed side by side in the locks, thus making it necessary to build the additional barges required.

There are now on the river 6 towboats, 31 open barges of about 500 tons capacity, and at New Orleans 6 self-propelled barges, 800 tons capacity.

These towboats will each move 2,200 tons of coal from the mines to Mobile in five days, but are admittedly somewhat underpowered.

The open barges should be strengthened at small additional expense.

The six self-propelling barges of the Alabama Transportation Co. are fairly well adapted to the conditions between Mobile and New Orleans, but should be supplemented by suitable tugs and barges now existing in the district that are stronger than those used in the river before described.

THE COAL MARKET.

The principal market at seaboard for Alabama coal is New Orleans, where 500,000 tons of bunker coal and about 1,550,000 tons of coal for railroad, industrial, and domestic use are now required.

The coal for bunkers and for westbound railroad and other coal must be handled through the Lake Borgne Canal.

The remaining coal at New Orleans should be handled through Lake Pontchartrain to the city basin, a most favorable point for local distribution.

The Mobile coal demand amounts to about 250,000 tons, of which about 70,000 tons is bunker coal.

Both markets would be materially increased if the Government should route trans-Atlantic freight through the Gulf ports to relieve Atlantic ports.

We deem it wise that ships sailing for Europe from Gulf ports should stop the practice of coaling en route at Norfolk.

We consider it necessary that operations on the Warrior River, to be of material service, should be planned to handle at least 1,000,000 tons per year.

This requires a large addition to the existing equipment, full provision for coal storage at Mobile and New Orleans in order that the movement may not be interrupted, and suitable equipment for transfer of coal from barges to either stock piles or ships.

We estimate the cost of the existing and the new equipment necessary to transport 1,000,000 tons a year at $2,100,000, and conclude that this expenditure would release 1,500 railroad cars and 30 locomotives, valued at $4,000,000.

Should the Government establish the transportation system we recommend, it will not, in our judgment, succeed unless controlled by a board of not more than three men, who are chosen for their business sagacity, familiarity with local conditions, their business standing and proved executive capacity. We therefore recommend the appointment of such a board—one member from Birmingham district, one from Mobile, and one from New Orleans—to carry out the program.

Estimate.

For suitable railroad spur connections from coal to river	$100,000
Loading stations on river	63,000
20 river towboats (stern wheel—6 now on river, 14 now idle on Ohio River)	700,000
100 open river barges (31 now existing, 69 to be built)	369,000
1 storage yard and transfer at Mobile	125,000
6 self-propelled barges	240,000
4 tugs (in New Orleans)	100,000
13 dock barges (in New Orleans)	78,000
1 storage yard at New Orleans	125,000
Working capital and contingencies	200,000
	2,100,000

Operating cost.

Interest	105,000
30 towboats—tugs and self-propelled barges at $36,000 each per year	1,080,000
3 storage transfer yards at $40 per day	43,800
Maintenance and depreciation	200,000
Administration	25,000
	1,453,800

Total cost, $1.45 per ton.

A project is under consideration to increase the depth of the river from 6 to 8 feet, at a probable cost of $250,000, by raising the dams 2 feet. Doing this would have a marked and beneficial effect upon the economics of transportation, and it is safe to say that the above costs of operation would be reduced 20 per cent.

ARTHUR J. MASON.
DANIEL BENTECOU.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD made on yesterday.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, as far as I am aware there are no more demands for debate on this side.

Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa. We do not want further time.

Mr. SMALL. Then, Mr. Chairman, I understand that general debate is closed on the bill, so that when we resume consideration again the bill will be read under the five-minute rule. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 10069, the river and harbor bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 121. An act to prevent the desecration of the flag of the United States, and to provide punishment therefore (Rept. No. 279);

S. 3691. An act to provide for reimbursement of actual expenses or flat per diem for enlisted men of the Army traveling on duty under competent orders;

S. 3801. An act to amend section 8 of "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May 18, 1917 (Rept. No. 278; and

S. 3874. An act providing medals for certain persons; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 9314. An act making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, upon what subject?

Mr. McKEOWN. Upon the housing bill. I was ill at the time it was being discussed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

TELEPHONE SYSTEM, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HILLIARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to file a supplemental report (H. Rept. No. 379, Part 2) on the bill H. R. 10337.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, what bill is that?

Mr. HILLIARD. A bill to postalize the telephone system in the city of Washington.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Is it a general bill?

Mr. HILLIARD. No; it is for the city of Washington. The bill has been reported by the District Committee.

The SPEAKER. The Committee on the District report the bill, accompanied by a report.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman from Colorado filed a minority report on that, did he not?

Mr. HILLIARD. No; I filed the majority report. No minority report was filed. I wish now to file a supplemental report, which is a study made of the situation by the engineers of the Bureau of Standards. It is a report that the chairman of the committee asks that I make.

The SPEAKER. The committee's report?

Mr. HILLIARD. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Oh, requested by the chairman of the committee?

Mr. HILLIARD. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, April 8, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

A bill (S. 4291) granting an increase of pension to Mary P. McIntire (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

VOCATIONAL REHABILITATION.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill to provide for vocational rehabilitation and return to civil employment of disabled persons discharged from the military and naval service of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The bill (S. 4284) to provide for vocational rehabilitation and return to civil employment of disabled persons discharged from the military or naval service of the United States, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I ask that the bill be printed in full in the RECORD. I also have several memoranda with reference to it, one the history of the proposed bill, one showing, among other things, what has been done in France, England, Canada, Belgium, and Germany upon this subject, others presenting the value of the measure, and concluding with the success of vocational rehabilitation in foreign countries.

There being no objection, the bill and memoranda were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A bill (S. 4284) to provide for vocational rehabilitation and return to civil employment of disabled persons discharged from the military or naval forces of the United States, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That this act shall be known as the vocational rehabilitation act.

SEC. 2. That every persor who is disabled under circumstances entitling him, after discharge from the military or naval forces of the United States, to compensation under Article III of the act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, as amended, and who, in the opinion of the Federal Board for Vocational Education, is unable to resume the former occupation or to enter upon some other suitable or gainful occupation or having resumed or entered upon such occupation is unable to continue the same successfully and may be vocationally rehabilitated, shall be ordered by the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance to follow such course of vocational rehabilitation as the Federal Board for Vocational Education shall prescribe and provide, or when deemed advisable by said board shall be retained in the military or naval forces of the United States and be detailed to the control and direction of said board until the course of training prescribed has been satisfactorily completed.

The Bureau of War-Risk Insurance shall have power, and it shall be its duty, to order the persons included in this section to follow suitable courses of vocational rehabilitation to be prescribed and provided by the Federal Board for Vocational Education, and every person so ordered to follow a course of vocational rehabilitation shall, while following the same, receive monthly compensation in a sum equal to the amount of his monthly pay for the last month of his active service, or to the amount to which he would be entitled under Article III of the said act approved September 2, 1914, as amended, whichever amount is the greater, and if such person was an enlisted man at the time of his discharge he shall, for the period during which he is so ordered to follow a course of vocational rehabilitation, be subject to all the requirements and entitled to all the benefits of Article II of the said act approved September 2, 1914, as amended, in the same manner as if he were an enlisted man, and for the purposes of the said Article II his monthly compensation shall be deemed to be his monthly pay: Provided, That if and while a person willfully fails to follow the prescribed course of vocational rehabilitation in a manner satisfactory to the Federal Board for Vocational Education the said board shall certify to that effect to the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance, and the said bureau may, in its discretion, withhold any part or all of the monthly compensation due such person and not subject to compulsory allotment.

The military and naval family allowance appropriation provided for in section 18 of the said act approved September 2, 1914, as amended, shall be available for the payment of the family allowances provided by this section; and the military and naval compensation appropriation provided for in section 19 of the said act approved September 2, 1914, as amended, shall be available for the payment of the monthly compensation herein provided. No compensation under Article III of the said act approved September 2, 1914, as amended, shall be paid for the period during which any such person is ordered by the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance to follow a course of vocational rehabilitation.

SEC. 3. That the courses of vocational rehabilitation provided under the provisions of this act shall, as far as practicable and under such conditions as the Federal Board for Vocational Education may prescribe, be made available without cost for instruction for the benefit of any person who is disabled under circumstances entitling him, after discharge from the military or naval forces of the United States, to compensation under Article III of the said act approved September 2, 1914, as amended, and who is not included in section 2 hereof: Provided, That no monthly compensation, family allowances, or expenses as provided by this act shall be paid on account of any such person availing himself of the courses under this section.

SEC. 4. That the Federal Board for Vocational Education shall have the power, and it shall be its duty, to provide, or procure to be provided, such facilities, instructors, and courses of vocational rehabilitation as may be necessary to insure proper training for such persons as are required to follow courses of vocational rehabilitation as herein provided; to prescribe the courses to be followed by such persons; to pay, when in the discretion of the board such payment is necessary, the expense of travel, lodging, subsistence, and other necessary expenses of such persons while following the prescribed courses; to provide for the placement of rehabilitated persons in suitable or gainful occupations; and to do all other things appropriate or necessary to insure the vocational rehabilitation and placement in suitable or gainful occupations of persons following the courses of vocational rehabilitation. The board shall have the power to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary for the proper performance of its duties as prescribed by this act, and is hereby authorized and directed to utilize, with the approval of the Secretary of Labor, the facilities of the Department of Labor, in so far as may be practicable, in the placement of rehabilitated persons in suitable or gainful occupations.

It shall also be the duty of the board to make or cause to have made studies, investigations, and reports regarding the vocational rehabilitation of disabled persons and their placement in suitable or gainful occupations. When the board deems it advisable, such studies, investigations, and reports may be made in cooperation with or through other departments and bureaus of the Government, and the board, in its discretion, may cooperate with such public or private agencies as it may deem advisable in performing the duties imposed upon it by this act.

The Federal Board for Vocational Education shall make an annual report to the Congress on or before December 1 on the administration of this act.

SEC. 5. That all medical and surgical work or other treatment necessary to give functional and mental restoration to disabled persons prior to their discharge from the military or naval forces of the United States shall be under the control of the War Department and the Navy Department, respectively. Whenever prevocational training is employed as a therapeutic measure by the War Department or the Navy Department a plan shall be established between these agencies and the Federal Board for Vocational Education acting in an advisory capacity to insure, in so far as medical requirements permit, a proper process of prevocational training and the proper preparation of instructors for such prevocational training.

The board shall, in establishing its plans and rules and regulations for vocational training cooperate with the War Department and the Navy Department in so far as may be necessary to effect a continuous process of prevocational and vocational training.

SEC. 6. That the Federal Board for Vocational Education is hereby authorized and empowered to receive such gifts and donations from either public or private sources as may be offered unconditionally. All moneys received as gifts or donations shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States and shall constitute a permanent appropriation, to be called the "Special fund for vocational rehabilitation," to be used under the direction of the said board, in connection with the appropriations hereby made or hereafter to be made, to defray the expenses of providing and maintaining courses of vocational rehabilitation; and a full report of all gifts and donations offered and accepted and all disbursements therefrom shall be submitted annually to Congress.

SEC. 7. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to be used by the Federal Board for Vocational Education for erecting, renting, and remodeling buildings and quarters, repairing, maintaining, and equipping same, and for equipment and other facilities necessary for proper instruction of disabled persons, $250,000; for the preparation of instructors and salaries of instructors, supervisors, and other experts, including necessary traveling expenses, $545,000; for traveling expenses of disabled persons in connection with training and for lodging, subsistence, and other necessary expenses in special cases of persons following prescribed courses, $250,000; for tuition for persons pursuing courses in existing institutions, public or private, $545,000; for the placement and supervision after placement of vocationally rehabilitated persons, $45,000; for studies, investigations, reports, and preparation of special courses of instruction, $55,000; for miscellaneous contingencies, including special mechanical appliances necessary in special cases for disabled men, $110,000; for the administrative expenses of said board incident to performing the duties imposed by this act, including salaries of such assistants, experts, clerks, and other employees in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, as the board may deem necessary, actual traveling and other necessary expenses incurred by the members of the board and by its employees under its orders, including attendance at meetings of educational associations and other organizations, rent and equipment of offices in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, purchase of books of reference, law books, and periodicals, stationery, typewriters and exchange thereof, miscellaneous supplies, postage on foreign mail, printing and binding to be done at the Government Printing Office, and all other necessary expenses, $200,000: Provided, That the said board shall file with the Clerk of the House and the Secretary of the Senate on July 1 and every three months thereafter, for the information of the Congress, an itemized account of all expenditures made under this act.

SEC. 8. That section 304 of the act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, as amended, is hereby repealed.

HISTORY OF PROPOSED BILL FOR THE VOCATIONAL REHABILITAION OF DISABLED SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

CONFERENCE TO FORMULATE A COMPREHENSIVE PLAN OF REHABILITATION.

Because of the widespread interest and the uncertainty as to the final program which Congress will establish, different departments and branches of the Government, as well as private organizations, have been studying the problem and making tentative plans to meet it. To prevent confusion and the development of many separate and duplicating efforts the Surgeon General of the Army, at the suggestion of the Secretary of War, recently called together in conference representatives from the Departments of the Treasury, War, Navy, Interior, and Labor, the Federal Board for Vocational Education, the Public Health Service, the United States Employees' Compensation Commission, the Council of National Defense, the National Chamber of Commerce, the division for civilian relief of the Red Cross, the National Manufacturers' Association, and the American Federation of Labor to give full consideration to the problem and to formulate a definite and comprehensive plan which would provide a continuous process for the physical and mental restoration of disabled soldiers and sailors and their vocational rehabilitation and return to civil employment.

In order to be of the largest assistance, this conference terminated its labors by the adoption of a tentative bill embodying the principles and policies of which the conference approved. This measure was respectfully submitted, through the Surgeon General, to the Secretary of War for his consideration, with the recommendation that after it had passed through the hands of the solicitors of the departments concerned for the correction of such technical defects as the proper description of all the beneficiaries to be reached by the measure the same should be presented to the Congress for its consideration.

A delay ensued which led certain disinterested parties to take the matter to the Council of National Defense. The council approved the substance and, for the most part, the exact language of the conference bill above described. It sustained the idea that economic control should supersede military control at the close of the hospital experience, as far as possible at least. It stood for the idea of a civilian board to deal with the problem of vocational rehabilitation. It felt that a sharp line of distinction should be drawn between the physical rehabilitation, which should be committed to the Surgeon General's office of the Army and the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery of the Navy, and vocational rehabilitation, which should be put in the hands of a civilian board properly qualified to deal with the problem. All these things were contained in the spirit, purpose, and provisions of the conference bill.

Only one radical change was made in the conference bill by the Council of National Defense. The conference bill provided for an administrative board of vocational rehabilitation made up of one representative from each of five governmental agencies—the War Department, the Navy Department, the Labor Department, the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance, and the Federal Board for Vocational Education. The council believed that it was inadvisable to establish a new board, and recommended that the Federal Board for Vocational Education, under the Smith-Hughes Act, already well equipped for the task, be made the board of control.

With the changes just described, the bill now submitted represents the spirit and purpose and in large part the exact language of the conference bill prepared by a conference of experts and representatives from all the different governmental and civilian interests concerned in any way with the problem. After the measure in its present form was prepared, its language was gone over by the solicitors of the different departments concerned and approved from the standpoint of its technical accuracy. The understanding also is that these departments are agreed, in the main, with the provisions of this measure. The bill in its present form was also resubmitted to Secretary Houston, as chairman of the Federal Board for Vocational Education, and to Mr. Gifford, chairman of the Council of National Defense, and approved by them.

MEMORANDUM ON LEGISLATION FOR THE VOCATIONAL REHABILITATION OF DISABLED SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

NEED FOR EARLY ENACTMENT OF LEGISLATION.

The rehabilitation of disabled soldiers and sailors is a task so important, so large, so complicated, and therefore so difficult, that Congress should at the earliest possible moment provide by legislation a clear and definite plan for the organization, administration, and support of the work.

Although the United States has been at war more than a year, no specific appropriation has yet been made by Congress for establishing and operating vocational training for men handicapped by war. Indeed, no such appropriation has been made even for the proper study and investigation of the many problems involved.

It is true that section 304 of the war-risk insurance bill (Public, No. 9, Sixty-fifth Congress—H. R. 5723), which became a law October 6, 1917, apparently places the work of rehabilitation, reeducation, and vocational training for disabled men in the hands of the Director of the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance, who, under the Treasury Department, has the duty and responsibility of administering the entire act.

Section 304 reads as follows:

"That in cases of dismemberment, of injuries to sight or hearing, and of other injuries commonly causing permanent disability, the injured person shall follow such course or courses of rehabilitation, reeducation, and vocational training as the United States may provide or procure to be provided. Should such course prevent the injured person from following substantially gainful occupation while taking same, a form of enlistment may be required which shall bring the injured person into the military or naval service. Such enlistment shall entitle the person to full pay as during the last month of his active service and his family allowances and allotment as hereinbefore provided in lieu of all other compensation for the time being.

"In case of his willful failure properly to follow such course or so to enlist, payment of compensation shall be suspended until such willful failure ceases, and no compensation shall be payable for the intervening period."

For reasons which I shall discuss below this section has remained inoperative. Indeed, the section is more a promise of what should be done than a workable program for the vocational rehabilitation and the return to civil employment of disabled soldiers and sailors.

Section 304 of the war-risk insurance act makes no appropriation to meet the expense of carrying on the course or courses for the rehabilitation and vocational training promised by that section. All the appropriations are for insurance, compensation, allowances, funeral expenses, and similar items; none are for rehabilitation, reeducation, and training. Without additional legislation, Congress is placed in the position of having made a promise to enlisted men, without providing a dollar to carry it out. Outside of a small part of the $100,000 appropriated for the administration of the war-risk insurance, which might possibly be used for section 304 (though in what way is not clear), the section is meaningless for want of funds. This has doubtless caused a delay, when every consideration demands immediate planning for action. Otherwise this great national duty and exigency will be left to private philanthropy and control, a procedure which has met with signal failure among the allies.

Section 304 is buried in an act, every one of whose other important sections deals with war-risk insurance. Admittedly it was inserted as a promise by Congress that the rehabilitation, reeducation, and vocational training of injured soldiers and sailors would be more definitely provided for at the ensuing session. Naturally, under these circumstances, this very difficult and highly specialized work is committed, under the general terms of the act, to an organization and administration, which, while admirably adapted for war-risk insurance—for which it was primarily intended—is inadequate, so far as section 304 is concerned, for the proper care, education, and placement in industry of injured men.

Furthermore, very grave uncertainty exists from the legal standpoint as to duties, powers, and relationships between the Treasury and the War and Navy Departments in dealing with this problem of vocational rehabilitation. On the one hand, the War-Risk Insurance Bureau of the Treasury Department is charged with the duty of administering the compensation and annuities for disabled men, a task which involves, of course, dealing with them almost from the time they receive their injuries. On the other hand, the Surgeon General's offices of the War and of the Navy Departments have traditionally dealt with the surgery, the medical care, and the functional rehabilitation of injured men.

While funds in the hands of the Secretary of War under liberal appropriations made by Congress have been appropriated for the hospital and medical care of wounded men, the use of these funds for vocational reeducation has not been specifically granted. Therefore, if these funds are so used it must be under the broad assumption either that vocational rehabilitation is a part of functional rehabilitation or that the wounded man is still enlisted and that this training is a part of his discipline as an enlisted man. There seems to have been no agreement up to this time at least between the Treasury Department, the War Department, and the Navy Department as to their respective authority and responsibility under existing legislation or as to how they can effectively cooperate. Under these circumstances, every consideration requires the early enactment of legislation designed to relieve present uncertainty and to provide ample funds for entering with certainty and speed upon the study, planning, and execution of a comprehensive scheme for the care, rehabilitation, and reemployment of the victims of this war.

LEGISLATION MUST BE BROAD AND FLEXIBLE.

No more difficult problem was ever presented to a people than the sacred task of restoring the victims of this great conflict to normal life and happy, self-dependent employment.

It is not known how long the war will last; how many soldiers will be sent to Europe; how many will be injured; how many will die; how many will return totally disabled; how many will be subjects for vocational rehabilitation; what means of employment will be open and to what extent; what the character of injuries will be; what forms of employment will be advisable for men returning, as is usual, with a complication of disabilities; how they may be best trained; where and how they should be placed; what will be the economic conditions during and after the war; what Government and civic employments will be open; what cooperation can be secured from the States, employers, organizations of employers, private foundations, institutions, and philanthropic foundations; what will be the cost of carrying on the work; how this cost is to be distributed during the years the work is being carried on; and what social and economic adjustment must be faced.

Any legislation dealing with this question must be broad and flexible. Experience of foreign governments has shown not only that the support and control of rehabilitation must be in the hands of the National Government, but that the work itself must be done by a national board equipped with ample funds and having broad discretionary powers, designed to meet the rapidly changing conditions in the conduct of the war and to cover the growing experience of the country in dealing with the reeducation and placement of handicapped men.

This national board should be a board already in existence, designated because of its experience and facilities for the administration of vocational training and because of the representative character of its membership. If a new board should be created by Congress for the purpose, all existing facilities for the study and administration of vocational education now possessed by the National Government should be recognized and utilized so as to avoid confusion, overlap and duplication of effort, and needless expense.

THE VOCATIONAL REHABILITATION OF DISABLED SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

All the leading belligerent countries are retraining their disabled men, with the exception of the United States. The consideration which moved England, Canada, France, Italy, Belgium, New Zealand, Australia, South Africa, India, Germany, and Austria to undertake this work is one which will appeal with even greater force to the people of this country.

Vocational reeducation of disabled soldiers and sailors is required for these reasons: (1) To insure economic independence, (2) to avoid vocational degeneration, (3) to prevent exploitation, (4) to conserve trade skill, (5) to insure national rehabilitation, (6) to adjust supply of labor to demand, (7) to develop new vocational efficiency. These reasons are summarized below.

1. To insure economic independence: Vocational reeducation will reestablish the disabled soldier or sailor as an independent, self-respecting economic unit. Any other policy will inevitably induce economic dependency with its inherent moral and social evils. For these men and for the community, also, moral and social as well as economic well-being is in a large measure at stake.

It is to be noted that the age of the conscripted army (21 to 31 years) is such that the men are young enough to be susceptible to training, and that the benefits of such training will accrue during a period equivalent to the normal expectation of life for men in early manhood.

Recognizing the value of vocational training some of the men were taking such training when drafted. This interrupted training should be resumed.

2. To avoid vocational degeneration: Experience has demonstrated that disabled men while under hospital treatment naturally tend in many instances to fall into a state of chronic dependence, characterized by loss of ambition. The difficulty of lifting them out of this well-recognized phase increases rapidly during the period immediately following convalescence. Initiation of vocational training at the earliest possible moment and persistent, systematic development of this training after convalescence will avoid this danger of vocational degeneration.

Once the men have fallen into this state of chronic dependence or have drifted back into industry without training, they can not be industrially recovered.

3. To prevent exploitation: Without the protection of vocational reeducation, together with systematic reestablishment in wage-earning employment, the handicapped man will drift about in industry, an unskilled laborer and a subject for exploitation by the unscrupulous.

4. To conserve trade skill: The policy of vocational rehabilitation is one of conservation. Disabled men skilled in specific trades will be, so far as possible, reestablished in those trades by vocational reeducation. Without such training acquired trade experience will in many cases be lost, and the ranks of skilled labor will be to that extent depleted. Incidentally, the drifting of handicapped men in any considerable number into unskilled employments will occasion demoralization and impair wage standards.

5. To insure national rehabilitation: The European countries have found the conservation of trade skill and experience to be a factor of vital importance in national rehabilitation. In these countries the conduct of industries, commerce, and agriculture, even during the progress of the war, has become largely dependent upon the reestablishment in civil employment of men disabled for further military service.

It should be borne in mind that the disabled men are, in many cases, specially trained and skilled. If allowed, through lack of such reeducation as they require, to sink into the ranks of the unskilled, their places in the Nation's scheme of economic productivity can not be filled. No supply of skilled men is now, or will be after the war, available from other countries, since every country at war is experiencing and will continue to experience in the years following the war a great scarcity of skilled labor.

Vocational reeducation of men disabled for military service is, therefore, a means not only of conserving trade skill, but of conserving it in a time of national emergency and of preventing in some degree the scarcity of skilled labor that is certain to develop as the war progresses. The nation which does not conserve the vocational skill of its trained workers will to that extent weaken its recuperative and competitive power, and to that extent will consequently fail to achieve the immediate national rehabilitation of its industrial, commercial, and agricultural power.

6. To adjust supply of labor to demand: The return to civil employment of large numbers of men under the abnormal conditions of the period of demobilization will occasion far-reaching economic disturbance and maladjustment of labor supply to demand, unless that return is made under some comprehensive scheme of administration. Vocational reeducation will provide one means of so directing the return of men into civil employment as to occasion the least possible disturbance, and will go far to avoid impairment of established standards of living.

7. To develop new vocational efficiency: In individual cases, undoubtedly, new vocational capacities will be developed in handicapped men by systematic vocational reeducation. In many cases the selection of wage-earning employments has been originally accidental, and without due regard to natural aptitude. Vocational rehabilitation, by training for new employments for which the men have natural aptitude, may develop entirely new vocational capacities, making the men even more efficient producers than they were before.

Vocational training has established its claim as a means of producing and increasing economic efficiency, and in the Smith-Hughes Act, among others, Congress has indorsed this sort of training by appropriating Federal money to its support in the public schools. Such training can not consistently be denied to the disabled soldier and sailor—whose need is special and peculiar on account of his handicap incurred in the public service—while extending it to all other workers having no special claim to Government favor. All workers may have their productive efficiency increased by vocational training, but in the case of the disabled soldier or sailor the need of such training is imperative and the obligation to give it is clear.

THE SIZE OF THE PROBLEM.

Accepting the Canadian ratios as significant for the overseas forces of the United States, and assuming that the United States will send over 1,000,000 men the first year and will increase its expeditionary force by 1,000,000 each year for the duration of the war, the following deductions are, perhaps, warranted as forecasting conditions as the close of one year of fighting:

Number of men overseas	1,000,000
Number of men returned unfit for military service	100,000
Number not requiring vocational reeducation	80,000
Number requiring vocational reeducation:
Complete	10,000
Partial	10,000

In a word, for each million men overseas it may, perhaps, fairly be expected that 100,000 men will be returned each year, of whom 20,000 will require complete or partial vocational reeducation. This number of men may in fact be in hand to be provided for by the close of the summer campaign of 1918.

But long before the close of activities in the summer of 1918 the return of men will begin, and vocational reeducation must start with the first men sent back, and must be developed as the number of men in hand for training increases. The development of facilities for undertaking vocational reeducation must, in fact, anticipate the return of the men, since adequate provision can not be improvised after the men are actually in hand for training.

As regards numbers to be vocationally reeducated, Canadian experience would appear to indicate 20,000 for the first year, 40,000 additional for the second year, and 60,000 additional for the third year, an aggregate for three years of war of 120,000 men.

Immediate provision should be made for the training during 1918 of at least 20,000 men. In the second year of fighting, on the above assumption, the discharges from the military hospitals will provide each month between 3,000 and 4,000 candidates for vocational training, and in each month of the third year of the fighting approximately 5,000 candidates.

If the vocational training course averages six months per man, the number of men actually in training may be roughly estimated to be 10,000 at the close of one year of fighting, 20,000 at the close of the second year, and 30,000 at the close of the third year.

The training and organization of a staff of teachers for this work will constitute a large factor in the problem of vocational education.

It should be noted, however, that the above calculation is based upon rather meager accounts of Canadian experience, and that proportions as low as 4 or 5 per cent of the disabled men returned have been indicated as the proportion of men requiring vocational reeducation. If this range of estimate is taken into account, the number of men requiring vocational reeducation during the first year of the war may fall as low as 4,000 or 5,000 per million men overseas. But, on the other hand, as has been noted, experience in past years of the war does not necessarily measure the maximum possibility of casualties, nor does it necessarily measure the maximum provision for vocational reeducation either in Canada or in any European country. It is highly probable that in very many instances vocational reeducation has not been undertaken where such training would be of real value to the disabled man, and would, in fact, be economically advantageous to the community.

It must be remembered, however, that the above estimates include not only men who are incapacitated from wounds and dismemberments, but those who are so disabled as the result of disease that they can not follow their old occupations and therefore must be retrained for some new occupation.

THE COST OF VOCATIONAL REHABILITATION.

Owing to the rapidity with which foreign governments have had to meet this problem and the inevitable confusion and uncertainty surrounding much of the work undertaken in such haste for an unknown number of beneficiaries, it is impossible to secure at this time any statement as to either the total cost of this work or the cost per man trained.

Perhaps the most significant indication of the cost is derived from Germany, where the vocational rehabilitation of the victims of the war is given by Provinces and by local communities of Provinces within the Empire, upon whom necessarily almost all the cost of the actual training falls. Yet we find the Imperial Government appropriating in 1915 the sum of $1,250,000 to supplement all local efforts, presumably because the Provinces were not able to meet all the costs without this aid. Under the imperial edict none of this money was to be used except for training and placement of disabled soldiers. It must be remembered that the Germans, deliberately planning for this war, had the facilities ready to take care of this important problem of conservation before hostilities began. Consequently much of the cost which this country must meet in establishing the work and providing facilities for it is not an item of expenditure in the German scheme. It must be remembered also that the above appropriation by the central Government was in the early stages of the war and doubtless has been increased many fold.

The French scheme provides for central administration of the centers for vocational rehabilitation, the administrative expenses of which are paid by the French Government and the operating expenses of which are met by local governments and by private philanthropy. It seems clear that more than a million dollars has been sent from America for the aid of this work in France, yet in 1915 the Government appropriated 4,500,000 francs from the central treasury to aid in the training of the disabled persons.

It would seem that the proposal to appropriate $2,000,000 annually for the work newly begun in the United States, which is to be supported entirely by the National Government, is a low initial estimate.

FRANCE.

The number and character of the employments for which training is given in the rehabilitation of disabled soldiers and sailors show both the seriousness and extent of the problem and the strong belief of all the belligerent countries in the need for it.

France reported at the close of 1916 that definite training classes had been established for the following 45 occupations:

Jewelers, agriculturists, machinists (fitters), plastic arts, shepherds, harness makers and saddlers, suspender makers, brush makers, chairmakers and caners, cutlers, shoemakers, stenographers and typewriters, draftsmen (not specified), designers of lace, industrial designers, draftsmen (tracers), draftsmen on cotton fabrics, electricians, carpenters, boiler makers (iron and copper), firemen (not specified), chauffeurs, sheet makers (cutters), notary's clerk, hairdressers, bookkeepers, ladies' tailors, makers of instruments of precision, woodworkers (not specified), metal workers, goldsmiths, manufacture of fishing articles, painters (not specified), carriage painters, house painters, photographers, mercantile and office employees, salaried employees in shops and factories, fencing masters, sandal manufactures, tinsmiths, net makers, furriers, watchmakers, primary and general instruction, gardeners and horticulturists, toy makers, morocco dressers, masseurs, machinists (not specified), machinists (tool workers), makers of artificial teeth, pattern makers and molders, music and singing (blind), building trades (not specified), opticians, orthopedics and bandage makers, manufacture of pipes, wireless telegraphers, bookbinders and paper-box makers, wooden-shoe and galosh makers, sandal makers, soap makers, sculptors (not specified), wood carvers, locksmiths, statuary makers, wood cutters (toy factories), upholsterers, decorators, tailors, dyers, coopers, turners (not specified), metal turners, compositors, basket makers, motormen, miscellaneous.

England has organized a system of placement through which the retrained man is placed in a definitely organized trade under an apprenticeship arrangement. So far the training and placement covers the following trades:

Electrical trades; tailoring; leather trades; furniture trade; boot and shoe repairing; hand-sewn boot and shoe making; gold, silver, jewelry, and watch and clock jobbing; trade employment in moving pictures and theaters; trades connected with motor-tractor work; aircraft manufacture; dental mechanics.

In addition, the ministry of pensions has published the following list of occupations suitable for discharged tubercular sailors and soldiers:

Basket making, bath chairman, bus and tram conductors, canvassers, caretaker (if not compelled to sleep in unhealthy basements), drivers, coachmen, commissionaires, carpenters and joiners, farm laborers, foresters and underforesters, fishermen (line fishing only), gamekeepers, general laborers (except very heavy and dusty jobs), hawkers, insurance and commission agents, light porters, lodge porters, market and flower gardeners, motor gleaning, motor tractor and van drivers, night watchmen, park rangers, park attendants, policemen, postmen (if already in one of these services), rent collectors, station-bookstall attendants, travelers, timekeepers, ticket collectors, window cleaning, woodmen to be employed if the afforestation scheme is carried out, and wood-road layers.

Canada has established carefully worked out courses preparing disabled men for the following lines of employment:

Motor mechanics; elementary electrical engineers; carpentry and building construction; cabinetmaking; machine-shop practice; plumbing, heating, and pipefitting; electrical construction; motion-picture operating; architectural and building construction; machine drawing; horticulture; agriculture, poultry culture, and similar lines.

BELGIUM.

Belgium has established a great school for vocational rehabilitation at Port-Billez, France. Here the Belgium Government has provided training for these lines:

Raking, basketry, bookbinding, box nailing, brush making, cabinetmaking, chauffeurs, electricians, engraving, furriers, industrial art workers—designing and drawing, laboratory work, leather work—shoemaking, saddle and harness making, lithography, mechanical drawing, metal work, metal work—zinc plumbing, clock making, modeling, painting, photogravure, planing, printing, sculpture, tailoring, telephone exchange, wigmaking, woodcrafts—polishers, toy and fancy articles making, wood carving, wooden-shoe making, mechanical joinery, hand joinery, tool making, modelers, woodturning.

GERMANY.

Germany has used her scheme of vocational rehabilitation as a means of securing, as far as possible, mechanics and technicians for the war. The rehabilitated man is, if his condition permits, trained for a mechanical or technical occupation in the army, or any one of the essential war industries. Where this can not be done he is retrained so as to enter, to advantage, in view of his handicap, the same trade or line of employment which he was following before the war. The elaborate system of industrial and technical skill of the Empire is used for this purpose. Consequently, it may be said with safety, that disabled men are being trained in Germany to fill all necessary army occupations, necessary war industries, and all the well-recognized trades and employments of the Empire in civil life.

When one remembers that practically every man in the German Empire has been definitely trained for some line of work early in his career, the task before Germany is comparatively simple, since it requires only a readaptation for a man with a previous training and experience, and consequently with a suitable amount of adaptability.

The situation is very well illustrated by the list of occupations for which the great engineering school at Dusseldorf is now engaged in the training of men. This list covers all of the following trades: All the wood and metal trades; operating of steam engines, commercial courses; telegraphy; agricultural courses of many kinds; a special course in trade administration; machinists and mechanics of all kinds; modeling and plaster casting; bookbinding; leather work; graphic trades, photography, etching, etc.; painting trades—house decorating, letter and sign painting, glass painting, varnishing and lacquer work; courses in upholstery and decorating; and laboratory work for technical denistry.

In the Province of Brandenburg, with its 43 large and small reserve hospitals, not less than 17 factories have been given up by their owners for this purpose of training in the trades.

The success of the vocational rehabilitation given by foreign countries is indicated by a number of things: The increasing appropriations for the work, the enlargement of facilities, and the constantly increasing number of disabled men being trained and placed show that foreign governments have found the scheme advisable and necessary. As a result of enthusiastic interest in the problem, English manufacturers and trade unionists have organized trade committees throughout Great Britain, which are cooperating with the minister of pensions in organization, courses of study, and placement, on an apprenticeship basis, of the retrained man. In France, up to December 1, 1916, the employment office in Paris had placed approximately 10,000 disabled soldiers. Up to October 1, 1916, 45 departmental and local committees had placed 5,550 disabled. About 1,500 were placed with State establishments under ministry of armament munitions; about 3,000 working in shops for national defense. Germany uses successfully 85 to 90 per cent of her disabled back of the lines when they have been retrained, and the majority of the remaining 10 or 15 per cent are entirely self-supporting. This should be the aim of any system of vocational rehabilitation undertaken by this country.

A careful reading of the above will show that, aside from its humane aspects, which are undeniable, the vocational rehabilitation of disabled men is a wise business venture on the part of the Nation, because it is a necessary part of any national program for the conservation of our human resources.

AMENDMENT TO LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $15,000 for two reporters to committees, at $6,000 each, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, etc., appropriation bill, which was ordered to be printed and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

ARTICLE BY CHARLES WARREN.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have a copy of an article by Charles Warren, Assistant Attorney General, being a memorandum of law on the power of Congress to subject civilians to trial by court-martial under the Constitution. I ask that the matter be referred to the Committee on Printing with a view to having it printed as a public document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The matter will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

ADDRESS BY PRESIDENT WILSON.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, I have a copy of an address delivered by President Wilson in Baltimore on last Saturday, the 6th instant, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The address is as follows:

ADDRESS.

"FELLOW CITIZENS: This is the anniversary of our acceptance of Germany's challenge to fight for our right to live and be free, and for the sacred rights of free men everywhere. The Nation is awake. There is no need to call to it. We know what the war must cost, our utmost sacrifice, the lives of our fittest men and, if need be, all that we possess. The loan we are met to discuss is one of the least parts of what we are called upon to give and to do, though in itself imperative. The people of the whole country are alive to the necessity of it, and are ready to lend to the utmost, even where it involves a sharp skimping and daily sacrifice to lend out of meagre earnings. They will look with reprobation and contempt upon those who can and will not, upon those who demand a higher rate of interest, upon those who think of it as a mere commercial transaction. I have not come, therefore, to urge the loan. I have come only to give you, if I can, a more vivid conception of what it is for.

"The reasons for this great war, the reason why it had to come, the need to fight it through, and the issues that hang upon its outcome, are more clearly disclosed now than ever before. It is easy to see just what this particular loan means, because the Cause we are fighting for stands more sharply revealed than at any previous crisis of the momentous struggle. The man who knows least can now see plainly how the cause of Justice stands and what the imperishable thing is he is asked to invest in. Men in America may be more sure than they ever were before that the cause is their own, and that, if it should be lost, their own great Nation's place and mission in the world would be lost with it.

"I call you to witness, my fellow countrymen, that at no stage of this terrible business have I judged the purposes of Germany intemperately. I should be ashamed in the presence of affairs so grave, so fraught with the destinies of mankind throughout all the world, to speak with truculence, to use the weak language of hatred or vindictive purpose. We must judge as we would be judged. I have sought to learn the objects Germany has in this war from the mouths of her own spokesmen and to deal as frankly with them as I wished them to deal with me. I have laid bare our own ideals, our own purposes, without reserve or doubtful phrase, and have asked them to say as plainly what it is that they seek.

"We have ourselves proposed no injustice, no aggression. We are ready, whenever the final reckoning is made, to be just to the German people, deal fairly with the German power, as with all others. There can be no difference between peoples in the final judgment, if it is indeed to be a righteous judgment. To propose anything but justice, even-handed and dispassionate justice, to Germany at any time, whatever the outcome of the war, would be to renounce and dishonour our own cause. For we ask nothing that we are not willing to accord.

"It has been with this thought that I have sought to learn from those who spoke for Germany whether it was justice or dominion and the execution of their own will upon the other nations of the world that the German leaders were seeking. They have answered, answered in unmistakable terms. They have avowed that it was not justice but dominion and the unhindered execution of their own will.

"The avowal has not come from Germany's statesmen. It has come from her military leaders, who are her real rulers. Her statesmen have said that they wished peace, and were ready to discuss its terms whenever their opponents were willing to sit down at the conference table with them. Her present Chancellor has said,—in indefinite and uncertain terms, indeed, and in phrases that often seem to deny their own meaning, but with as much plainness as he thought prudent,—that he believed that peace should be based upon the principles which we had declared would be our own in the final settlement. At Brest-Litovsk her civilian delegates spoke in similar terms; professed their desire to conclude a fair peace and accord to the peoples with whose fortunes they were dealing the right to choose their own allegiances. But action accompanied and followed the profession. Their military masters, the men who act for Germany and exhibit her purpose in execution, proclaimed a very different conclusion. We can not mistake what they have done,—in Russia, in Finland, in the Ukraine, in Rumania. The real test of their justice and fair play has come. From this we may judge the rest. They are enjoying in Russia a cheap triumph in which no brave or gallant nation can long take pride. A great people, helpless by their own act, lies for the time at their mercy. Their fair professions are forgotten. They nowhere set up justice, but everywhere impose their power and exploit everything for their own use and aggrandizement; and the peoples of conquered provinces are invited to be free under their dominion!

"Are we not justified in believing that they would do the same things at their western front if they were not there face to face with armies whom even their countless divisions can not overcome? If, when they have felt their check to be final, they should propose favourable and equitable terms with regard to Belgium and France and Italy, could they blame us if we concluded that they did so only to assure themselves of a free hand in Russia and the East?

"Their purpose is undoubtedly to make all the Slavic peoples, all the free and ambitious nations of the Baltic peninsula, all the lands that Turkey has dominated and misruled, subject to their will and ambition and build upon that dominion an empire of force upon which they fancy that they can then erect an empire of gain and commercial supremacy,—an empire as hostile to the Americas as to the Europe which it will overawe,—an empire which will ultimately master Persia, India, and the peoples of the Far East. In such a programme our ideals, the ideals of justice and humanity and liberty, the principle of the free self-determination of nations upon which all the modern world insists, can play no part. They are rejected for the ideals of power, for the principle that the strong must rule the weak, that trade must follow the flag, whether those to whom it is taken welcome it or not, that the peoples of the world are to be made subject to the patronage and overlordship of those who have the power to enforce it.

"That programme once carried out, America and all who care or dare to stand with her must arm and prepare themselves to contest the mastery of the World, a mastery in which the rights of common men, the rights of women, and of all who are weak, must for the time being be trodden under foot and disregarded, and the old, age-long struggle for freedom and right begin again at its beginning. Everything that America has lived for and loved and grown great to vindicate and bring to a glorious realization will have fallen in utter ruin and the gates of mercy once more pitilessly shut upon mankind!

"The thing is preposterous and impossible; and yet is not that what the whole course and action of the German armies has meant wherever they have moved? I do not wish, even in this moment of utter disillusionment, to judge harshly or unrighteously. I judge only what the German arms have accomplished with unpitying thoroughness throughout every fair region they have touched.

"What, then, are we to do? For myself, I am ready, ready still, ready even now, to discuss a fair and just and honest peace at any time that it is sincerely purposed,—a peace in which the strong and the weak shall fare alike. But the answer, when I proposed such a peace, came from the German commanders in Russia, and I cannot mistake the meaning of the answer.

"I accept the challenge. I know that you accept it. All the world shall know that you accept it. It shall appear in the utter sacrifice and self-forgetfulness with which we shall give all that we love and all that we have to redeem the world and make it fit for free men like ourselves to live in. This now is the meaning of all that we do. Let everything that we say, my fellow countrymen, everything that we henceforth plan and accomplish, ring true to this response till the majesty and might of our concerted power shall fill the thought and utterly defeat the force of those who flout and misprize what we honour and hold dear. Germany has once more said that force, and force alone, shall decide whether Justice and peace shall reign in the affairs of men, whether Right as America conceives it or Dominion as she conceives it shall determine the destinies of mankind. There is, therefore, but one response possible from us: Force, Force to the utmost, Force without stint or limit, the righteous and triumphant Force which shall make Right the law of the world, and cast every selfish dominion down in the dust."

PUNISHMENT OF SEDITIOUS ACTS AND UTTERANCES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8753) to amend section 3, title 1, of the act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States; to punish espionage; and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 15, 1917.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] to the amendment of the committee, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 18, after the word "shall," insert the word "willfully"; on page 3, line 4, after the word "shall," insert the word "willfully"; on the same page, line 7, after the word "shall," insert the word "willfully"; and on line 14, after the word "shall," insert the word "willfully."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARDWICK. On page 3, line 17, I move to strike out the words "the cause of," so as to read:

And whoever shall by word or act support or favor the German Empire—

And so forth.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia would strike out the word "favor"?

Mr. HARDWICK. No; because I want to simplify it and strengthen the language so as to make it incapable of any misconstruction.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, the Senate should give careful consideration to the effect of such an amendment as that; or even if the Senator from Georgia would consider it in its full effect, it seems to me he would not insist upon his amendment.

The thing that is aimed at by this legislation is the prevention of those who owe allegiance to the United States from taking the side of the German Empire in this war. That is what it is aimed at.

Mr. HARDWICK. That is exactly what I am aiming at.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator is missing it a long ways. He is missing it about as far as it would be possible to shoot in the opposite direction.

Mr. HARDWICK. Let me say——

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the Senator will pardon me, I will conclude in a moment.

Mr. HARDWICK. All right; I shall answer in my own time.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The amendment left as it would read after the amendment of the Senator from Georgia was adopted would not only eliminate the issue of war, the cause of the German Empire in the war, as the matter upon which the attitude of citizens of the United States was to be controlled, but it would substitute in place of that everything which the German Empire has ever stood for, whether in literature or art, if they ever had any art, whether it should be in the military organization of its army, the method by which it equips and supplies its troops, the kind of clothing that the people wear, the school system of the empire, things which are utterly removed from the cause of Germany in this war.

I think if the amendment of the Senator from Georgia were adopted it would punish people for doing a great many innocent things, and it would make it extremely difficult to punish them for doing a thing which is almost equivalent to treason against the United States. It is readily conceivable that a lawyer might argue in a court that a man who favors the cause of the German Empire in this war was not necessarily favoring the German Empire in the sense in which the amendment would read after it had been changed in the way in which the Senator from Georgia proposes to change it.

I do not see any objection to the amendment of the committee as it stands now; that is, I can not conceive what purpose the Senator from Georgia would have in striking out of it the words "the cause of the German Empire," unless he wants to weaken the amendment; and I am sure he does not want to do that.

Mr. HARDWICK. I thought the Senator said just a moment ago that I proposed to strengthen it too much.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator is mistaken if he thought I said that. I said the Senator broadens it and includes some things which are utterly irrelevant. That does not strengthen it; that weakens it. It would constitute a crime of things which in themselves might not constitute any offense at all or do any harm to the United States, but, on the contrary, might be of benefit to them. That is a very different thing from strengthening the amendment. I think it would make the amendment unreasonable and consequently weaken it. It would punish things which are innocent and not connected with the war and permit treasonable support of Germany's cause in the war.

Mr. President, I should like to submit to the Senate in this connection, as bearing upon the merits of the question which is under discussion, which is the provision for the punishment of favoring the cause of Germany in this war, a letter which, I think, condenses and expresses in precise form the entire issue and also indicates the viewpoint of the people of the United States—at least, a large number of them—and the manner in which they express it. It is very well to have considered by the Senate the view which the man at home takes of this question, and I ask that the Secretary may read it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

ST. JOSEPH, MO., April 3, 1918.

Hon. MILES POINDEXTER,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Your amendment prescribing imprisonment for 20 years and $10,000 fine for "whoever shall by word or act support or favor the cause of the German Empire or its allies in the present war," etc., was reported here in yesterday's newspapers.

I hope you will not think it amiss of me to write you that the people of this section are heartily in favor of the most drastic measures being taken for the suppression of disloyalty of every kind. In fact, we think the day long since past when the present lenient course of the Government should have changed.

The accounts of this bill before me do not disclose its scope, but I most earnestly hope that it provides for the use of the death penalty in every case where outright disloyal acts are shown or where words are used which in their natural consequences would bring about such acts.

It was perfectly clear last summer when Kerensky abolished the death penalty that Russia was doomed; that the native Germans in Russia and their associates and the German propaganda would ultimately destroy the morale of the Russian Army and people; that only a revolution such as Korniloff attempted could turn Russia from its enfeebling sentimentalism.

The native Germans in America and their associates and the German propaganda are taking the same course here, and, if unchecked, can not fail to effect similar results. Only the immediate and drastic application of the death penalty will serve to repress the traitors who engage in unlawful acts and the equally culpable though less courageous traitors who spread sedition.

How long must we suffer German intrigue to render useless 60 per cent of the gas masks put out by a certain factory before we invite the perpetrators to don the ruined masks and enter one of the gas chambers provided for teaching soldiers? How long will we permit plotters to weaken the framework of our aeroplanes before we give them the opportunity of falling a few thousand feet? How long will we let Mr. Berger, of Milwaukee, preach "Heaven or hell, peace or war, socialists or profiteers and their following, * * * do your duty to outraged humanity to-morrow," before we take him to the line of trenches in France and invite him to cross No Man's Land to German territory?

Must we wait until the loyal citizens of every community take these matters into their own hands, as they are doing with increasing frequency on every hand, before Congress and the administration will meet the German menace at home in the manner we expect our soldiers to do in France?

As you will see, I am writing you not only a commendation on your amendment but a plea for Congress to act immediately in a way which can not be misunderstood by our enemies here in the United States, and to say that you need have no fear about the country supporting the most drastic measures that Congress can be persuaded to take.

Sincerely, yours,

H. R. MCMURTRIE.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington yield to me?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have yielded the floor.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I believe there is no one more solicitous than I that there be adequate support at home of all men who are in the service. I have five young relatives in the service, and I think I have as strong a desire to protect them in their facing an open enemy against hidden attacks in the rear as anyone could have because of personal reasons. I am not unmindful, however, Mr. President, that in the zeal we might display in extreme legislation we may pass the limit of wisdom. That is a common error into which patriotic citizens fall as well as indiscreet ones. I wish to support any measure here that will be calculated even, if I may use that phrase in an argumentative way, to check any growing disposition to interfere with the cause of the United States in this war; but it is like a good many other measures we have seen passed in the four years since I have been here. I think this particular amendment to the espionage law is beyond the limits not only of prudence but of the power of Congress.

Not very long ago we passed an act that provided in substance that you could break open any man's desk, his safe, invade his office, take whatever papers or property of that character were discovered which might be alleged to be the instrumentality for the commission of a felony, and such a measure was justified because it was one of the means by which the commission of crime was prevented; that the guilty person could be apprehended before the crime had become consummated, and thereby the public interest could be protected.

I know that measures of that kind are difficult to criticize; they are more difficult to defeat; they are more difficult to amend so as to bring them within the powers of Congress. I know as well as do some of my associates here the danger of criticizing anything approved by the administration. I always do so reluctantly and with the knowledge that one's motives are apt to be misunderstood, their conduct adversely commented upon, and facts perverted in order to make it appear in a very unfavorable light; but we passed certain sections in the espionage bill under the belief that they were good laws. The circuit court of appeals in the seventh circuit of the United States, sitting in Chicago recently in what is known as the packers' case, had occasion to pass on that provision of the law.

They used the language which I shall read in regard to the taking of papers of defendants charged with an offense under a general warrant. Be it said that these warrants are of this character: They do not describe the property to be seized; they simply, in a general way, state that there are papers in the hands of certain persons, naming the defendants, which are to be used or have been used in the commission of certain offenses. They are very similar to the John Doe warrants, issued in due form, but describing the person whose property is to be taken or whose premises are to be searched as John Doe. When officers take such a writ to search anybody it is in the nature of a pocket writ, a general warrant, issued against the American people, so that any Senator or any citizen of the United States could, under a John Doe warrant, be searched without having his name inserted in the warrant, or any premises could be searched or any property could be seized.

Some limitations upon the power of Congress are found in the requirement that the person be named in a warrant who is the subject matter of the search; that the premises be described; and that the property to be seized also be described with reasonable certainty. All of those provisions were ignored in the execution of the act passed by Congress. The espionage act, I believe, goes beyond the limits of congressional power. What may be left of that act finally, when the courts shall have interpreted and applied it to specific cases, would be a matter of conjecture if I were to enter upon an attempt to decide; but in the case where, in the investigation in Chicago, a deputy marshal broke into Mr. Veeder's office and took papers it led to a hearing before a court. Mr. Veeder was the general counsel of the packers.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois permit an interruption?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. STERLING. The Senator calls attention to the espionage act and that part of it relating to search warrants, I suppose. Let me call the Senator's attention to section 3 of title 11 of the espionage act. Under the head of search warrants it provides:

SEC. 3. A search warrant can not be issued but upon probable cause, supported by affidavit, naming or describing the person and particularly describing the property and the place to be searched.

I recall some discussion in the committee and also in the Senate upon this proposition, and, as I recall the discussion, it disclosed the fact that search warrants under that provision were issued only under the conditions under which search warrants are usually issued and under conditions imposed by the statutes of the several States relative to search warrants. How is it that any personal right was violated in the issuance of search warrants in the Chicago case? I should like to ask the Senator from Illinois that question.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will reach that point in a moment. All the forms of the procedure on search warrants are carefully observed in the section of the espionage act which has been read by the Senator from South Dakota, but it is like the pending bill would be if enacted into the form of law. When it falls into the hands of agents to execute it, they may make it the instrumentality of abuse.

As a matter of fact, under this same section and another provision about taking papers that are alleged to be instrumentalities for committing offenses, a warrant was issued under which deputy marshals broke into a private office, into the safe in which were found private papers, and attempted to take a number of documents—letters, telegrams, and other communications—passing between different persons connected with the packing business, on the claim that they either had been used to commit a felony or an offense or would be used for the commission of future offenses. Those documents were not the property of the Government or of some complaining witness. They were the property of the packers who were threatened with prosecution. There was in the warrant in the hands of the marshal no sufficient description of the documents to be seized. It described Mr. Veeder's office, but it did not describe with any reasonable degree of certainty the documents to be seized.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, would not that, then, be rather the fault of the commissioner or the judge who issued the warrant?

Mr. SHERMAN. It was issued by a United States commissioner.

Mr. STERLING. Because an affidavit must be made before him, and if the property is not sufficiently described he should not issue the warrant. Section 4 of the espionage act provides that:

> The judge or commissioner must, before issuing the warrant, examine on oath the complainant and any witness he may produce, and require their affidavits or take their depositions in writing and cause them to be subscribed by the parties making them.

Mr. SHERMAN. That only shows, when it is applied, the general tendency of the present times. It is true that the packers were not charged with being disloyal; they were charged with not paying their employees a sufficient wage or giving them the proper conditions of service; but the commissioner settles that. By the way, in an ex parte proceeding the United States commissioner is a Federal justice of the peace; and, according to my experience, there is about as much use in arguing a case before a United States commissioner as there is before a justice of the peace who has decided to hang your client or to divorce the parties because he married them and ought to have equal jurisdiction to untie that which he has tied; that was an argument once used by a justice, and I have had similar experiences with justices. A justice of the peace is the only court in the country that has unlimited jurisdiction of both State and Federal matters at common law and in chancery, and a United States commissioner is very much the same. He gets his business just like a justice of the peace gets his; just like a justice in the justice shop court in Chicago used to get it; he gets it because he is popular with the prosecuting officers; and if he does not do what they want the commissioner gets no business. I have letters in my files in my office here in Washington from a commissioner in Chicago soliciting business, and asking that I use my political influence, of which I have a remote vestige, being a minority Senator, to obtain business from the United States attorney in his district. I have not complied, except to answer in a good-humored way, as I hope, that I did not think my recommendation would do any good, and I doubted very much the propriety of it if it would. United States commissioners issue such warrants as the one to which I have referred. It is only when the question is heard at last before a court who is free from any motives or any bias that finally the law becomes settled. I read only this paragraph from the opinion:

> One's person and property must be entitled, in an orderly democracy, to protection against both mob hysteria and the oppression of agents whom the people have chosen to represent them in the administration of laws which are required by the Constitution to operate upon all persons alike.

This language was used in reference to warrants that did not sufficiently describe the documentary matter to be seized, giving no dates or descriptive words by which the defendant could be advised in advance what particular documents were to be seized out of his safe or office. It was argued—and the brief when read discloses that this was one of the arguments offered—that naturally the papers could not be described; that the district attorney would be unable to give the dates and describe the persons to whom the papers were addressed or the character of the documents with any more certainty than was given in the warrant that was drawn, and these are the remarks of the court on the question, holding that the warrant was utterly void and conferred no power.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; certainly.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator think because the provisions of the statute were not strictly complied with, as they must be where a warrant is sought to search a man's premises and to seize property, that is a fair and rational argument against the law itself?

If the Senator will pardon me, in the Senator's own State, and in every State of the Union so far as I know—but I know it is true in the Senator's State, because I took occasion to look it up when we had the espionage act under consideration—there is a statute in regard to search warrants, and the espionage statute is fashioned somewhat along the lines of the statute drawn in the State of Illinois. In nearly every State it has been found necessary and proper to have statutes providing for search warrants. There, of course, may be abuses at times; but because there may be abuses in the enforcement of the law would not be an argument against the validity of a statute or the wisdom of a statute of that character.

If the States may have statutes with regard to search and seizure, why should not the Federal Government along legitimate and proper lines have like statutes? If a statute which authorizes a search warrant in a given cause relating to crime or felony is proper in a State, why should not a statute of like nature be passed by the Federal Government? Does the Senator think—of course I am asking a number of questions in a rather jumbled way—that because the court to which the Senator has just invited our attention has held that the authorities did not proceed in conformity with the statute, it is fair to say that this statute was not authorized and the validity of it has been challenged?

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, it is a proper and intelligent inquiry that the Senator makes, and the substance of it is this, that the abuse of the law by agents or officers who go beyond their powers ought not to be a legitimate criticism of the law itself or of a bill that proposes to embody those features into a law. Ordinarily that is true; but here is the inherent weakness of that provision of the law as enacted ordinarily. We have always thought that a defendant's papers could not be taken by process, his safe or his desk broken open, and those papers used in evidence against him. We have thought that; whether it is right or wrong is a question for the courts. I know that if the courts adhere to what they have ruled in many other cases of this kind, they will hold that, if I have in my possession papers that may be used in evidence against me on a charge of felony, I can not be made to produce those papers nor can any officer break open my private office or seize my papers, take them away from me, and use them against me in the prosecution. If they pass out of my possession, if they are found in somebody else's possession, then the inhibition is removed. I no longer have that protection.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly; I yield.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will ask the Senator from Illinois if he argues that there is anything in the pending bill that enlarges or extends in any way the authority to issue search warrants or to seize papers? I am asking in perfect good faith. My understanding is that the passage of the bill now before the Senate would leave the question which the Senator is discussing just as it was before.

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly; but if this amendment should prevail it will be a part of the same law, amending it. I am using this illustration to show how the law has already been employed—it is true, I think, by abusing its provisions—but it shows that this general search-warrant feature that some Senators criticized when the bill was on its passage here some time ago has been construed to mean that you can issue a general search warrant, and take papers away from defendants, and use the papers for the purpose of convicting them. Now, that is one of the provisions made in the original espionage act to which the pending amendment will add some more drastic provisions.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. KING. I apologize to the Senator. I have before me the Illinois statute; and a hasty examination of it and comparison of its provisions with the provisions for search warrant in Title XII of the espionage bill, I think, will convince the Senator, as the hasty examination has convinced me, that the espionage act is more carefully drawn in the interest of the defendant, or the person whose premises are to be seized, than is the Illinois statute. I will not take the time to read the Illinois statute, but I feel sure that I am correct in making that statement.

If the Senator will pardon me, the provision of the espionage act which authorizes searching for papers is connected with section 22. I will read the section:

Whoever, in aid of any foreign Government, shall knowingly and willfully have possession of or control over any property or papers designed or intended for use or which is used as the means of violating any penal statute, or any of the rights or obligations of the United States under any treaty or the law of nations, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than two years, or both.

That section which authorizes search for papers and the seizure of papers relates to papers which in their character involve international relations; and the Senator will recall that at the time of the discussion of this bill, frequent allusion was made to papers in the possession of German spies in New York which had been seized, and the necessity of seizure became very apparent at the time of the seizure, and subsequently. So there is no general provision for search warrant with respect to private papers of individuals.

Mr. SHERMAN. The general law would apply. There is a restriction. There is a general act of Congress on these matters, or there is a procedure that is always followed in the issue of search warrants in process of that kind, which is specific. That is enlarged by the section read by the Senator from Utah, where it relates to disturbances of an international character; where, for instance, a German spy, or an unfriendly employee of a legation—as was the case, in fact, when Von Bernstorff was still here—has in his possession papers that might be used to create international disturbances; and the query is whether we ought to extend the search-warrant provision so that these may be taken out of the possession of the defendant and to be used against him.

It may be an employee, but they are all liable to indictment under this law—not only the spy, but all of his employees. That person is indicted in the usual way; or, if it be before the espionage act passed, there is a general neutrality law in this country that has been in force for some time, providing that if any person, a resident alien or one found in our country, should set on foot any expedition or military enterprise of any character, or any conspiracy that might be called a military enterprise, against any friendly power, or against the citizens or subjects of any friendly power, it is an offense against the neutrality laws.

We prosecuted many persons on the Mexican border—some Americans—who set on foot such enterprises against the peace and good order of Mexico. The same thing has been used in the prosecutions in certain of the district courts on the Canadian border, in Maine or New York, where railroad bridges were dynamited by German subjects or spies found in our country, the conspiracy being framed on our soil. The query is whether persons engaged in such unlawful enterprises, tending to disturb the peaceful relations of one nation with another, can have these documents—their own property—taken away from them by search warrant, to be used against them. I would rather not have such a law than to take the chances on such a precedent. A precedent, once made, by which private offices are broken open and one's own documents removed, to be used against him in his prosecution, is violative of the rights one has to be secure in his person and property and not be compelled to give evidence against himself. The fact that he has them is enough to extend to him that guaranty.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. REED. I have not heard all of the Senator's remarks—I have been at a committee meeting—but the Senator is aware, is he not, that the very question that the Senator is discussing has already been passed on by Mr. Justice Bradley, of the Supreme Court?

Mr. SHERMAN. I did not get all of the Senator's question.

Mr. REED. I state, by way of apology, that I may be in error about the aspect the Senator was discussing; but, as I understood him, he was referring to the right of the Government to enter the house of a citizen and take his papers; and I understood the Senator to say that he would rather not have such a precedent established, asserting that he believed that it would be declared unconstitutional. I am asking the Senator if the fact has escaped his recollection that the precedent has been already made; that Mr. Justice Bradley, in a very powerful decision, held that the right of search could not be so employed?

Mr. SHERMAN. That is true; there is no doubt about it. The Senator, as usual, is timely and accurate in his citations. But we are seeking here to amend the espionage law, under which the abuse of the writ has already been made in the case I refer to, in the seventh district, decided by the Court of Appeals, in violation of the opinion of the Supreme Court by Mr. Justice Bradley, to which the Senator from Missouri refers. It shows the danger, in these times of stress, of introducing such amendments into existing laws, or proposing them by pending bills.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. NELSON. I do not understand that the matter of search warrants, or searching for papers, is involved in this bill, or in this amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. Not in this amendment; but it becomes a part of the law of which this amendment will be a part when it is adopted, so that it is part of a system; and I am commenting upon the entire law as it would be amended in the event of the adoption of this amendment in its present form.

Mr. NELSON. The Senator will find, if he examines it, that the search law is in a separate chapter of the espionage law, and we are not amending that by this bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, certainly it is a separate section, but it was passed in the same bill and is part of the same legal system.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir; I yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. I do not understand the Senator, and I should like to ask him a question. The search-warrant clause of the espionage bill particularly provides that the warrant can only be issued on probable cause, supported by affidavit naming or describing the person, and particularly describing the property and the place to be searched. Now, the Supreme Court has held, in a number of cases with which the Senator is familiar, that you can not use any process to search a person and take his private papers and use them against him in a criminal case. This does not provide that you can do it; and I do not see how the amendment before the Senate in any way changes the rules of law or the espionage statute, which seems to me to protect the person whose person or premises are to be searched.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will repeat, that if this amendment is adopted it will become an amendment to the espionage act, because, as I read it——

Mr. KELLOGG. That is quite true; but the espionage act itself does not violate the Constitution.

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, I understand that; whether one's own papers can be taken from him and used against him in a criminal case by observing all the solemn formalities hedging about such a process is yet to be determined under the case cited by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], but of what earthly use is law even, with public sentiment so inflamed? What does a nisi prius or trial court or a United States commissioner care for it when you have once started on such legislation? Several judges have manifested mob-law symptoms themselves. It is true that you can take it to the Supreme Court or the court of appeals at last and have it reviewed; but nobody but packers or millionaires can hire lawyers by the year to carry cases to the Supreme Court.

Mr. KELLOGG. But, Mr. President, then the fault is in the administration rather than in the statute.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am not criticizing the law itself. I am saying that you are furnishing a precedent by which you will incite people to do these lawless things.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. OVERMAN. Has the Senator's attention been called to the fact that the espionage law is divided up into separate laws or titles? The section the Senator is talking about, relating to search warrants, is Title XI. In other words, when we came to pass that law, we put 12 bills together. If the Senator will notice, on page 13, that is a title, which is the same as a separate law; and the pending bill does not at all amend the search-warrant title.

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, no; it does not change the law with regard to search warrants, but when the amendment is adopted it is a part of the act; it is a part, then, of the system.

Mr. OVERMAN. No; it is a part of a certain title of the act.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know; but then the espionage law itself becomes an entire fabric. Every section in it, together with the amendment, then becomes a part of the espionage law, to be administered by the local authority.

Mr. OVERMAN. No; I will give the Senator the act, and I think he will agree with me that Title I is the espionage act.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is section 3.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator will see that the search-warrant part is a title; it is not a chapter.

Mr. SHERMAN. I understand that; but the amendment that is pending says it is to amend section 3, Title I, of the act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations * * * of the United States," and so forth, and to punish espionage. So, when it is amended by the pending bill, it then becomes a part of the entire system. It was all one bill when it was pending here.

Mr. OVERMAN. No; it is a part of the title "Espionage."

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, well, you might just as well say that a man's leg is not a part of his anatomy because it is a good way removed from his head and has more bone and usually less brains than the cranium. It is a part of the entire organism.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir; I yield.

Mr. HARDWICK. I want to suggest to the Senator that what I think the Senator has in mind, and what I believe is a very strong argument, is that the Senator is showing that, even as to the parts of this law that we have already passed, there have been strained constructions and misconstructions of it by the courts, and therefore we ought to be slow to enact other things that are capable of like misconstructions.

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly. The Senator states the purpose I have in view. These very experiments that we are making here tend to enlarge the oppressive and often destructive discretion of the local authorities.

Mr. President, I have heard considerable comment on what could be done and what could not be done under this bill in the event it is passed. I want to know—and I invite the attention of Senators to this circumstance—whether I could read a letter of the kind I produce now, if this bill became a part of the act as an amendment. I should like to know whether I could read a letter of date of April 4, 1918, addressed to a person in Washington—Miss S. L. Keyser, of 29 B Street NW., Washington, D. C.—and make appropriate comments on it, in view of the fact that there is an antiprofiteering rent bill pending in the Committee on the District of Columbia; whether I could read this letter and comment upon the governmental action, without landing myself in jail, if I did so at any place outside of the Senate Chamber?

Referring to your contract with this department, dated November 18, 1916, leasing to you premises No. 31 B Street NW., from month to month, at a compensation of $5 per month, I have to state that the records of the department show that you have only paid rent for the premises up to and including March 18, 1918. I have therefore to advise you that, exercising the right reserved to the Government in the contract, you will be required to vacate said premises within seven days from the date of this notice, and any and all of your effects in the building should be removed by that time. From and after the expiration of said period the building in question has been leased to Mrs. Mary B. King, at a rental of $30 per month.

Suppose I were to comment upon that on a platform. Suppose I were a Chautauqua profiteer myself, and were doing a lusty gladiator's act some hot July afternoon, appealing to the populace, and suppose I should read this letter. I would comment further on the fact that private owners of property, tenants in Washington, had been severely criticized for profiting to the extent of from 100 to 200 or 300 per cent. I would then refer to the fact that a Government department, through a letter signed by its chief clerk, had undertaken itself to profit to the extent of 600 per cent. I would say, "What would you think of a government of that kind?" And about that time a deputy marshal would seize me and start me on my trip to the bastile.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BORAH. With a large part of the Senator's argument I agree; but it would not come under any clause of this bill if the Senator were to make the same speech, even if he should make it out here on the stump. It is not inhibited by this law. Let it be understood, Mr. President, that those who are advocating the passage of the law do not believe that it at all touches the proposition of discussing the competency or the incompetency of an administration, the policy or the wisdom or the unwisdom of an administration, the efficiency or the inefficiency of an administration, or the competency or incompetency of an officer, or the honesty or corruption of an officer. It does not cover that subject.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, would the Senator be willing to put the remarks he has just made in the bill by way of amendment?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I have not any doubt at all but that I am correct in that interpretation, and it is in there now, because there is nothing in it now which covers that subject matter at all. Why, Mr. President, knowing that the Senators who are opposed to this bill are sincere, if they can convince me that we are about to pass a measure here by which you can not discuss the competency or incompetency of an administration, or the competency or incompetency of an officer, or the wisdom or unwisdom of a measure, I shall oppose this measure to the bitter end.

Mr. SHERMAN. I call the Senator's attention to the following language:

Whoever when the United States is at war—

And we are now, and unhappily may be so for some time—

shall utter, print, or publish any disloyal—

To which I have no objection at all—

profane—

I have none to that; I do not think a person ought to talk profanely about anything, Government or otherwise—scurrilous—

I have no objection to that—contemptuous—

I have to that. I would express myself in a contemptuous manner if I said that a Government department that undertook to profiteer, and representing this Government under which I live, 600 per cent was not practicing what it preached. Now, it continues:

contemptuous, or abusive language about the form of government of the United States.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator think that when he attacks an officer acting corruptly or improperly he is attacking the form of government of the United States?

Mr. SHERMAN. I have not any doubt about that interpretation by various deputy marshals running around over the country.

Mr. BORAH. I should like to see eliminated from this law entirely the ability of any departmental officer to interpret any part of the law, and if I should have my way, when the espionage bill is finally passed no one will construe its terms except the courts of the country in the presence of a jury. If a deputy marshal should make that construction he would not last long, in my judgment, assuming, as I do and as I believe, that the courts are still impartial and still sane in the construction of its language, because no court would construe an attack upon an officer as an attack upon our Republican form of government, neither would he construe it as an attack upon the Constitution of the United States. Rather would he construe it as a support of our form of government and the Constitution of the United States to assail those who are bringing the Government of the United States and its Constitution into disrepute.

Mr. SHERMAN. Does not the Senator know that practically laws are made by the departments and bureaus and not by Congress?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, if that be true, we need not worry ourselves at all, because this law will be enforced by the bureaus and the departments, whether it is passed or not. If the bureaus and the departments are going to make the laws, very well and good; I have no occasion to dissent with the Senator at all; I surrender the proposition. I assume that the law which this Congress will make, if it is delegated to the courts to construe, will be construed by the courts, and the courts will perform their functions as they have been performing their functions, in my judgment, with great wisdom and sanity in this great crisis.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator forgets that it takes from one to five years for the courts of this country to reach the average humble citizen's rights. Here were pickets, delicate, well-reared women, arrested in the city of Washington, almost in the shadow of the White House. Did any court discharge them? What became of them? Some of them from Southern States were confined with negro felons or convicts.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the court did discharge them as soon as they were able to reach the court.

Mr. SHERMAN. When?

Mr. BORAH. Just as soon as the court could reach them and they could reach the court.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is what I am insisting, just as soon and no sooner. Before the court to which an appeal was taken from the trial court convicting them could discharge innocent women, they had been jailed for weeks with criminals in vermin-infested cells that disgrace the name of law.

Mr. BORAH. Fortunately, it does take time to have adjudication in this country. Fortunately, we do not adjudicate the same hour through a town meeting or a mob movement, but we adjudicate through the final determination of a court, and that takes time and properly takes deliberation; it takes consideration, and properly takes consideration; and when a precedent is established, as it is now established by the court in regard to that matter, it is the practice then.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is a valuable precedent for future use. It does not relieve the suffering of innocent women who were imprisoned for weeks in the heat of summer with vile criminals amid filth and vermin and all the surroundings of an ill-kept penal institution.

The difference between the Senator and myself is that when I by my vote undertake to help to make laws I wish to protect the average citizen of small means in the making of the law. I am not making laws for millionaires to litigate and construe, who employ lawyers of ability by the year. I wish to take care of citizens in the making of a law, so that it will be plain enough and its intent will be plain enough to keep the small public officers, deputy marshals and others, from committing these outrages upon helpless persons.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like to ask the Senator a question, for sometimes by questioning we can get at the real issue much more than we can by statements. I ask him whether or not he is of the opinion that it should be lawfully permitted while we are engaged in this war for people under the jurisdiction of the United States to willfully utter, print, write, or publish any disloyal, profane, scurrilous, contemptuous, or abusive language about the form of the Government of the United States, or the Constitution of the United States, or the soldiers or sailors of the United States, or the flag of the United States, or the uniform of the Army of the United States? I am interested to know, aside altogether from the abuses which the Senator refrered to, some of them which he says arose under the espionage act and some of them that did not have anything at all to do with the espionage act, such as the suffragist pickets——

Mr. SHERMAN. That was only an illustration. I did not claim that it had anything to do with that.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Aside from those abuses, I ask the Senator from Illinois, with the desire which I know he has to have as nearly as good laws as we can get and come as near avoiding abuses of them as we can arrive at, whether he believes that citizens of the United States ought to be permitted by law to do the things which I have just read?

Mr. SHERMAN. Not all of them. I will specify. When the United States is at war no disloyal act or word ought to be permitted from either alien or citizen. I think if the bill stopped there it would cover all practical purposes so as to prohibit disloyal words or acts. That covers it. It is for the court or the jury, if a question of fact, to say whether the act is disloyal. What is added to the rest of it?

A profane expression about the form of government would be disloyal in time of war. A scurrilous or contemptuous reference to it in time of war would be disloyal if it ought to be punished at all. If it is a mere idle criticism of the Government, I do not think it ought to be punished at all under the guise of a war measure.

I have heard in the National League for Popular Government more abusive language about the United States Government and the United States Supreme Court than I ever heard in a meeting of red-handed anarchists on the lake front in Chicago.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. Has not the Senator heard words of bitter denunciation of the Supreme Court in this Chamber?

Mr. SHERMAN. I have. I thank the Senator for reminding me of it; it had escaped my attention. I have a right to argue on such definitions of disloyalty by extending it so that officious persons, so that every person who wishes to construe it, is given the liberality for the construction that it is profane or it is scurrilous or it is contemptuous. What does it all amount to? If it amounts to anything that ought to be taken within the scope of an amendment to the law, it is disloyalty.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Does the Senator think that disloyalty is any more specific or confines the action of judicial officers to any more definite line than these things which are specified in the statute? Is it not true that, on the contrary, disloyal and disloyalty are more general terms and subject to a wider range of definition than the specific things mentioned in the bill?

Mr. SHERMAN. I think not in the application I refer to. I think the word "scurrilous" gives to a deputy marshal a discretion that is dangerous to be vested in any petty official who is running about over the country trying to make a record to arrest somebody.

Let me call the attention of the Senator or of the Senate generally to what was introduced in the RECORD here by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON]. I have said that contemptuous or scurrilous language about the form of government of the United States or about the Constitution, if it is worthy to be considered in a bill, is disloyalty. Disloyalty charges a well-known offense. It has been the subject of judicial investigation and decision in our own courts and in England for many years. It is a well-known act. I want to legislate on that so long as I have a vote in this body.

A scurrilous remark about the Constitution or our form of Government is made in nearly every issue of a paper of which Louis F. Post, the Assistant Secretary of Labor, is the responsible owner. He is the First Assistant Secretary of Labor to William B. Wilson. The Post family founded it, and I wish to make this statement on my own responsibility. Louis F. Post and his family still are the responsible owners of the newspaper called The Public. It is a single-tax sheet. It is socialistic at heart. It is the exponent and the mouthpiece of every governmental error, every fad, every superlative bundle of farago in the shape of criticism that I have known from the time since the first number of it came out. He occupies a place in the Department of Labor, is a responsible agent there. Among those who contribute to this paper signed articles are Mr. Post himself and various members of that particular cult in the United States, among whom appear Raymond Robbins and Jane Addams, and a great variety of social settlement workers of the country, all of whom are high in the councils of this administration.

The difficulty is that these laws as well a part of the Government are administered by social settlement workers and not statesmen. My dear friend Raymond Robbins is now in Russia. Press reports coming across in a cablegram day before yesterday indicated that Mr. Robbins had been taken by the vile bolshevik of his own kind and cast out upon the street in Petrograd, I think, where he administered a portion of the Red Cross fund. In other words, he is getting in practice what he has advocated in theory all his life, and I am glad of it. He finds how a government of his kind of reformers really operates when well under way. They treated him scurrilously and contemptuously, but he has been treated to what he has been preaching or Louis F. Post has been preaching all his life. Mr. Post is a responsible Government official.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Does the Senator approve that sort of preaching?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is what this bill is intended to prohibit.

Mr. SHERMAN. How will you enforce it when the very men who preach it and attempt to put it into practice execute this same law? When they agree with you it is statesmanship, it is economical wisdom, it is social justice, it is a few more sonorous and mouthfilling phrases that have become governmental and reformatory in character. When they do not, they arrest you as a disturber.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator ought to propose an amendment to the bill that no Bolsheviki shall have anything to do with the enforcement of it.

Mr. SHERMAN. That would break up the administration, Mr. President. I have no desire to embarrass it in war times.

There is in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, inserted in the matter I referred to by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], an article by another one of these officials at the head of the publicity bureau. In that he says the Constitution of the United States was written by rich men to protect rich men's rights. Of course he was not at the head of the publicity bureau when he said that, but he is now. His statement is there in words that yet live, and it is the same Constitution of the United States. Do you want to put in his hands the power to censor public matters? We get a great deal of "pitiless publicity" from sources of that kind. I do not want to put in his hands further power.

I am in sympathy with the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to specify in the law and govern men who are inclined to go wrong by law and not by the administrative discretion of heads of departments. I shall vote, therefore, during the war to provide that matter introduced into the mail for distribution shall be in the English language, or rather to prohibit it in the German language, because that is the language of the public enemy, and I think there ought to be a restriction upon that during the war.

In addition to that the head of the publicity department of this administration, Mr. Creel, in the same series of statements said that the Supreme Court had by its decisions carried into effect the conspiracy of the rich men who framed and formed the Government under which we are living, the Constitution. If I were to say that outside of the Senate Chamber when war is on and make that charge myself, I ought to be jailed. I think the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] was right when he said that an adjective law or an adjective lawyer was about the limit; that he showed by adjectives the lack of knowledge. If I were to say these things, therefore, outside of the Senate Chamber, repeating all these adjectives, leaving all these adjectives off, leaving simply disloyalty, under that law I ought to be fined or sent to the penitentiary.

If I spoke of the Constitution in such language, it would be disloyal to say that it was a conspiracy of rich men in its original framing, and in the decisions of the Supreme Court since that time that they have carried into effect the original conspiracy by their decisions. I can not think of anything that is more hurtful, that would be more disloyal, than to carry conviction with a statement of that kind into the hearts of citizens of the United States, who are asked to buy liberty bonds, asked to encourage enlistments, or be loyal in the prosecution of this war. Still the same men who say these things and do these things are to execute this law, and we are asked to add the language of this bill to the espionage act.

I tell you what we need in this country more than anything else. It is not additional legislation. We need men who know how to administer the affairs of government. I will not criticize the President; I shall support him. I have an abiding sense of loyalty toward him in the prosecution of this war. I will do like the loyal Englishman does. The Briton never criticizes King George. Lord Northcliffe never criticized King George in his ministry or agency for conducting the war. He did criticize his ministry; and I have a right, and I think it is my duty, to criticize the ministers of this administration. As to those who surround him, those who are the keepers of the Executive conscience, those who tell him in time of stress and trouble what to do, I have a right to say that their advice is unsound and that their practices are not calculated to strengthen this country in this struggle.

We have too many of this variety, who, until recently, have exhausted their eloquence and their powers of denunciation in trying to bring into disrepute and disrespect the Government of the United States. This administration is now reaping what it sowed through its ministers, who are irresponsible, unpatriotic in time of peace, and, wrapping themselves in the mantle of war-time preparations, conceal the vileness of their civic imperfections before the war began.

I know that breed. In every place west of Pittsburgh to the Pacific coast I have seen them; I know what they are; and some of them are the responsible ministers of the present administration. I am against delegating into their hands further great powers. I will give such power to the President when the President is to exercise it himself, but if he is to delegate it to those of the kind I have described, and if they are to enforce such laws as this, then better by far were it that we should not legislate at all, but depend upon such laws as are already in force. We are heaping laws upon laws. We are repeating the great American failing. We mistake laws for men and fitness and sacrifice. We can not conquer Germany by legislation.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. There is nothing in this amendment which gives the power to these officials to enforce the law. The proposed law lays down a rule of conduct, and its violation is enforced in the courts, and nowhere else. Neither Mr. Creel nor any of the statesmen to whom the Senator from Illinois refers will have anything to do with the enforcement of the law. It will be a law to be enforced through the courts by juries and judges, and not by these men.

Assuming that all the Senator from Illinois says is true—and there is a great deal of truth in it—he is setting up a man of straw and beating him unnecessarily in this case. If this amendment proposed to leave the enforcement of the law to the officers to whom the Senator refers, I should sympathize with him; I should agree with him; but it does not do anything of the kind. I hope that my good friend, the Senator from Illinois, will not intimate that the jurors and the Federal judges of this country belong to the bolshevik family or are socialists in a body.

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, no. I know the Senator from Minnesota does not want to put me in the attitude of doing so. He is simply making the inquiry for information, in a spirit that is seeking for the truth.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator allow me to ask him merely to read the bill?

Mr. SHERMAN. I have read it.

Mr. NELSON. I ask the Senator to read the amendment which we propose to incorporate in the bill, and see if he can find anything in it which gives to the men to whom he refers—and I do not find any fault with that part of the Senator's remarks—any jurisdiction over this matter.

Mr. SHERMAN. The particular officers to whom I have referred?

Mr. NELSON. Yes; or any of their class.

Mr. SHERMAN. Any of them?

Mr. NELSON. It only gives jurisdiction to the juries and the courts of this country to enforce this law as they enforce any other law. It is the same law that the Senator and I have to submit to, the same tribunal, if we should make a mistake and violate the law. The juries and the judges of this country, and not Mr. Creel or any of his affinities, will execute the law.

Mr. SHERMAN. I fear I have not made myself as plain to the Senator from Minnesota as I should like to do, but if the bill will stop with words or deeds that cover disloyalty, I am with the Senator.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him further?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. NELSON. I want a friendly talk with him.

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly; I am always open to friendly talks.

Mr. NELSON. The object of this proposed law is to prevent violence. If we allow men to go abroad and to utter sentiments which this proposed law prohibits, it will breed violence; the people will not submit to it. It is for the sake of keeping the peace of the country, to prevent a breach of the peace, that it is necessary to insert this provision in the bill. Would the Senator from Illinois like to have me come to him in his committee room or in his house and talk of the flag of the United States in a scurrilous, profane, and contemptuous manner?

Mr. SHERMAN. You must stick to a strict definition.

Mr. NELSON. The Senator must observe that the object of this proposed law is to prevent people from taking the law into their own hands. If the Senator from Illinois will read this provision of the bill, he will find that it is intended to meet the gospel of the I. W. W.'s. What is their gospel? It is to denounce our Government, our flag, our Army. Does the Senator want that to prevail? Does he want men of that kind to go abroad, with a tendency to create riots and disturbance, so that the good people, losing all patience, will resort to such violence as took place in the Senator's own State a few days ago in reference to a coal miner? I think we ought to stop it; that we ought to look at it in a broad way, and not in a picayunish or Lilliputian way. We ought to remember that the object of the passage of this legislation is not altogether to stop disloyalty, but to prevent conduct such as will tend to create and promote breaches of the peace, riots, and other lawlessness. This legislation is necessary for the protection of our own people as well as for protection against Germany. That is my view of it, and I think the Senator from Illinois, on reflection—I always admire the Senator, for he takes a broad, cosmopolitan view of these things—I think if he looks at it from that standpoint, he will be inclined to agree with me.

As to some of the other matters to which the Senator from Illinois has referred, I desire to say that there is a great deal of merit in what he says. There are a great many things that are occurring here and which have occurred which are distasteful to me, but I shut my eyes against them; I cast all that aside. I am so eager to make our Government successful in this war and to put our people into the proper spirit and attitude for carrying it on that I am even ready to swallow a bolshevik lion, if he goes in my way.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I have no disposition to differ from the Senator from Minnesota on much of what he has said. Our confession of faith would be substantially the same thing, but it is covered up by inhibitions on disloyalty. You are opening up by using the words "scurrilous" or "contemptuous" or "profane" a gate through which—of course, it is applied to the form of the Government of the United States—any deputy marshal on any statement you might make that would reflect on a department would arrest you at sight.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. SHERMAN. Allow me to answer just for a moment.

It is true, as the Senator from Minnesota says, that after my arrest I have a right to a trial by jury, to a hearing before an impartial court, the evidence to be adduced, and to be acquitted if I can or the Government to convict me. If I fail, in that event, after I have been arrested and tried and acquitted,

I have been under bail for a considerable time, and these very words which, if there is any merit in them, must cover a charge of disloyalty, have been made the handle by a deputy marshal to subject me to all of this humiliation.

I now yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, one year ago I left a sick bed to come to this Chamber to vote in favor of the declaration of war against the German Empire, which declaration, I believe, ought to have been made sooner than it was. Since then I have voted for every bill called a war measure that has been presented to Congress. For some of them I have hesitated to vote, because I thought they were very extreme; but I have believed that we would reach a point where we would in calmness and reason legislate on this subject, but I fear that we are going from bad to worse. I have on my desk a bill that has been introduced and is before a committee which provides that the Government can take all the real estate and personal property of any citizen of this country.

Mr. SHERMAN. And forfeit it entirely.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; forfeit it entirely. Under it the Government can go into any man's home, take his personal property, commandeer his house if need be, and turn him out of doors, under the plea that the Government needs it. I do not know that the Senate will ever pass that bill. I hope it will not.

So with this bill, Mr. President, it has seemed to me that there were very extreme provisions in it, and particularly in the amendment. The provision in regard to criticisms of "the form of government" has troubled me. What is the "form of government"? I suppose the President is a constituent part of the Government; and I am not quite sure that in the coming campaign, provided this amendment is adopted, if I should say that the President acted not only unwisely but, perhaps, I might say, foolishly when he wrote a letter for publication in the State of Wisconsin denouncing Mr. LENROOT as a disloyal man, I might be trenching upon the provisions of this amendment and I might be called to account for criticizing in a contemptuous manner, because I should feel contemptuous about that particular incident, and I might be subject to the pains and penalties of this proposed law, which imposes a very large fine and imprisonment for the term of 20 years.

Mr. President, the people are troubled about this amendment. I have on my desk two letters from responsible editors, one of an independent newspaper and one of a Republican newspaper, saying that they do not know but that they will have to abandon their editorial departments if this amendment becomes a law. I have in my hand an extract from an editorial recently printed in one of the most widely circulated papers of the country, which I will ask the Secretary to read, as it is very brief, if the Senator from Illinois will permit me.

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of New Mexico in the chair). Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

That latent mischief in all laws like this Poindexter amendment, which trespass upon the constitutional rights of free speech and free thinking, is the opportunity given to evil-disposed persons to use them for the gratification of private grudges and enmities.

If this Poindexter amendment became law, there is no man in New York City or in the whole United States, no matter how upright and how loyal he may be, who would be safe from the accusations and the perjury of malignant and unscrupulous enemies.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator to suggest this thought to him, that there is a clear distinction between the Government or the form of government and the administration or any officer in the administration?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. FLETCHER. A person might criticize the administration of the Government or criticize any officer having charge of the administration of the affairs of the Government, which would be entirely legitimate, and thereby create no offense at all, whereas a criticism of the Government itself or of the form of the government of the United States is an entirely different matter.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, Mr. President, I hope that is so; but multitudes of men will, I apprehend, tremble when they undertake to discuss political matters next October if this amendment is agreed to. I am not sure, I have not been able to determine—and perhaps that is not to my credit exactly—what the term "form of government" means. For instance, if I should say that I believe that a limited monarchy, such as Great Britain has, is better than is our system, if I should say that the Government of Canada or of Australia or of New Zealands is, in my judgment, better than our form of government, would I be criticizing the form of government under the provisions of this bill if it is enacted? I am afraid I would be, and yet a great many loyal men in this country believe that our form of government in all its details is not the best that human ingenuity and human wisdom have devised.

Mr. President, I want to vote for this bill; I have voted for everything up to the present time, and I want to vote for this bill; but I think the Senator from Illinois has touched the vital point, the crux of the situation, when he says that when we provide punishment for disloyalty we ought to stop, and not talk about scurrilous language and use a long list of adjectives of that kind that would permit any evil-minded person to say that another person scurrilously said something about the Government or about the Army or the Navy and arrest the individual, hale him into court, and possibly convict him and send him to prison.

I hope the Senator from Illinois will offer an amendment to modify the amendment the Senator from Washington has offered in good faith, and with a provocation in his own home State that I do not wonder leads him to feel that we ought to resort to extreme measures.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

Mr. GALLINGER. Just one more word. I say I hope the Senator from Illinois will offer that amendment for which I will gladly vote, at the same time holding my views as to my final vote in reserve until the debate closes and until I see what shape the bill is then in. I would now yield to the Senator from Washington, but the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] has the floor, and I am speaking by his courtesy.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Will the Senator from Illinois pardon me for a brief interruption?

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Will the Senator from New Hampshire kindly state the person who is responsible for the publication which has just been read at the desk?

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, Mr. President, I have no concealments about the matter. It was printed in a newspaper that I very rarely read, a newspaper edited or owned by a man with whom I have no special sympathy; but, nevertheless, that man or any other man may utter a great truth. I clipped it from the New York American, a copy of which was sent to me through the mails; it was not marked, but I read the editorial, and there was a great deal of truth in it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the Senator will pardon me, there may be a great deal of truth in it, but the basic fact that the writer starts out with is not the truth at all.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is the Senator's opinion, and possibly he is correct.

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; it is not a matter of opinion, if the Senator will allow me. The writer uses my name in that editorial as being responsible for a certain amendment, and I think he has misled the Senator from New Hampshire, as a great many others have been misled in regard to that. Then, upon the statement that I introduced a certain amendment, he starts out with a fulmination against the amendment which he does me the honor to characterize by my name.

There is another little error, which might be regarded as immaterial by the writer, whoever he was, who wrote the editorial, namely, that there is no such amendment. The whole hysteria is on a subject that does not exist. I never conceived and never offered such an amendment. In the first place, there is nothing before the Senate that even contains the language that that editorial is directed at; but even the language that is before the Senate is not my language, and the amendment the Senator from Illinois is discussing is not my amendment. The history of it was given here by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] several days ago. It originated in a bill that was introduced by the Senator from Montana. He did not consult with me about it. I myself thought that there was a great deal of merit in that bill; but, regardless of that, it was not mine. It was taken up by the Legislature of Montana and, with some changes, enacted into law, and was then taken by the Senate Judiciary Committee and, with some further changes, including the elimination of those features which are objected to by these editorials, was reported to the Senate. That is a very good illustration of the degree of accuracy and reliability that the public can depend upon in some of our newspapers from newspaper writers.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator from Illinois will permit me a word I will add that I have no disposition to attribute to the Senator from Washington the authorship of anything that does not belong to him, or that he would repudiate. It has been generally known as the Poindexter amendment. I read it in at least 10 newspapers, and I supposed the Senator was in some way responsible for it, as it was so stated. At any rate, the Senator has been a very warm advocate of the amendment, and I do not criticize him for that. The extract that was read from the desk, I think, does touch upon the provisions of this amendment, and to that extent I think no great offense has been committed by the publication.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. As I recall, the portion of the editorial which was read from the desk was a paragraph from a much longer editorial.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I thought I had the entire editorial with me, but I have not; but I read it, and it is based upon a supposed amendment which seems to have gone out to the country which is not in the bill at all. The amendment itself is incorporated in the editorial, and the amendment as incorporated in the editorial would be justly subject, in my judgment, to criticism and to opposition; but there is quite a difference between the amendment as it was copied in the editorial and this bill.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me to ask a question?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MYERS. I entered the Chamber while the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] was just speaking. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Washington to what editorial he referred, in the remarks he just concluded.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The editorial that was inserted in the RECORD a moment ago by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. MYERS. I did not hear it read. From what paper was it?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It was stated that it was from the New York American.

Mr. MYERS. Oh, I have read that editorial, and I just want to say that the impression seems to have gone out broadcast over the country, through the newspapers, that the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] took my disloyalty bill, Senate bill 2789, introduced on the 15th of August last, and in the Judiciary Committee offered it bodily as an amendment to the pending bill. I would be very proud to think that the Senator from Washington had done so. I should be glad to think that he thought enough of my bill—which is practically the same as the committee amendment before us, except that it also includes the President of the United States, as well as the form of government of the United States, the Constitution, flag, Army and Navy, and so forth—so to offer it as an amendment; but I learn that he did not do anything of the kind, and that it never was offered as an amendment, in committee, to the pending bill or any other bill. I do not know why such a report has gone out to the country.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me just one second——

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. POINDEXTER I should like to state what my amendment is. I think it is even better than the one of the Senator from Montana, but I think there is a great deal of merit in the bill proposed by the Senator from Montana. In view of all this discussion and misapprehension, I should like to put into the RECORD again what my amendment was.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Is it the Senator's bill?

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; it is not the bill. It is somewhat changed from that. It is very much like it. I think I have it right here.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I can easily pick out from this bill what the Senator's amendment is. It commences after the word "enumerated," in line 16, page 3.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I thought I had it in the RECORD of Saturday.

Mr. NELSON. I call the Senator's attention to the bill. His amendment commences after the word "enumerated," in line 16, page 3. It is these words:

> And whoever shall by word or act support or favor the cause of the German Empire or its allies in the present war, or by word or act oppose the cause of the United States therein.

That is the amendment of the Senator.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is correct.

Mr. NELSON. And that is all there is of the amendment of the Senator.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is all the amendment that was reported by the committee. The original proposition which I proposed was incorporated in a bill which I introduced on the 1st day of April, and which I afterwards offered as an amendment to the bill; and, with a few slight changes, that is the amendment that was adopted by the committee. This is the language of it as I originally proposed it, and it contains no such language as that which has been the subject of these animadversions in the pro-German press of the country:

> That whoever shall, by word or act, during the continuance of the present war between the United States and Germany, support or favor the cause of Germany in that war, or oppose the cause of the United States therein, or who shall make any statement or do any act which, in its probable effect upon public opinion, or otherwise, shall aid or tend to aid Germany, or to be of disadvantage to the United States in the conduct of said war, shall be punished—

As provided in the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois permit me?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think we will all agree to that beyond a question. It is true that the amendment that was criticized in that editorial is slightly different from the amendment we are now considering. For instance, the President of the United States is mentioned in the bill that the Senator from Montana offered, and the good of the country or some such phrase as that, which is not in this amendment; but the criticism was upon the adjective "contemptuous," and all that sort, which would enable an evilly disposed person to make trouble for a man who had no purpose of disloyalty in his heart, but who made a criticism upon the form of government—it might be innocent criticism, believing it justifiable—or upon some of these matters that are enumerated, not constituting disloyalty. Now, let us legislate—at least that is my feeling about it—against disloyalty in any words that the human language can devise—I do not care how strong they are—and I shall vote for it freely and gladly. Perhaps I will vote for this bill when it emerges from the Committee of the Whole. I hope it may be amended still further in some particulars. I want to vote for it, and I want to go with the Senator from Washington to the extreme limit in crushing out the disloyalty that there is in this country at the present time and which is emphasized in the State that the Senator so ably represents in this Chamber.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will say that the condition in my State to which the Senator has referred is a real menace to all those things which the Senator, from his training and experience and intuitive knowledge of the American Constitution and American privileges and rights, holds precious. The existence of those things is menaced. The right to own property, the right to labor freely, to contract labor, and to enjoy the fruits of labor in peace and under the protection of the law are all threatened by this condition to which the Senator from New Hampshire refers.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington tell me how many convictions have been had in his State on the public disturbances or riots caused by Hindus and I. W. W.'s, and so forth? I am asking for information.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have not counted them, Mr. President. There have been some. There have not been nearly as many as there should have been.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is generally the case.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am sorry to say that some of the municipal authorities in our State—which, the Senator knows, have a great deal of responsibility in preserving order and peace and putting down the beginnings of sedition and disorder—have not been as firm as they should have been, and I think that they are subject to criticism in that respect; but there have been a number of convictions.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, no Senator can have more desire to punish disloyalty, I think, than the Senator from New Hampshire and myself. We join with you in that; but when we have leveled a statute against disloyalty I think we have gone far enough. If language which is scurrilous, profane, or contemptuous has any tendency or produces any result that ought to be within the inhibition of an act of Congress, it would of itself amount to disloyalty. In other words, disloyalty is the greater term and the greater offense. It constitutes the offense against which we ought to legislate; but the greater always includes the lesser. An alien or a citizen might speak in a contemptuous way, and it might not amount to disloyalty. I do not think he ought to be prosecuted unless the contemptuous language or conduct amounts to disloyalty; and, if it does, it is a mere step in the chain of proof when the charge of disloyalty is made.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator excuse me?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. It seems to me that my worthy friend from Illinois overlooks one material matter involved in this proposed law, and that is, it is not only to prevent disloyalty but it is to prevent this rioting and breach of the peace.

Now, let me put a case to my good friend. Here is a procession of men passing along the street with the flag of the United States at the head of the procession. Some ruffian on the sidewalk says, "Damn that dirty flag! Pull it down!" Now, that is language that is calculated to create a breach of the peace. All people who are loyal to the country of the United States, all people who are in favor of our Government and our flag will resent it; and among a mass of unthinking men in a procession like that such language may breed a riot. It may breed violence and result in a serious breach of the peace. It is because of that fact that we need just such language in the bill.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I say, in that connection, that for language practically similar to that which the Senator has used two men were shot instantly without ceremony in Oklahoma the other day, three bullets being put through one of them and two through another, in less than an hour.

Mr. NELSON. I want to say to my good friend from Illinois that I am in favor of this legislation because I look at it from a different angle than the Senator does. It is not merely to prevent men from making disloyal utterances, but to prevent men from making utterances of a kind that will breed riot, breach of the peace, and disorder, and lead to violence and such acts as the Senator from Idaho has referred to, and such as occurred in the State of the Senator from Illinois a short while ago, in respect to that coal miner. Now, I do not want anything like that to occur in this country. I think that the case of the coal miner in the Senator's State was one of the most outrageous things that could possibly occur, and I think the shooting of these men in Oklahoma was almost as bad, and it is because we want to stop that and prevent that that we need this legislation. It is needed for the good of the American people, for our own good, in order to preserve law and order. I think if my good friend the Senator from Illinois will look at it from that angle he will see the necessity for the law.

In the case of the expression that I referred to a moment ago, where the man on the curb, when a procession passes by with a flag of the United States, says: "Damn that dirty flag!" that is profane language, that is scurrilous language, and that is contemptuous language, and language that we ought to prevent in order to prevent a breach of the peace in this country and to preserve law and order. That is the way I look at it. It is not merely a question of preventing disloyalty. It is something we need for our own protection.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, we do not need to indict a man for contemptuous language of the kind supposed to be used by the offender in the illustration given by the Senator from Minnesota. Such an expression is itself disloyal. The greater definition or the greater act includes all of the incidental steps in the chain of evidence that leads to the proof of the act. Such an expression is disloyal. Such an expression about the President of the United States is disloyal. Arrests are made every day at some place in the country because some one uses language of a disrespectful kind about the President. The offender is arrested under the existing law on that subject. Therefore it must be on the ground that it is a threat against the President of the United States, which of itself is a specific kind of disloyalty. If we use the term "disloyalty," it is a general expression, under which any kind of proof of disloyalty would be admissible in a prosecution.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will my good friend yield to me again?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir; I yield.

Mr. NELSON. I want to call the attention of the Senator from Illinois in this connection, with his permission, and also the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire, to the fact that this whole paragraph is qualified by two important words. We have just adopted the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] inserting the word "willfully," so that it now reads "whoever shall willfully utter" these words, and then we qualify it still further by using the word "calculated." It is suggested that that word be changed to "intended," and I have no objection to that. If you add those two qualifying words, nothing in the shape of the dangers that the Senator from New Hampshire apprehends, nothing that is a mere criticism of the Government, nothing that suggests that we ought to have a different administration, nothing with relation to the suggestion of an amendment to the Constitution, would come within the purview of the law. Now, the words "form of government" are intended—and we have something like it in our naturalization laws which we recently adopted—to meet those classes of men who are opposed to any form of government except their form of government, a government of utter lawlessness. It is not the character of our Government as compared with the government of other countries, but it relates to the form of our Government as an entirety. Then in respect to the Constitution of the United States or the soldiers and sailors of the United States or the flag of the United States or the uniform of the Army and Navy of the United States, I say to my good friend from Illinois, I once wore the uniform of the United States, and I never felt more like fighting the Confederates than I did the men who sneered and spoke contemptuously of the blue uniform that I wore in those days. I do not want any citizen in this country, alien or native born, to have the right to go on the streets of the cities of this country and speak with profane language, contemptuous language, of the soldiers of the United States or the uniform of the United States or the flag of the United States. It is intolerable. It leads to a breach of the peace, and it is our duty as legislators to prevent it and check it in order that the reign of lawlessness may not prevail in this country.

How would the Senator from Illinois like it, if he wore the uniform of an officer of the United States, to have a man speak of that uniform and say, "That dirty suit of clothes that man from Illinois has! It is a miserable, wretched uniform, unfit for any patriot to wear." How would he like to have that said about it? Would he take it in a Christian spirit and turn one cheek to him and then turn the other cheek and let him utter it on the other side of his head? I know he would not. I have too much faith in the broad, Christian, patriotic spirit of my good friend from Illinois to think he would indulge in any such thing as that.

Mr. SHERMAN. I had not gotten to that part of it yet—about the uniform nor about being smitten upon one cheek. It depends entirely on who smites me whether I would turn the other one or not. I might stand it from some and become restless if applied by others.

Mr. NELSON. I did not intend to have it apply to Mr. Creel, that he should do the smiting.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no controversy with the Senator about protecting the uniform or the flag. I think such expressions a form of treason of themselves. I have no objection to that form of the bill, and I have not intimated that I wish it stricken out. I have been so far confining what little time I have taken to the gates that are open to irresponsible deputy marshals and petty officials to annoy and harass those who criticize officers of the United States or departments. That raises this question. The criticism might appear to this officer to be scurrilous or contemptuous. He construes it on the spot, if you are criticizing an officer of the United States, to be a criticism of the form of government. Before you escape from his construction you are in jail or out on bail, like the women pickets.

I want to advance a step further. I have not reached that point yet. The Senator from New Hampshire touches a vital principle in this language. What is the form of government? You can not discuss the form of government without discussing some particular manifestations of that form, same agency, some department, some officer, some law, some institution. How, Mr. President, could you discuss the contour of a graceful person in the ballet? The Senator and I have almost reached the age where we could sit in a front seat without suspicion. If we were to discuss the contour, the grace, the agility, the cultivated form, we might refer to the form as an entirety, but if we criticized any particular feature which goes to make up the form as an entirety we still make ourselves liable to horsewhipping by some admirer who is waiting at the stage door on the outside. I use that homely sort of illustration in order to illustrate what I mean.

If we criticize the form of the government I do not understand we have to criticize the entire Government, taking it as a whole, to say that the republican government that we have here, representative in character, is the best government or the worst, as we might favor or oppose it. I do not understand we have to criticize it under this law under the rule of construction that shall apply to it as an entirety. I think I can criticize, for instance, in this language and render myself liable to be arrested. I have here the North American Review of March, 1918. This is an editorial by George Harvey. Under this bill George Harvey could not print such an article in the North American Review about Secretary Baker and stay out of jail in New York City. Under the language of this bill I think he is criticizing the form of government when he criticizes the Secretary of War. The Secretary of War is the agency and, with the generals and armies in the field, is the whole Government on land of the United States.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield.

Mr. STERLING. I was going to ask the Senator whether it is not a principle of construction of language that the expression of the one excludes the other, and must it not be the very form of government itself that is criticized, not even a department of the Government, but the form of government, because, for example, it is a republican form of government, and it is to speak in derision of it as a republican form of government or to use scurrilous or abusive language toward the American republican form of government? Is not that what is meant, and can anything else be said of the expression "form of government"?

Mr. SHERMAN. If that is so, then write it so. I have always followed the familiar line of preparation, when men began to argue about what anything meant I stopped the argument and began to write more plainly. This is the language:

Whoever, when the United States is at war, shall—

With the amendment made—

willfully utter, print, write, or publish any disloyal, profane, scurrilous, contemptuous, or abusive language about the form of government of the United States or the Constitution of the United States.

How will you criticize the form of government? I can criticize it as an entirety or I can take up the War Department, the Navy Department, the Food Administration. It is a manifestation of our form of government; it is the concrete instance as to how it is applied. It is intended to reach a person who outside of this Senate Chamber criticizes the act of an essential agency of the Government in the prosecution of the war. What is the Army? The striking force in the field. It is the President, the Commander in Chief, the Secretary of War, all his helpers and assistants of the Army, and all its officers and privates. That constitutes for war purposes on land our Government. It is an entirety.

I am in accord with what the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] says in protecting the uniform, contemptuous language about the colors, because I think that is an essential instance of disloyalty of itself. I would protect the uniform of officers by express enactment. Leave that in. I have no objection to that form of the bill and I will be glad to vote for it. But if we go further and leave the language in that of itself amounts to nothing more than disloyalty, contemptuous and scurrilous language, then we are going beyond the purpose of the bill. The purpose of the bill is to punish disloyalty. That is the essential point of view always.

But the Senator goes further and says, and I think he wishes to protect the community from breaches of the peace, the mob, and riots that are caused in various parts of the country by contemptuous, scurrilous, profane, and abusive remarks about the Government, the flag, the soldiers, or our common cause against the public enemy. Let me remind the Senator that unless it is connected with the prosecution of the war, unless it is something that interferes with the enlistment of marines or soldiers, unless it is something that, in other words, is disloyalty in the prosecution of the war, Congress can have no power to punish mere breaches of the peace in communities. That belongs to the police power of the States. I, therefore, believe that the Senator must, in the angle at which he views this, agree that if the Government is given power to punish disloyalty, these contemptuous and scurrilous remarks, the greater including the less, will be covered by it.

Mr. NELSON. No.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator does not think it does; very well. I think it does. The Senator disavows it and I shall take it that way without further comment. But if the charge of this profane or scurrilous language amounts to disloyalty the Government then reaches out through its marshal and arrests the offender. He is then in the custody of the United States. He then is beyond, it is supposed, the reach of mobs. There is no longer the provocation to breach of the peace in the community that otherwise might lead to riots, as in Oklahoma and in Illinois. The charge of disloyalty will cover that. The remarks about the flag are covered by disloyalty. To keep sacred the uniform and the officers in the Army or the Navy is covered by specific language in the bill. I think it ought to remain there. I believe in the fullest enforcement of that. I think that is a matter in which Congress has a right to insist that the Government shall take cognizance of and protect our men. I think that is a part of the loyalty of the country, and I have no objection to it; but I am in favor of the loyalty specifically defined in that way. But contemptuous language may not amount to disloyalty. It may or may not reach the conditions or circumstances. It might in an alien be cause for provoking a riot. An alien can not be guilty of disloyalty to this country. He does not owe it any allegiance. Allegiance signifies a duty to a sovereign of those who owe to the sovereign power allegiance.

An alien owes no such allegiance to our Government. He is found here. If he is guilty of the language that would provoke disturbances or prevent men from enlisting in the Army or Navy he ought to be dealt with. He is a resident alien and ought to comply with any regulation that Congress might have power to make to make him behave himself. I believe in that; but if you charge disloyalty, it necessarily and ordinarily applies to citizens of the United States. They are the ones about whom I am solicitous in making these regulations. In a charge of disloyalty against a citizen, when the proof is forthcoming, a jury will convict and a court will impose, and let him receive the penalty of the law. I believe in that. I will vote for that kind of a measure. But the greater including the lesser, I will leave disloyalty to be dealt with as disloyalty and not undertake by merely scurrilous and abusive words to take that which is matter of police regulation by the States to prevent breaches of the peace.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. Does the Senator realize where his last argument leads him?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do.

Mr. NELSON. I say this in a Christian spirit. He intimates that those who are not citizens of this country do not owe it any allegiance, and it would not be disloyal. Then, according to his definition, disloyalty could only apply to those who are citizens. We have in this country a large mass of people who are not citizens. Would he let them go out——

Mr. SHERMAN. No, sir.

Mr. NELSON. Would he have no law to prevent them from speaking in a contemptuous or profane or scurrilous manner of our Government, of our flag, of our soldiers, of our sailors, and our uniform?

Mr. SHERMAN. No.

Mr. NELSON. Would he grant them immunity? According to his definition, if you limit the bill to the word "disloyalty," according to the premises he laid down a moment ago, they would be immune under this paragraph of the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. No, sir. I should like to have the Senator understand, and I know he does keep in mind, that an alien owing allegiance to Italy, or Austria, or Germany, or of the English-speaking race, Great Britain or her colonies, could not be guilty of disloyalty to this country. You can provide punishment for him. That is what ought to be done in this bill. Anything that tends to interfere with enlistment in the Army or Navy, or if the act should go further, to interfere with any of the operations of an officer or any department of the Government or, I think Congress can go that far, of any State or of any municipality, or any act of Congress as provided in the bill if it interfere with the conduct of the war. I think that provides, then, a punishment for the alien. Disloyalty is something, though, that belongs to a breach of allegiance. The native born here of citizen parents by the mere act of birth owes allegiance to the Government of which he becomes a citizen by the mere accident of his being here at that time.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir; I yield.

Mr. NELSON. I think the Senator fails to distinguish between the loyalty that is due from a citizen of the United States and the loyalty that is due from a man resident within our borders who came here lawfully, and who is not a citizen. My view of the matter is that any person in this country who came here, lawfully residing in our midst enjoying the benefits of our Government, owning property and having all the rights practically of an American citizen except that of voting, owes obedience to the laws of this country; that he owes allegiance to it, that qualified allegiance which makes it his duty to obey the laws of the country just as much as though he were a native-born citizen. I can not see any distinction in that respect between those two classes of men.

We have in this country a large class of people who are not yet citizens of the United States. They are residing here. Some of them are classed as enemy aliens and some belong to neutral countries, but whether they belong to one class or the other, while they reside here they owe allegiance to the laws and institutions and Government of this country. It may not be to the degree perhaps that one who is a citizen of the country owes. They are not liable to military service, for instance, but in other respects they are amenable to a certain species of loyalty to this country. In the distinction that the Senator has dwelt upon with regard to these men I again say to him, as I said before, they would be immune if you left only the word "disloyalty" in the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the best way to legislate is to legislate so as to fit existing conditions and specifically reach the two classes. We recognize the differences between citizens and aliens. We intern aliens. We confine them to a certain territory, and properly so. It is a war measure.

Mr. NELSON. Excuse me; that is only enemy aliens, but we have a lot of aliens in this country who are not enemy aliens, and we do not intern them.

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly. All of the enemy aliens, Austrians or Germans, are interned or required to be registered or to keep out of a certain prohibited zone. The aliens of our allies resident in this country are not so interned, but do they owe loyalty? Loyalty is a synonymous term with allegiance. Loyalty and allegiance are necessary to be shown in an indictment and trial for treason. An alien can not be guilty of treason against this country. These are established distinctions. I am only referring to them, not because I wish to exempt this class—I do not—but to call attention to the fact that this bill does not take cognizance of these conditions, which I think it ought, and provide apt penalties for aliens. I think there ought to be some provision here to reach aliens, whether enemy aliens or friendly ones.

The breaches of the peace that are sought to be prevented by such measures as this are ones I wish to allude to briefly.

Mr. STERLING. Will the Senator permit an interruption right there?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. STERLING. The Senator says he wants to include alien enemies within the language of the bill, or to make it plain, anyhow, that they will be included. I will ask the Senator now, omitting the word "disloyalty," with these series of acts or descriptions of series of acts made punishable, would not the words "profane, scurrilous, contemptuous, or abusive" apply not only to citizens but to aliens and enemy aliens as well, leaving out the word "disloyalty" as a word applicable only to citizens?

Mr. SHERMAN. It would, but insufficiently. It would be applying the lesser of the penalties to an alien and the greater to citizens. It would create a discrimination that really is favorable to an alien. I think there ought to be the inhibition against disloyalty, so that a charge could be prosecuted against citizens whose enumerated acts, opposed to our form of government, to the Constitution, that are reflecting on the uniform or the colors of the United States, and when committed by an alien shall come within penalties to be provided in this bill. Then we get them all. But I submit that under the present wording of the bill there is ground for judicial construction that might defeat the very purpose of the bill itself. I think we want, if anything, to punish an alien who is here claiming the protection of our laws, municipal and national, even more, or at least equally so, with our own citizens who are guilty of similar acts. Under the bill, as I look at it, and probably it will be the interpretation put on it by the courts, an alien would have lesser penalties than another.

Mr. NELSON. Let me put a question to the Senator.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well.

Mr. NELSON. Let me ask the Senator in the matter of preventing a riot and preventing a breach of peace, if a man on the curbstone sees a procession pass by with the banner of the United States at the head of the procession, and he damns the flag of the United States, calls it a damned dirty rag, what difference does it make whether the man who does that is a citizen of the United States or is an alien, a neutral alien, or an enemy alien? What difference does it make in one case more than the other? It is liable to lead to a riot and breach of the peace.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is; certainly. It does not make any difference in the essential immorality or impropriety of the act. I think that ought to be punished in both cases. The Senator's constant solicitude is to preserve the peace and good order of the communities where these utterances are made. His anxiety can be no greater than mine. I have been through, I think, three well-established riots that have been conducted—the shortest two days and the longest extending over a period of three weeks; one in Chicago and some elsewhere. I am as anxious that the good order of the communities in the different States of the Union shall be preserved, I think, as anybody can well be. I am bearing two scars on my person received in riots. I was hit at one time with a coupling pin in a railroad riot. I have some practical knowledge of the spirit of the mob, not only in quelling it but in going about it sometimes to serve process when there was some difficulty in the particular locality from which I came. Mob law is recognized as an imminent danger at all times.

We know that in such times as these we are especially liable to incur the prejudices of numbers of people who collect upon very slight provocation, and sometimes the provocation, it is true, is great. It is the police power of the State that must check it. The property of aliens is burned, their persons outraged, their lives taken constantly, in different parts of the United States. That is because of the weakness of the police powers of the several States. If ever these powers of the States shall decree that they will cease, that they will be absorbed by the central government here at Washington, it is because the States themselves no longer possess the virility and the strength that will punish these offenses and restrain seditious acts of the kind referred to.

I regret exceedingly that at Collinsville, Ill., the event occurred that has been referred to recently. I possess myself in patience that I can properly reach this matter in order to comment upon it. Robert Prager, a German born in Dresden, Germany, moved to the United States in 1905. At the time of the occurrence referred to he was residing in Collinsville, Ill. Collinsville is a mining town with a big ore smelting plant, because of the proximity of good smelting coal with the zinc ore brought from the Joplin (Mo.) district. A great number of miners congregate in and about Collinsville. A small mining town known as Marysville is not far distant—a kind of a suburb, so to speak, of the place. My recollection now is that both these places, as most of these mining towns down in that part of Madison County, Ill., are, are saloon towns.

Prager had become a member of the mine workers' union. He had some difficulty in becoming a member. There were some difficulties after he became a member. There was some opposition to him inside of the local union. Several controversies had arisen, some of them not connected with the matter of loyalty or of proper behavior toward the Government of the United States at all.

On the occasion referred to, or a short time before, the miners assembled in a saloon in Collinsville, in the suburb. Their patriotism and desire to inflict punishment grew much more zealous after they had imbibed some of the products over the bar of that saloon. I do not know that that destroys a man's patriotism, but I do know that it removes the discreetness of conduct that ought to mark the conduct even of a loyal patriotic American citizen. I believe that this mob of coal miners that went from that saloon took the alien Prager when they were in a state of drunkenness. It was a drunken mob masquerading in the guise of patriotism. The mob itself was a greater disgrace to Madison County, Ill., and to republican government than any contemptuous, profane, or scurrilous language that could be employed by anyone, alien or citizen.

A telegram was read here, Mr. President, from Siegel, the mayor of Collinsville. The telegram is a disgrace to Collinsville and its municipal government. It is to me an indication of the abject cowardliness of the mayor. Why did not he protect the victim? He is anxious to place his failure to perform his duty to the lack of law. What good does law do in the hands of a spineless mayor who is mainly concerned about his reelection? I have no high regard for Mr. Siegel whatever in view of the conditions.

I have heard the jest many times on a sober subject that the shooting of a negro inside of the city limits in a certain State was not an offense calling for the assailant to be punished for murder, but he was simply fined for shooting in the city limits; that is all there was to it. That practically was what happened in Mr. Prager's case—a ghastly tragedy by the inefficiency of municipal government.

The police followed this drunken mob to the edge of the city, where the city limits of Collinsville end. There are four policemen in that town to preserve the peace. That magnificent constabulary followed to the city limits; they said they had no jurisdiction beyond it; and the mob was allowed to wreak its bloody purpose upon the helpless victim. It was a drunken mob. I do not know just what they drank, but I shall find out in due season. More than likely they were filled with the celebrated product "that made St. Louis famous."

Mr. NELSON. Evidently they were not filled with grape juice. [Laughter.]

Mr. SHERMAN. They were not filled with grape juice of the Bryan brand. [Laughter.] It was more exhilarating; it aroused their patriotism to a greater pitch. I have my suspicions that some of it came from the Anheuser-Busch Brewing Association, and probably some was a left-over stock from Peoria, Ill., with its celebrated product. At any rate, these lusty patriots, who were so outraged, committed this act. I have no apologies to make for Mr. Prager; he made a mistake; he owed this country a better return for the protection it had given him and the laws that had thrown their protecting arm about him and the occupation that gave him the chance to make a living and better wages than he had received in his own country that he left 13 years ago; I have no apology to make for him; neither have I any apologies for the mayor, who lifted not a hand, who did not even liberally construe the law of Illinois, to prevent the lawless conduct of this drunken mob that sought the blood of this victim.

What else? That is bad enough. How could you blame those ignorant men in the mob who were inflamed with liquor when authorities of greater moment have done and said things that lent them encouragement?

Madison County has a sheriff, who is a general peace officer. I happen to know him. I want these facts to go into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. The story has never been told; and I will take the time of the Senate to tell it. The sheriff, under our law, is the general peace officer for the entire county. He possesses unlimited power to summon as a posse every able-bodied citizen in the county to preserve the peace. This poor, drunken outfit, most of whom could hardly intelligently speak the English language, thought they were justified, no doubt, in going to any limit they saw fit. The sheriff of Madison County himself was once fined $500 for violation of the order of a Federal court in that district; and he was fined under such conditions as showed an open, contemptuous, scurrilous effort on his part to set aside and nullify an order of the court. Let me briefly state what he did:

There was a strike on in an industrial plant in Madison County, which takes a great deal of the overflow from St. Louis, at Granite City. The Niedringhaus Granite Works are there. Many of the iron and steel industries have overflowed on that side. When the industrial plant got into trouble over an open shop, working conditions, and the like, they obtained an injunction from the Federal court. They were inhibited from interfering with the operation of the plant. Pickets were thrown around outside of the prohibited area. Every man who went into the plant to work in the morning was stopped by the pickets and told not to go in; that he was associating himself with "scab labor"; that it was dangerous; that a number of the workmen had been beaten up and some shot—which was true—the pickets using the various arguments that belong to that form of controversy, with which we are all familiar.

Matters reached such a pass that a deputy factory inspector, representing the governor of the State, at his request, went down to investigate conditions. He started to go in. The deputy sheriff, representing the sheriff of the county, arrested the factory inspector. The inspector made himself known. He was laughed at; he was continued under arrest and searched. Because of his police powers, he carries weapons. His weapons were taken away from him and he was told to beat a retreat and to go back home where he came from. That is all he could do.

The Federal judge, being somewhat curious to know to what extent the local authorities would proceed, sent a deputy marshal down to investigate. The doughty sheriff arrested the deputy marshal at the same time and place, proceeded to search him, removed his weapons, gave him the same friendly advice, that he was an undesirable citizen in a danger zone, so to speak, and to beat a hasty retreat for headquarters. The marshal went back and reported.

The next thing, a squad from the court went down and arrested the sheriff and all of his assistants and brought them up. They were tried for contempt. They were not tried by a judge, but they were tried by a jury, in accordance with the law that Congress at one time passed. The sheriff was convicted almost immediately by the jury. It was an outrageous case of the abuse of power by a peace officer of Madison County. That is the kind of sheriff there is in Madison County to encourage these drunken men, who can scarcely understand the English language, to go abroad and commit acts of violence of the kind I have described. Who set the example of lawlessness?

Not many days ago, in Hillsboro, Montgomery County, Ill., a boy within the draft age went down to St. Louis and enlisted in the Navy. He was examined and accepted. He came home, the recruiting officer telling him that they would assign him to duty in a short time. He came back to Hillsboro. His father and mother lived there. Montgomery likewise is a mining country; coal mines are scattered all over the county. The night of his return a rumor was bruited around in the neighborhood that an I. W. W. had been seen to go to this young recruit's home. The rumor spread, as those things do. Presently an armed mob went to the house. They knocked roughly on the door. The young fellow went to the door, opened it, and saw men with angry countenances. He closed the door and attempted to keep them out. His father and mother were in bed. He asked the men to retire. He became frightened and got a gun. About that time one of the mob climbed in through a window that he had raised. The boy shot him. He did not know who these men were—whether they were burglars, thieves, or what not. The man shot was not wounded to kill; he will recover; but about that time some one of the mob through an open window shot this young recruit, who was awaiting service in the Navy, and the day following he died in the hospital. It was found that same night, and after the boy was mortally wounded, that the mob was entirely mistaken; that nothing of the kind that was rumored had ever occurred; that no I. W. W. had gone to his house; but some idle rumor had gained circulation, causing the tragedy to which I have referred.

Would such a case as that be helped by anything in the language contained here—"scurrilous, contemptuous, abusive" conduct? Here is the difficulty in all such cases. It is because the local community itself is intrinsically wrong and does not enforce the laws of the community. I never have had any apology for mobs in my section of the country; I have none now.

East St. Louis last summer was a horrible example of such an instance. The first Senator who denounced it in proper terms here was the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS]; and in fitting words he stigmatized those outrageous acts as they deserved. I wish to say that I think 55 convictions have been had of those lawless men engaged in all kinds of occupations. Some of them are high in authority in union labor in East St. Louis; some are employees of the packing houses and of the factories; but they have been convicted and given all the way from 30 days in jail and fines, up to five years or more in the penitentiary. Such laws as the one proposed here will not change conditions; they will not make less frequent mobs of that kind and the consequent tragedies. What we want here, what we must have, is a more awakened public sentiment in the States and communities where these things occur. We may pass laws here in endless profusion, but they will make no change. We can not usurp the police powers of a State; they must be administered by the local authorities in whatever form the State legislature delegates the sovereign power of the State in local matters, to the different counties or municipalities. That is what is the matter in our States. In every instance where a mob has acted it has been because the people themselves elect sheriffs and mayors, and maintain police departments who passively acquiesce in acts of lawlessness by the vicious and idle, by men claiming to represent the holy cause of union labor or other causes. By passive acquiescence and tolerance conditions have gone from bad to worse until they have wound up in bloodshed. I know the genesis, the development, and the end of mobs. There never was a time that I have seen a mob when a hundred resolute men, whose hearts were right, could not have stopped it in its inception if they had been on the ground under a leader determined to quell the rising disturbance.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator tell me how many people were murdered in the riots at East St. Louis?

Mr. SHERMAN. That never will be definitely known, Mr. President.

Mr. McCUMBER. Well, can the Senator give me a general idea?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir; I think 110 people lost their lives directly.

Mr. McCUMBER. And for the murder of 110 people some few persons have been imprisoned for as many as five years. Does the Senator point with pride toward that example of justice in the State of Illinois?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not; I have no pride in it; I am simply stating the facts. It is so much more than usual I am encouraged. I say, though, that that is a much better result than most riotous communities can point to, for usually they never punish anybody at all for anything.

Mr. McCUMBER. I might suggest to the Senator that I am not sure that there would have been meted out something nearer to justice if another mob had organized and hung all the murderers.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think so; I think they were richly deserving of the same outrages that they inflicted upon their victims. No one can read of the death of even this alien enemy, if I may call him that, without feeling that this intoxicated mob was guilty of a crime whatever he might have done.

In Prager's pocket was found a long "proclamation," in which he stated his loyalty to the United States and to union labor and told of his difficulty in entering the miners' union—

That is a matter of local history there—

Before the rope was placed about his neck Prager wrote the following note in German:

"CARL HENRY PRAGER,
"Dresden, Germany.

"DEAR PARENTS: I must on this the 4th day of April, 1918, die. Pray for me, my dear parents. This is my last letter and testament.

"Your dear son and brother,

"ROBERT PAUL PRAGER."

Here are some of the things that Prager did:

It was also discovered that he registered for the Army draft on June 5 last, and that in April, 1917, he caused the arrest of a man on a disloyalty charge. His friends assert that he was radical in his views on socialism, but when the United States entered the war he declared he was "All for America."

Concede that Prager was an alien enemy, however, and that punishment was due him, I submit that hanging him under the conditions disclosed was a deliberate, willful act of murder, and the men guilty of it themselves ought to be hung under the laws of Illinois.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator has very eloquently pointed out the fact that the mob that hung Prager was inflamed by strong drink, and that is usually so in the case of mobs—not always, but usually. While this is somewhat foreign to the discussion, I will ask the Senator why, when the President of the United States is so anxious for us to be loyal—and he is right about that—he has not exercised the power that Congress placed in his hands to forbid the use of grain in the manufacture of beer, and thus accomplish two valuable purposes—one, increasing the food supply, and the other, lessening the output of beer, which the men who are alleged to be disloyal are very much in the habit of using? Can the Senator give any reason why that is not done?

Mr. SHERMAN. I apprehend not, except that in States like Wisconsin, which contains the city of Milwaukee, the home of various brands of beer that have "made Milwaukee famous around the world," the brewers are men who must be considered in elections. [Laughter.]

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator will remember the fact that Congress was ready to put that inhibition in the statute, but an appeal was made that it had better be left in the hands of the President. That was done, and no action has been taken since the law was enacted.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir; that is the record.

Mr. GALLINGER. It has astonished me that, in view of the fact that we are asked to limit our food supply—and I notice in the newspapers to-day we are going to be asked to limit it still further for the purpose of feeding the allies—the President of the United States does not see that the food supply can be largely increased by saying to the brewers of this country that they can not have any more grain out of which to manufacture beer and thereby, in addition to conserving the food supply, lessening the use of an article which inflames the brain and leads directly to breaches of the law.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir; the Senator is correct about that; and I might just as well say what I want to on that subject now, because if this bill in the form that it is written becomes a law I will never be able to say it outside the Senate Chamber without being arrested.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was about to make that very suggestion, that I thought that I would take advantage of saying that before this bill becomes a law.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir; that is a very wise precaution to take, although the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD has a very limited circulation, particularly under recent printing orders; but still the suggestion will be in the RECORD. I suppose it will be excluded from the mails, for I am satisfied that the Postmaster General, if this bill should become a law, would believe that he had power to exclude from the mails any copies of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD containing any suggestions of this kind.

The power referred to by the Senator from New Hampshire was given. The President, I think it is reasonably certain, is a part of the form of Government of the United States, especially in war times; and if we asked these questions, it would be regarded as a criticism. I will say that if he had exercised the power vested in him to prohibit the brewing of beer from food grains, instead of Wisconsin voting for the election of Mr. LENROOT by 10,000 or 12,000 it would have voted for him by 35,000 or 40,000. The brewers would have resented it so they would have voted accordingly.

Milwaukee is the greatest "wet" city in the United States in that it is the source of supply of the malt liquor. Outside of St. Louis, where, I believe, the Anheuser-Busch is said to be the largest brewery in the world, the greatest malt-liquor brewing city is Milwaukee. It would not do to lose this vote. I do not want to talk politics; you can not get any political argument out of anybody on the question; you can get "wet" and "dry" arguments, but you can not get one on the political situation. However, what the Senator from New Hampshire suggests will not be done, and no proclamation will be issued stopping the brewing of malt liquor from food grains in this country until after the November, 1918, elections. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, 70,000,000 bushels of food grains were used in the brewing of beer in 1917 and about 40,000,000 bushels were used in the distilling of liquor before the prohibition of distilled liquors went into effect. The 70,000,000 bushels include barley, which is the main malting grain, rice, and corn. Practically 70,000,000 bushels of these food grains are used. Barley is a substitute for wheat flour, and a very healthful substitute. My recollection is—I am quoting now from memory, subject to correction—that about 45,000,000 bushels of barley were used in malting last year, and possibly more than that. Much of this is sent abroad. Some of the barley we ship abroad in order that England may use it in brewing beer in that country. I understand that habits are more liberal there, and that the use of beer is not looked upon as we look upon it here in many cases; but nevertheless the fact remains that some 70,000,000 bushels were used last year when it ought to have been saved for bread. Under this bill such a criticism could not be made on any platform. It would be regarded as interfering with the prosecution of the war, because the Commander in Chief has decided to use 70,000,000 bushels of breadstuffs in brewing malt liquor and it is nobody else's business, as he has the power to do so; and if a deputy marshal sat in the audience and I made the statement that the President was not conserving food supplies and was not exercising the power vested in him for the welfare of the United States, but, on the contrary, to its detriment, I would be subject to arrest under this bill, because the President is a department of the Government, he is the head and the Commander in Chief of the Army and the Navy, and so on.

I know what these marshals will do. I have seen them in operation. They are scattered around, hordes of them, all over the country, each of them anxious to distinguish himself. In Florida, in March, a man with a German name, from a Northern State, went down to Palm Beach. He thought that was a real hot country all the time, and so one morning he put on the usual Palm Beach suit and went out; but a norther had struck that section of the country, and he nearly froze to death before he got back. When he reached the boat landing he said with considerable disgust, "Damn such a country as this," and was arrested by a local deputy who stood there, under the espionage act, on the ground that his statement reflected upon the form of government of the United States, when he simply meant that the Florida climate was not what he supposed it to be. [Laughter.] He had to go to all the trouble and humiliation of furnishing bond and employing a lawyer. He had the misfortune to inherit a German name from his German parents, but he himself was as good a citizen as there is anywhere in this country. The same thing can be done by any deputy marshal in any kind of an audience.

James A. Petersen was arrested five days ago in Minneapolis, Minn. I do not know whether the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] knows him or not. I do not know anything about him. It was alleged that he was interfering with the enlistment or draft law. He was a candidate for United States Senator in the coming Republican primaries, and made some public address which was conceived to interfere with the enlistment of men, and therefore he was arrested for violating the draft law. What these same numerous gentry would do when a political campaign is on, if this bill becomes a part of the espionage law, nobody knows. I apprehend that it is designed to prevent full, fair discussion of governmental questions in the campaign, and will be so used.

The first thing that a campaigner must provide himself with—and some of them are Democrats as well as my associate Republicans here—is a liberal number of blank petitions for writs of habeas corpus when he starts out in a campaign. They all follow the usual formula. You will have to get a great number of them, make carbon copies, have your lawyer handy, take him with you, and be ready the instant you are arrested to go before some court and apply for a writ of habeas corpus to liberate yourself in order to keep your next date. Why, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] will have the same trouble; the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] will have the same trouble.

I have been called a copperhead three times by newspaper editors in Illinois because I did not vote for every kind of a measure written by departments and sent into this Chamber. I will not do it. The editors have never called me that to my face. I invite them severally to do so. There may be a breach of the peace and somebody will be the victor when the smoke of conflict rolls away, but it will be a little bit more exciting than writing on a pad with a lead pencil in the editorial sanctum by the time they get through with it. I invite them to repeat it in my presence when I go home.

I have no lost time to make up on patriotism, Mr. President. My earliest recollection is of my people coming home from the Civil War. I have no lost time; I have no ancestors that ever tried to destroy the Union, and I thank the Lord equally that all of us have forgotten the time that that happened, and are here together now as a united American people. But I take it very illy from those who criticize me and use those epithets that they themselves have never manifested any desire to save the country themselves until they suddenly wrap the mantle of patriotism around them and become patriots for pelf and office they now hold. My attachment to our country is not based on my ability to hold an appointive office. Some of the clamorous ones are Republicans. I do not care what office they hold or what ticket they vote; but some of those who are talking of their exceeding patriotism have but little to prove it. "Patriotic is as patriotic does," and I measure the lip service of patriots of that kind by the practical effects of their acts.

Here is an article published in the New York Times of yesterday, Sunday, April 7, 1918. I have no quarrel with the New York papers. I look on them just as I do on other papers. Sometimes they are right and sometimes they are wrong. If they have any reasons, I like to listen to them. If they have any abuse, I do not care to take it. I do not read it; life is too short. But here is an article headed: "Baker and his task," and a picture on one side of Edwin M. Stanton and on the other side of Newton D. Baker. I am not a phrenologist, and I do not have very much use for that alleged science, but if I were starting out to conquer the Kaiser and had to choose between those two men, I would not hesitate a moment. If they were both reincarnated on earth and I could choose between them for fighting heads, I would not hesitate a moment in the choice.

This article, which is by Albert Bushnell Hart, goes on to say a great many things. It asks some very pointed questions. It is, in effect, an attack upon our form of government as administered in time of war. It is not anything else. It could not be construed in any other way. If that article were published in the New York Times after this amendment becomes a law, some responsible head of that newspaper would be in durance vile by the time the newspaper was at the stands in the morning; and Albert Bushnell Hart himself would be called to answer a charge of attacking the form of government and lending aid and comfort to the enemy by such criticisms.

I referred to the article in the North American Review on the same official, in which George Harvey does practically the same thing. There will be an end of this.

Great Britain has lasted to this time because she encourages open discussion. Anything that is calculated to interfere with the prosecution of the war I think we ought to include. I have no objections to it, and I would be glad to vote for it; but I do not want, under the guise of such an amendment, to make it impossible for a discussion of public measures to be held in this country. In the heat of a campaign, when we have differences of opinion—not always of a partisan character, because they cross lines a good deal, and go from one party to the other, and sometimes the novice in the zeal of his conversion is the most offensive in his criticisms of anybody on the platform—when these things happen, then some of the provisions of this bill will be availed of. It is then that we will find that we have lost the freedom of the press and of speech.

Congress has no power to regulate freedom of speech, except so far as it interferes with the progress of the war or with some of the responsible agents in conducting the war. That is left to the States. The amendment, one of the first 10 amendments adopted, provides that Congress shall make no law establishing religion, or prohibiting the freedom of speech, or freedom of the press. That is an inhibition on Congress. It reserves that right to the States. It is the history of the first 10 amendments, as everyone knows, that they were adopted for the purpose of hedging in the power of the States and preserving them from destruction at the hands of a centralized government. They were Jefferson's amendments. They were the amendments of the earlier time, for the purpose of preserving the local powers reserved to the States against the encroachments of a strong centralized government.

Mr. President, in the present form of the bill I can not bring myself to support it. If some amendments were adopted, so that disloyalty can be punished, so that resident aliens may be made subject to any of the laws either of the State or of Congress with reference to the matters mentioned in this bill or its amendments, or extending their punishment to anything under the espionage bill, if you want to cover it by a blanket provision, I have no objection to that. I am for it. I think it ought to be done. But to go beyond that, and interfere with the freedom of speech and the freedom of the press, which I regard as essential to the preservation of our form of government, I think is going where we ought not to tread.

There are some further things, Mr. President, which I should like to say, but because of lack of time I do not think more ought to be taken here. I trust that amendments will be offered, along the lines that I have tried to suggest, that will make this a more tolerable bill in order that some of us may vote for it. I realize fully the invidious criticisms that are offered against one who opposes a bill of this character, and while I should very much like to be in accord with my critics, yet I would prefer the criticisms to surrendering my convictions in regard to the support of such a measure as this.

I ask permission to print at the end of my remarks, without reading, the article from the New York Times to which I have referred, and the letter from which I read, referring to the renting by the department of the Government of a house in this city.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the New York Times, Sunday, April 7, 1918.]

BAKER AND HIS TASK—HE HAS DONE MANY GOOD THINGS, SAYS HARVARD HISTORIAN, BUT DOES NOT DO HIMSELF JUSTICE AS SECRETARY OF WAR.

(By Albert Bushnell Hart.)

Could you give us your attention for a few minutes, Mr. Secretary of War? It's this way: We know that you are a tireless public servant, a laborious executive, a busy man, every moment of whose time is precious; but, then, we are busy, too, and on the same job. You will not refuse to give ear to what millions of your fellow servants of the public have in their minds and would say if they had the chance.

We bear testimony to your courtesy and good sense; we are good-tempered, too, and feel no personal hostility to a man who has given evidence of a desire to deserve well of the Republic. Only it's this way with us: We want to have certain things done; we believe they ought to be done; and they've got to be done! Yet you are not doing them.

First of all, we have a right to discuss what you are doing and not doing, because you are our hired man; you are appointed by the President for our benefit, to perform our service, subject to our eventual decision as to whether you have done the best that can be done. There can be no question of our right to inquire into your service, through Congress, through public meetings, and through the press. The United States of America, and all that in them is, belong to the people of the United States of America, and they have an absolute right at all times to know what goes on in the public service, barring the observance of secrecy with regard to military, naval, and, possibly, diplomatic affairs, so long as secrecy is for the public interest.

It's this way: The great constructive operations of the War Department, such as the drafting and assembling of troops, their fitting out, the manufacture of guns, of submarines, of airplanes, of rifles are matters that can not be kept secret, and, as a matter of fact, are probably known in more detail and accuracy to our enemies than to most people in the United States.

A meek individual in Massachusetts within a few days wrote to a Boston paper: "If the people do not know all the facts, and I agree that they do not, why should they? The people have intrusted the conduct of their war to their Government, and they must permit the Government to use its best judgment. The Government may have made mistakes, but it has made no mistake in withholding facts that might have depressed the people and made them dissatisfied. Any newspaper that criticizes the administration on that score is animated by destructive partisanship, or something worse."

It's this way with such stuff: Any attempt to treat those matters as sacred subjects, which must not be mentioned on the floor of Congress or alluded to in the public press, is an affront to the intelligence of the American people. Our countrymen are entirely competent to judge for themselves as to the working of their Government, and the effect on their minds of knowing instead of suspecting that some things are not going well. All they ask is to be furnished with accurate, complete statements of things that are known piecemeal to hundreds of thousands.

How do you, how does anybody suppose that the American people can be held up to their work in this war if rumors go floating about unchallenged that the airplane factories and the shipyards are filled with disorganized and therefore inefficient workers? It's this way: If that statement is true, we ought to know it, in order to help correct it; if it is untrue, you ought to give us the facts, so that we may rejoice.

In the next place, it does not satisfy us to be assured that you are honest and patriotic and doing your best. I am honest up to the filing of the last income-tax return; I am patriotic, or else I should not undertake the ungracious task of writing this article; I do my best in the sphere to which Providence has appointed me. But I do not claim the ability to carry on a department of war any more than to run a newspaper or a university. It's this way: The question at issue is not whether you are doing your best, but whether anybody in the United States could do better; for this is not a time to be satisfied with even the best work of a good man if it is not up to the needs of the country. In this crisis we need and are entitled to a Secretary of War that knows how to handle large numbers of men on a great variety of converging tasks.

You have lived a respectable and useful life for 46 years; but previous to your appointment your sole national service was as private secretary to the Postmaster General, and your responsible administrative experience was gained as city solicitor of Cleveland for nine years and mayor for four years. It might be said that being mayor of Cleveland is like learning the Russian language; when you have got that far anything else in the same line is easy. Nevertheless, where have you had opportunity to show the master mind of the administrator who appoints the tasks for a hundred other men and combines their activity into a harmonious effective whole? Grover Cleveland could do that; President Harper, of Chicago University, could do that; James J. Hill could do it; Edwin M. Stanton could do it; can you do it? If you can, why have you not done it? You are a man capable of rendering great service to your country in many administrative posts; you are not doing yourself justice at the head of the War Department. We might like you as a brother-in-law better than as a husband.

The proof of this statement is what you yourself say about your department and its work. As recently as January 3, before the Senate committee, you assured that committee, and through it the United States, that the airplane manufacture was going forward well and that airplanes were being shipped to France. On that point we may accept the testimony of Senator LODGE, of Massachusetts, in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 26, as a statesman of great experience, a member of important committees, with especial advantages for securing even unwilling information from the departments, and a reputation for saying nothing which he can not back up with proof. He is a better witness than you, because he plainly knows more about your department than you do.

And this is what he says: "The Secretary of War spoke a short time ago of our beginning to send fighting planes to France. He said the number was small, but we had begun to send them. We returned at that time the two French models which we had had here. Since then I believe one American plane has gone; it may be on the water now; it may have been landed—we have not a fighting plane in France. The front where our men are is not defended in the air. We have spent $840,000,000 for airplanes in the past year and we have not a fighting plane in France. The facts I have recited in regard to airplanes are known to Germany. It is time our people understood them."

Then there is the question of guns, which has been before your department ever since you assumed office March 9, 1916. This is what Senator LODGE says, and it is God's truth: "We have no guns in France except a few old coast guns which we sent out early, and for which the French are making carriages. We are using French guns. That is the hard fact."

Senator POINDEXTER, of Washington, who is not always in agreement with LODGE, summed the whole thing up in a sentence: "The substantial fundamental fact in the situation is that we have been engaged for a year in this war, which the Senator from Massachusetts says may ultimately result in a struggle for the independence of this Nation, and that we have NO airplanes. That is all there is about it."

Now, let us bring this issue to a head, so that there may be no mistakes. We who censure your administration of the War Department do not claim that you are responsible for making airplanes and big guns with your own hands, nor for the failure of the men directly in charge of the work to come up to the scratch. It's this way: You are the man who took the responsibility of the War Department and thereby bound yourself to the people to know what was going on in your department—particularly in the one branch of your service where speeding up seemed possible and where the result of the speeding up might turn the scale in Europe. You further made yourself responsible by roseate promises and prognostications. Therefore we hold you personally responsible for a failure to follow up your own orders; to know for yourself whether they were up to the expectations that you held out.

All these distinctions between light flying planes and heavy battle planes mean nothing to us. What we want is airplanes that will protect our soldiers and aid our allies on the front; and up to the 26th of March, nearly a full year after the outbreak of war, only two such airplanes had been constructed and shipped. Even on that point the Committee on Public Information permitted a trick of camouflage to be played. It would be unjust to hold Mr. Creel responsible for the sending out of pictures of airplanes with the statement that "hundreds have already been shipped. Our factories have already reached quantity production, and thousands upon thousands will follow." When it turned out that the pictures were photographs of training planes and not battle planes at all, and that the accompanying information was false and misleading, Mr. Creel was right in putting the responsibility on Mr. Rubel. Mr. Rubel pushed it further back on one Strunsky, who had volplaned the story for the newspapers out of the empyrean heights of his own misinformation. We should like to know whether Strunsky is still on the job.

Camouflage seems the order of the day. In the same newspaper you find Edward N. Hurley quoted in a speech before the National Marine League as saying that, "Of this total steel construction, 2,121,568 dead-weight tons, or approximately 28 per cent, has been completed: that is, the program for steel ships has advanced 28 per cent toward completion." Then he goes on to boast of the repair of the German and Austrian ships and the opening of shipyards with a "total of 298 steel building ways." He absolutely blinks the fact that "28 per cent completed" means only two brand-new ships launched; and apparently he includes in the percentage the completion of ships which had been laid down without any agency of the United States Government more than a year before our war with Germany broke out.

Fortunately you are not responsible for the shipbuilding; but you are responsible for the same gross fault as that of Mr. Hurley, namely, a disinclination to tell the country clearly just what you have done and what you have not done; an inability to secure coordination such as will enable you to bring to pass what you undertake.

You have done many good and remarkable things for which, so far, the country is duly grateful, such as the registry of eligibles, the draft, the rapid building of cantonments, the officers' training camps, the organization of the various special branches of service. We condole with you on the piteous suffering which a Secretary of War must have undergone in the knowledge that some artillery regiments drilled for months in camps without a single field gun with which to exercise or use for target practice.

It's this way: You came into the War Department under unfortunate circumstances. Secretary Garrison, by all accounts one of the best administrators in the country resigned his post as Secretary of War on February 10, 1916, because the military bill upon which Congress insisted and which the President did not feel like making an issue was, in his judgment, inadequate and not calculated for the defense of the country. The proof of his good judgment is that the vital parts of that act had to be changed before a real army could be raised. You came in because you were willing to work under that act.

Perhaps you are no more blamable than half a dozen of your predecessors for not shrieking into the ears of Congress the military deficiencies of the Army, except that you must have realized that the clouds of war were steadily darkening. What did you do, or urge, or insist on, or threaten to resign if it were not done, in the way of preparing the United States for a war which was always possible and steadily grew probable? How was it that you were so debonnaire when war was declared, knowing that the United States of America did not possess a single war airplane or modern heavy field gun, not one movable siege cannon such as brought about the fall of Belgium (possibly there were a few such in the arsenals, but that made little difference, because there were said to be only four flat cars capable of carrying one)? What evidence did you give your unusual ability as a Secretary of War? With what tried and trained general officers did you habitually take counsel?

The truth is, and everybody knows it, that the administration did not appear to realize that when war broke out it would be necessary to fight.

Perhaps Congress and the people could not have been brought to the point of making preparation in advance of actual war. We criticize ourselves as well as you for not being able to read the signs of the times. But it's just this way: We were not Secretaries of War, whose reason for being was a superior judgment and foresight. We are only humble constituents.

What has this lack of foresight before the war and hindsight during the war cost the people of the United States? Vast sums in money. Forty million dollars spent in airplanes might build 84,000 airplanes at $10,000 each—of course, part of that sum remains to be expended on the service. Henry Ford knows what he is talking about when he undertakes to build 500,000 automobiles, at $500 each retail; or when he declares that 00,000 tractors can be built in six months. The War Department has not known what it was talking about in its forecast as to the probable work of the contractors under Government pressure.

It's this way: What makes us hot under the collar is not that the work has been slow, but that you have been slow to find out that it has been slow.

Still our feelings are not poured out to the full. What are airplanes for, big guns and rifles, and soldiers to carry the rifles, and trucks to carry the soldiers, and ships to carry the trucks? All that is not a Palm Beach race against time, it is an effort to bring the physical forces of the Nation to bear against the Hun, against the national enemy, against a dreadful danger to democracy, against the ruin of civilization. We admit that you are a good sport, have the personal bearing of a gentleman, have shown excellent temper in trying circumstances—that does not satisfy.

It's this way with us: We want to win the war. We wanted our men to get to the war; and the one branch of the service in which a great advantage could be gained by a proper combination of food and steel and aluminum and cloth, with a comparatively small amount of man power, was in the airplanes. If we could have put 84,000 or 8,400 airplanes on the front, before the recent German drive, the Huns could not have made that awful bulge in the allied defense.

In the matter of airplanes you were not able to bring the desired result about.

James J. Hill could have brought it about.
Theodore Roosevelt would have brought it about.
Leonard Wood would have brought it about.
Lindley M. Garrison would have brought it about.

That's the way it looks to us. Good as you are, you are not up to the job.

Whose job? Our job. I wear every hour of the day a two-star service pin. It's my job that the lives of young men, which are the frankincense and myrrh of national patriotism, shall be given to the best purpose; that they shall be provided with the best equipment for offense and defense, with the best arms; that they shall be protected by the best big guns; that they shall have the advantage of the best airplane service obtainable. Furthermore, some of them are going to the aid of our distressed brethren overseas, in the most dangerous battle of the war, and apparently they must go without a single battle plane of ours to detect the enemy's approach and to join them in the fight for liberty.

My boys, everybody's boys, are entitled to the biggest, ablest, most farsighted, experienced, magnetic, powerful Secretary of War that can be found among 100,000,000 of Americans. It's this way, Mr. Baker: You do not measure up to that standard!

[EDITOR'S NOTE.—In reference to Prof. Hart's quotations from Senators LODGE and POINDEXTER, it should be stated that there have been unofficial denials of the airplane charges. It is asserted by administration supporters that the situation is not so bad as was pictured by the two Senators and that they spoke without full knowledge of the facts.]

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, April 4, 1918.

Miss S. L. KEYSER,
No. 29 B Street NW., Washington, D. C.

DEAR MADAM: Referring to your contract with this department, dated November 18, 1916, leasing to you premises No. 31 B Street NW. from month to month at a compensation of $5 per month, I have to state that the records of the department show that you have only paid rent for the premises up to and including March 18, 1918. I have therefore to advise you that, exercising the right reserved to the Government in the contract, you will be required to vacate said premises within seven days from the date of this notice, and any and all of your effects in the building should be removed by that time. From and after the expiration of said period the building in question has been leased to Mrs. Mary B. King at a rental of $30 per month.

Respectfully,
E. J. AYERS, Chief Clerk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Harding	Myers	Smith, S. C.
Beckham	Hardwick	Nelson	Smoot
Borah	Henderson	New	Sterling
Chamberlain	Hollis	Nugent	Stone
Colt	James	Overman	Sutherland
Culberson	Jones, N. Mex.	Owen	Swanson
Cummins	Jones, Wash.	Page	Thomas
Curtis	Kellogg	Phelan	Thompson
Dillingham	Kendrick	Poindexter	Tillman
Fall	King	Ransdell	Trammell
Fletcher	Kirby	Robinson	Vardaman
France	Lewis	Shafroth	Wadsworth
Gallinger	Lodge	Sheppard	Warren
Gerry	McCumber	Sherman	Weeks
Gore	McKellar	Smith, Ga.	Wolcott
Hale	McNary	Smith, Md.

Mr. ROBINSON. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] is detained on important official business.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I announce the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. GOFF] on account of illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. HENDERSON. I desire to announce the absence of the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] on account of official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-three Senators having answered to the roll call, there is a quorum present.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, the call of the roll having disclosed the presence of a quorum, and being very anxious to close this debate and dispose of this bill, I propose a unanimous-consent agreement, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the proposed unanimous-consent agreement.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that at not later than 5 o'clock p. m., on the calendar day of Tuesday, April 9, 1918, the Senate will proceed to vote, without further debate, upon any amendment that may be pending, any amendment that may be offered, and upon the bill H. R. 8753, a bill to amend section 3, title 1, of the act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with foreign relations," and so forth, through the regular parliamentary stages to its final disposition; and that after the hour of 2 o'clock p. m., on said calendar day, no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 10 minutes upon the bill, or more than once or longer than 5 minutes upon any amendment offered thereto.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the proposed unanimous-consent agreement?

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, do I understand that beginning at 1 o'clock to-morrow debate will be confined to 10 minutes?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that 2 o'clock is the hour named in the proposed agreement.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I expect to vote for this bill, although I wish to say some things about one or two of its provisions. What I wish to say about those particular provisions I do not regard as being of sufficient importance to delay the passage of the bill for a moment, but there are one or two amendments pending upon which I do desire to be heard, and I do not want to be confined to 10 minutes. What I will have to say upon those amendments will not perhaps occupy more than 30 minutes, or 40 at the utmost, but I do not desire to be shut off from saying what I have in mind to say with respect to them.

If the amendment, for example—to be perfectly frank—of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] should be offered now, I would be willing to take it up at once, as far as I am concerned, and dispose of it. I am willing to take up either of the amendments about which I feel particularly concerned and dispose of them this afternoon, but if the time should be otherwise occupied, and if we should adjourn until to-morrow, I appeal to my friend, the Senator from North Carolina, not to deny me an opportunity of saying what I should like to say with respect to them.

Every Senator here knows that I am not trying to obstruct the passage of the bill. I do not mean by this to say, Mr. President—for it would not be fair or true for me to say—that I approve of all the provisions of the bill, but I feel that at this time, and have felt all along, after reading it and going over it with such care as I could, that I not only would not seek in any way to obstruct its passage, but if the Senate desired to pass it I would even vote for it, although, as I say, there are provisions in it that do not appeal to me. But there are some amendments pending, Mr. President, that I should like to say something about before they are agreed to, and I do not wish to be confined to 5 or 10 minutes in expressing what I have to say about them.

Mr. OVERMAN. Do I understand that the Senator objects?

Mr. STONE. I hope the Senator will not put it in that way. If the Senator wishes me to object——

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I do not want to put the Senator or anyone else in the position of objecting, though we must close this debate at some time. I want to know if we can not get some agreement to vote on it within the next day or two. We have been on it for three days, and it ought to have been passed in one day.

Mr. STONE. I agree to that.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the Senator can suggest anything by which we can agree on a compromise, I shall be glad to have him do so.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, if it should go over to-day, so far as I am individually concerned, I feel quite sure that the particular amendments about which I desire to speak, one of which I have indicated with perfect frankness, and I will indicate the other—oh, well, no matter—I wish just time enough to express my views with respect to it; and if the bill goes over and they are offered to-morrow, as I should think they might naturally be, in the ordinary course, whatever the vote of the Senate may be will end the matter with me.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, while the Senator from North Carolina is considering a modification of the proposed agreement, I desire to say that I am as anxious as he can be to bring the bill to a conclusion; and I do not object to a vote to-morrow at 5 o'clock. I have had a desire to express some views which I hold about the measure, for I am in favor of it, with some modifications which are not vital to the principle involved in it. I have had no chance yet, however, to give my reasons for the belief which I hold; and I think that there ought to be made a part of this agreement the stipulation that at the close of to-day's proceedings the Senate will take a recess until to-morrow at 11 o'clock, giving opportunity between 11 and 2 for such further discussion of the bill as Senators may desire to indulge, but not postponing the final disposition of the bill beyond the time mentioned in the agreement.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am very glad to accept that; and that will give the Senator from Missouri time to make the speech he desires to make.

Mr. STONE. Why, Mr. President, of course, the Senator from North Carolina would accept that, very naturally; but we meet at 11 o'clock, and, according to the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa, we practically close the debate at 2. That would be more than agreeable to me if I got in on those three hours. But, Mr. President, the particular matters about which I wish to speak may be presented after 2 o'clock. Of course, I might speak of them in advance, if I could have the recognition of the Chair; but even as to that I must take my chance.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. STONE. I think, Mr. President, if my friend will indulge me, that it would be better to let the bill go over until to-morrow. I need hardly assure him that I have no wish to obstruct its passage. I have stated what I have about my attitude, but I do not wish to be shut out of presenting to my colleagues some views I have with respect not to the bill itself so much as to pending amendments, and I do not know when the opportunity will come to do that.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, is now half-past 3, and I will ask the Senate to sit until 6 o'clock, so that we will have six hours of debate.

Mr. STONE. Well, I am ready to go on.

Mr. OVERMAN. Suppose the Secretary reads the proposal as modified by the suggestions of the Senator from Iowa.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the modification.

Mr. CUMMINS. Does the Senator accept the suggestion I made?

Mr. OVERMAN. I do.

The SECRETARY. Add at the end of the proposed unanimous-consent agreement the following words:

And it is further agreed that at not later than 6 o'clock of this calendar day the Senate will take a recess until 11 o'clock on the calendar day of Tuesday, April 9.

Mr. STONE. Is that a proposal that we shall sit until 6 o'clock to-day and then take a recess until 11?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so interprets it—not later than 6 o'clock.

Mr. STONE. At not later than 6 o'clock, and then a recess is to be taken until 11 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Until 11 o'clock.

Mr. STONE. Then what?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then the Senate will proceed, as the Chair interprets the agreement, until 2 o'clock under general debate, at which time amendments will be considered.

Mr. STONE. And the 10-minute rule apply?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The 10-minute rule will apply to the bill and 5 minutes to amendments.

Mr. GALLINGER. And when is it provided that the vote shall be taken?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The vote shall be taken at 5 o'clock.

Mr. STONE. That puts up a pretty hard proposition to me. One Senator, sotto voce, suggested to me that one could say a great deal in that time. Yes; I could say a vast deal more than I have any idea of saying; but I want to speak to the amendment when it is before the Senate. I have something to say to the Senate about it that I think worth while. But whether that is so or not, we can go on until 6 o'clock and let the time be consumed in the consideration of other features of the bill or other amendments and take a recess until 11 o'clock, but I am brought at 1 o'clock or 2 o'clock to 10 minutes, and I am not willing to consent to that.

I wish to say, while I am unwilling, it is not because I want to make a speech. God knows, I can make a speech at any time upon the bill when I feel under the impulse, but I want to speak because I think I have something to say worth while to the Senate for the Senate to hear, and I do not want to be shut off from an opportunity of doing it.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not want to shut off anybody. Everyone knows that I have been very liberal about these matters. It seems to me that 6 hours' debate and 10 minutes upon the bill and 5 minutes upon an amendment for every Senator ought to be enough and will give every Senator an opportunity to speak.

Mr. STONE. I will consent to sit until 6, 7, 8 o'clock, if you wish—I have no objection to that—and to take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let the debate go on, then, until 6 or 7. It may be that we can get a unanimous-consent agreement then.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I introduced an amendment the other day, to which the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] has just referred. I desire to make a modification of it, so that it can be printed. It provided as I introduced it that—

The use of the mails shall not be permitted to any newspaper, magazine, or periodical, circular, or pamphlet which is printed in whole or in part in the German language.

I modify it by adding the words:

Unless the German text is accompanied by a translation into English printed beside said German text and in the same issue of such newspapers, magazines, periodicals, circulars, and pamphlets.

That agrees to the rule now adopted by the Post Office Department. I will give my reasons for the amendment when the time comes. I can not offer it at present, because we are now engaged in perfecting the amendment of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The modified amendment suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate but a minute. I am perfectly ready to take the sense of the Senate upon this very simple amendment that I have offered, but I think because a number of Senators were not present when I presented it I ought to take a moment to explain it.

The concluding paragraph of the bill reads:

And whoever shall advocate, favor, teach, defend, or suggest the doing of any of the acts or things in this section enumerated, and whoever shall by word or act support or favor the cause of the German Empire or its allies in the present war or by word or act oppose the cause of the United States therein, shall be punished—

And so forth.

The amendment I have offered suggests that in line 17 of the language I have just read the words "the cause of" shall be stricken out. If that amendment should be adopted, of course the same words in line 19 should then be stricken out, and I shall so move. So this proposition, as modified by my amendment, if it were adopted, would read as follows:

Whoever shall by word or act support or favor the German Empire or its allies in the present war, or by word or act oppose the cause of the United States therein, shall be punished—

And so forth.

Mr. President, I am aware that in the minds of a good many Senators who take an honest view of this matter, fully as honest as either I or anyone else takes, they do not happen to agree with those on this side of the Chamber and think there is not much difference in the two proposals. Yet I beg the Senate to remember that when we are enacting a statute that makes spoken words a serious crime, punishable by 20 years' imprisonment in penitentiaries of the United States, we can not be too careful in using language so simple, plain, and direct that it is capable of but one construction—language that is incapable of misconstruction and language about which there might not be two honest opinions.

It is a dangerous pathway at best to make spoken words so serious an offense, and I am aware of many localities where Senators who live in those localities view it that great provocation exists for embarking on this most dangerous course; but, I insist, if we are to depart from one of the fundamental principles of our jurisprudence we ought to guard the departure with all the care possible.

Of course, if the cause of the German Empire and the cause of Germany are words synonymous with "side" in saying the "side" of the German Empire and the "side" of the United States in this war, and can mean no more than that and nothing else, there would be no reason whatever for the Senate to adopt my language and to say plainly that we are trying to legislate against the people who favor the German Empire and its allies in this war and oppose the United States in this war.

But what is the cause of the German Government in this war? Under one construction of language, the construction suggested by the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER], it may be that the cause of the German Empire in this language means no more than the side of the German Empire in this war. If I were certain that the Senator only would construe the language and the Senate committee only that reported the language would construe it, I would not waste one second in advocating a change, because I am satisfied that is what they meant. But "the cause of" the German Empire in this war is qualifying language. The words "the cause of" qualify the rest of it. There are men who think that the real cause, using the word "cause" in the sense of being equivalent to purpose or object or motive, of the German Empire in this war is commercial. Other people insist that it is the territorial aggrandizement in Europe. Still other people insist that it is world dominion, and that that is the German cause.

When you come to the cause of the United States in this war there may be even more room for difference of opinion among people, whom I am bound to concede are equally honest. Some people say the cause of the United States in this war is the democratization of the world. Some people say that the cause of the United States in this war is to make the world safe for democracy. Other people, dissenting from that view, believe that the cause of this country is the assertion of our immemorial and undoubted rights to freedom of the seas, and we are at war with Germany simply owing to the fact that Germany fired upon our flag and murdered our people upon the high seas.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish to ask the Senator if he would not, in construing this law, give it rather a narrower meaning? Is it not the cause of the United States to-day to conquer her enemy? Is not that the sole cause to-day? Is it not the cause of the German Empire and her allies to defeat her enemies, including the United States? Could we not properly limit our construction to that view?

Mr. HARDWICK. I thought I had already answered that question, but the Senator probably did not hear what I said before. That may be true. Yet this language may be construed in a totally unnecessary way. If that is all the Senator means, we can use the same language that is found in the treason statutes, universally used, adhering to our enemies, giving aid and comfort and assistance to them. Why do you qualify it? Why use these words at all when we say people are helping Germany, are aiding Germany in this war? Why do we not say exactly what the Senator says it means?

Mr. McCUMBER. May I ask the Senator another question, and it will help us to understand the purpose of the amendment. Suppose we strike out the words "the cause of," so that it will read "and whoever shall by word or act support or favor the German Empire or its allies." Can the Senator explain to me how anyone by word or act could support the Empire of Germany without supporting its cause, or vice versa, and would he punish anyone for saying something in support of Germany unless it in reality was in support of her cause? Let me elucidate it. For instance, I might think that the military system of Germany was a splendid system, and everyone probably who would support a military system in the United States and would speak in favor of it would be speaking in favor of the German Empire, in favor certainly of some features of the action of that Empire. Yet that ought not to be a punishable offense.

It is barely possible with the very limited construction that some of us are giving to this language that some court might construe it to mean that. So, does not the Senator think that if he so limits the matter that it refers only to the German Empire he might be endangering the liberty of people who spoke in favor of some feature of the German Empire, even though they were bitterly opposed to the German cause?

Mr. HARDWICK. No; I do not think so, because the language as I would leave it would mean no more and no less. It is neither broader nor narrower than the Senator from Washington claims his language meant. It is neither broader nor narrower than the Senator from North Dakota contends is the real meaning and intent of the words now written in the amendment. But if you mean no more than that, if you mean no less than that, and that is favoring or adhering to the German side and opposing or injuring the American side in this war, why not say so in so many words? It is difficult to say if you would give the word "cause" its broadest significance exactly what the cause on either side of some of these powers is, in connection with this war. I mean by that, it is difficult to lay down a definition that even the responsible rulers of those Governments would agree about on either side of the battle line. If the cause is or can possibly be held to mean anything of that sort, in this connection, you can see the room for an infinite variety of constructions. It would lead to an infinite variety of constructions, and possibly to persecutions. I do not think we need do that.

What we mean is to say that people shall not side with Germany and her allies in this war. Let us say so and leave out these words, because a man can admire some things about Germany—her wonderful business methods, her chemical progress, and a great many other things about her—without siding with her or favoring her in this war. There can be no trouble about that, and there is no danger of the kind the Senator from North Dakota suggests. Otherwise, I would not vote for such a change myself under any circumstances. So it is when it comes to the next amendment that I shall suggest.

Mr. McCUMBER. Can the Senator give an instance by which a person by word or act could favor the German Empire for which we would impose a punishment unless it was favoring the cause of the German Empire in this war?

Mr. HARDWICK. That is not an easy thing to do, and yet I can suggest a point to the Senator's mind, or a discrimination between the two things. Suppose a man believed that the German cause in this war, primarily at least, was to conquer France or to gain certain territory in Europe, and that, independent of the entry of this country into it because our flag was fired on and our people murdered and the freedom of the seas denied us, he did not feel any great concern over that cause one way or the other. I can conceive that honest, patriotic Americans might feel somewhat that way. Of course, if the cause of Germany is world dominion, and if she is aiming at the conquest of this country and invasion of these shores, a very different situation would exist, and probably a very different feeling would exist on the subject of the war and what the cause of the war is. That may be more or less metaphysical and involved to the mind of Senators. But if the Senator means no more than that for a person taking the side of Germany in this war we make it a crime to adhere to our enemy and give comfort to our enemy, in the words of the treason statutes, then we might just say that without putting these words in at all. I do not see any need to invite possible misconstruction, to invite the possibility of honest difference of opinions on account of a broader significance in meaning being given to a word than we intended to employ when we enacted the statute.

It is the purpose of the amendment not to broaden it or to narrow it, but simply to clarify an expression that I believe, and to express exactly, the Senate has in mind, and only what the Senate has in mind, and to express it in a way that nobody can possibly be mistaken about it, and that there can be no room for reasonable and honest differences of opinion concerning it.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, when I first examined this amendment I was inclined to think it would be better to omit the word "cause," in lines 17 and 19. The more I have considered it, the more I have heard in debate, the more it seems to me that it is the best word to retain. The word "cause" as used here has no relation whatever to the causes or reasons. It means simply the side.

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the Senator yield to me for just a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. HARDWICK. If that is true, and it means only that, why would it not be all right to leave it out?

Mr. LODGE. I think it makes it broader and clearer. The dictionary says:

CAUSE.

* * * * * * *

7. That side of a question which an individual or party takes up; that object to which the efforts of a person or party are directed.

They never fail who die in a great cause. (Byron, Marino Faliero, ii. 2.)

* * * * * * *

To make common cause with, to join with for the attainment of some object; side with strongly; aid and support.

I think that meaning is very desirable: Anyone who aids or supports or sides with, or joins with. I think that is all the word "cause" undoubtedly means in this connection. I do not think it could mean anything else. It is used as representing the side of Germany and the side of the United States. I think it would have been perhaps wiser to have left out the word "allies," as we have the confusion of being at war with one of Germany's allies and not with the other two. To say "the cause of Germany," would cover all those who are fighting with her just as much as putting in the word "allies." But that is an insignificant point. It seems to me, however, that the word "cause," as used in this connection, is correct language.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I only desire to say a word in answer to the reasons given by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] for his amendment. The Senator from Georgia is a distinguished lawyer and knows that the word "cause" is in common use as indicating not merely the side of an adversary in litigation but as meaning the case of an adversary. It means the movement which the adversary is making in the courts, whatever it may be, against the opposite party.

Mr. HARDWICK. And the cause behind it. Now, if the Senator will allow me——

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; I differ with the Senator in his last statement.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator said "the case." That is the trouble I have in my mind. The case of the United States—what its purpose and object may be in entering this war—may be different with loyal people who honestly disagree about it, and one side is just as right as the other.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think I understand the Senator's position. I almost feel ashamed of myself for arguing about such niceties of definition of words here when the general popular conception of these words is so well defined. I do not think the American people are going to have very much patience with us for what might be termed quibbling about the meaning of words in a statute which everybody understands.

The cause of an adversary does not mean the causes which are back of the case. It does not mean that at all. A man might be utterly out of sympathy and opposed to the motives of a party—he might be opposed to the original causes which led up to the war, whether it is a war of litigation in court or war with the implements of battle between two great nations—and yet he might favor the cause of that party.

What the Senator said a moment ago I think throws a great deal of light upon his amendment, and furnishes the best argument why it should not be adopted. As I understood him—I do not want to misquote him—he said that if the cause of Germany was to conquer France, he could conceive of patriotic American citizens supporting that cause.

Mr. HARDWICK. Oh, no.

Mr. POINDEXTER. What was it the Senator said in that regard?

Mr. HARDWICK. Patriotic American citizens who might think, and probably did think, before the United States Government became involved that it was no immediate concern of the United States.

Mr. POINDEXTER. But the Senator knows that this bill does not relate in any way whatever to what happened before the United States became involved. What he is talking about is this war. That is what he ought to be talking about.

Mr. HARDWICK. I beg the Senator's pardon. The Senator ought not to say what I ought to talk about. I state what I am talking about, and the Senator is not in a position to sit in judgment upon his fellows. The Senator from Georgia thinks the Senator from Washington should not undertake to do that.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not agree with the Senator on that proposition. I think when we are debating here, as long as we observe courtesy between each other, it is our business to sit in judgment upon each other. That is what a debate is, and I am giving my opinion as to what is proper in a parliamentary way to be argued in relation to this bill. I am of the opinion that the question of how such a law as this might affect what people said or did before the United States went into the war is irrelevant, and that it is not proper to be argued here, because it has nothing to do with the bill.

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the Senator pardon me just one moment?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HARDWICK. That is exactly what the Senator from Georgia believes. The Senate ought to make it plain beyond all peradventure. Take a man who felt in the beginning that it was a war for territorial acquisition and was no concern of the United States until we became involved; you do not want, by any possible construction of language, to brand him as failing in proper loyalty to this country after this country declared war; and here I suggest that we make the Senator's amendment mean what it is intended to mean, and that we do not go back to that and embarrass such a person about it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. We would not want to go back so as to punish any word or act that was committed or uttered before we got into the war, but according to what the Senator himself said a moment ago, it is rather a metaphysical distinction which he makes. I understand his argument to be that a man could not be expected readily to give up his views about the origin and merit of Germany's attitude in the war which he entertained before the United States got into the war. If he is to make that argument relevant to this bill at all, it would have to be followed up with this, that we ought not to punish a word or act in support of those views now, even after we have gotten into the war. I say it would be necessary to follow it up with that, because that is the only thing this bill purports to do, and the Senator says the bill ought not to be passed as now framed. I believe the Senator knows it is clear—the Senator knows perfectly well, and he will not advocate anywhere, here or elsewhere, the doctrine that this bill is going to have any retroactive effect—to punish any word or act that was said or committed before it goes into effect.

Mr. HARDWICK. Let me say a word there.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will yield the floor in just a moment, if the Senator from Georgia will pardon me.

Mr. HARDWICK. Allow me right at that point, and then I shall not bother the Senator any more. I am always willing to yield to the Senator from Washington, or any other Senator, when I have the floor.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator, if he insists upon it.

Mr. HARDWICK. What I had in mind was this: Suppose a citizen of the United States who is loyal to the core, and willing to shed his blood, if need be, for this country, were to express this opinion—I am going to put it plainly, for in the beginning I did not think this war was any business of the United States——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I understood that was the Senator's attitude.

Mr. HARDWICK. I merely want to make it perfectly plain that in the beginning I did not think this war was any business of the United States.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I thought it was our business.

Mr. HARDWICK. I know that; but soon after it began the President of the United States by proclamation told us he did not, and I reckon he is loyal; nobody will question that; and a great many people did not think it was any business of the United States—millions of people; it looks like a majority of them thought so, from the last election returns.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Is the Senator still of that opinion?

Mr. HARDWICK. Whether they have changed their minds on that or not, I do not know.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask is the Senator still of the opinion which he entertained upon the subject?

Mr. HARDWICK. I said millions of people entertained that view.

Mr. POINDEXTER. You said——

Mr. HARDWICK. Of course, there is no concealment of the fact that the Senator from Georgia always thought that the United States ought to maintain its neutrality, and keep out of this war, if possible.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Does the Senator from Georgia think that now?

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not think so, for I would not have supported the war resolution if I had, and I voted for the war resolution.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Will the Senator be good enough, for the purposes of the argument, to state whether he still entertains the opinion which he says he previously entertained?

Mr. HARDWICK. What is that? I do not understand the Senator.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That he thought we ought not to have entered into this war when we did?

Mr. HARDWICK. Well, I will answer the Senator. I say I did not think we ought to have entered into this war, and, in my judgment, we would not have done so if Germany had not denied us the freedom of the seas and fired upon our flag——

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator begins to qualify.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator from Georgia never qualifies and he never dodges.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I say that the Senator did qualify his statement, because he said a moment ago that he thought we ought not to have entered into the war. Now he attaches the qualification that we ought not to have entered into the war unless Germany had denied us the freedom of the seas.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator from Washington shall not put sentiments into my heart that do not exist or words into my mouth which I have not used.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will yield to the Senator from Georgia in just a moment, if he will allow me to comment upon what he has just stated.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator is going to misunderstand me, I would rather not interrupt.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I had rather the Senator would not interrupt me until I have finished the sentence. I am perfectly willing, however, to yield to the Senator.

Mr. HARDWICK. But, if the Senator please, the trouble is—and then I will not interrupt him further—the Senator insists upon putting me in a position I do not occupy and in imputing sentiments to me that I do not entertain. I think—because I have long liked the Senator—that it is because he misunderstands the situation, and that is the only reason I interrupt him; that is the only reason I trespass on his courtesy. I was sure he was doing it——

Mr. POINDEXTER. Doing what?

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not think he was intentially misunderstanding the Senator from Georgia. Now, does the Senator want me to make it plain or would he rather leave it as it is?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am going to take my seat in just a moment.

Mr. HARDWICK. Well, it does not matter much.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the Senator from Georgia wants to make a speech, I should prefer that he wait until I get through; but if he will answer my question I would prefer that he should answer it now.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator from Georgia is not accustomed to being asked to give categorical answers, as if he were on the witness stand—questions that are phrased by a Senator who evidently is not anxious to do him justice in the matter.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I only stated my understanding of what the Senator said. Of course, the Senate reporters will be the best witnesses as to that.

Mr. HARDWICK. Oh, yes.

Mr. POINDEXTER. And the Senator himself, I suppose, so long as he is a public man, in the Senate and out of the Senate, on a question of the importance of this is going to take some position; and, of course, the position which he takes he will determine for himself, and it is a matter about which there can not be very long any misapprehension or misunderstanding.

Mr. HARDWICK. Not at all.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator from Georgia either was in favor of and supported, to use the language of the bill, the entry of the United States into the war or he was not.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator from Georgia has a public record on that question, as much so as the Senator from Washington. There is no room for misconstruction or doubt about that.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes. The Senator from Georgia stated that men who entertained, we will say opposite views to his, who thought that Germany was right——

Mr. HARDWICK. No, no.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That Germany had a good cause——

Mr. HARDWICK. No.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Ought to be allowed now to continue by word and act to express those views which they entertained before we entered into the war.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator from Georgia did not say that and never thought it. If the Senator from Washington got that impression, the Senator from Georgia has been very unhappy in his method of expressing himself. What the Senator from Georgia did say was that there were many people in this country who believed that this country ought to have kept out of this war, if it possibly could be done, and who believed—in the beginning they believed, at least, and whether any of them have changed their minds since I do not know—that this was an European quarrel from which the concerns of the United State were far remote; but many of those men when this Government declared war abandoned whatever predilections whatever—well, I will use a different word—whatever aversion they had to entering this war, because the country went into it and they went with it, and that many of those men did not doubt but that the cause of this country was just in so far as it was based upon the fact that Germany insulted our flag, fired upon our flag, and sunk our ships; but that many of these men—the Senator from Georgia and the President of the United States, so far as I may judge from his public utterances, included—had thought so in the beginning——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am perfectly aware of the harmony between the Senator from Georgia and the President of the United States.

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes; of course the Senator is—had thought prior to the firing upon our flag by Germany, and prior to the trouble about the freedom of the seas, that the best policy of this country was to keep out of this war; and therefore at that time, at least, did not entertain any such opinion as that this was a war to make the world safe for democracy or to democratize the world, or anything like that.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Well, now we are willing to forego all of that for the time being, and confine this act to conditions which existed not only after we had got into the war but after we pass this bill. We shall agree here, if the Senator from Georgia has any doubt upon the subject, to put into the bill an express declaration to that effect; so that if the Senator is in favor of punishing those who continue to do what he said that he and others did before we got into the war, he can have no objection to the passage of this bill.

My opinion is that, so long as we are involved in the war and committed to it beyond withdrawal, we should provide a penalty against those who fight against us whether with their mouths or by their acts, while at the same time they owe us their allegiance and are drawing their support and their livelihood from the opportunities which this Government gives them. It is a matter of public policy.

Now, to conclude what I was going to say and to get back to the particular objection which the Senator from Georgia has to the words of this amendment, supplemented by what he has just said, that there may have been those who, we will say, before Germany interfered with our rights upon the seas—although my impression is that the Senator from Georgia was among those who were opposed to our taking steps for arming our merchant vessels to repel interference with our rights upon the seas——

Mr. HARDWICK. If my friend from Washingon will excuse me, as usual my friend from Washington is in error. The Senator from Georgia supported that joint resolution.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Well, was the Senator from Georgia in favor of the draft act?

Mr. HARDWICK. He never was. I plead not guilty.

Mr. POINDEXTER. My impression is, from the general conduct of the Senator from Georgia—and it was not removed at all by what he has just now said—that he has not particularly supported or favored the cause of the United States in this war.

Mr. HARDWICK. For that opinion the Senator from Georgia is profoundly grateful to his friend from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Now, I propose by this bill, if the Senator from Georgia persists in that opinion and speaks it and acts it before the country, to punish him by the penalties which are provided in the bill.

Mr. HARDWICK. As usual, the Senator is courteous and fair.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not think there is anything discourteous about that. The RECORD will show whether I am discourteous or not. I hope the RECORD will contain just what language we use. I disclaim any desire to be discourteous, and am not conscious of having been discourteous at all. I am speaking in a matter of fact way about the Senator from Georgia, because he is immediately involved in the debate, and because there is no difference between the Senator from Georgia or myself and any other citizen of the country as to our private acts when we conduct ourselves about our daily vocations; and it is the very thing which the Senator from Georgia has stated that he believes in that this act is aimed at. If any man believes that the purpose of Germany is not to conquer the world—I think that the purpose of Germany is, if she can, to put her dominion and power over the world—but only to conquer France, and if he goes before the country and says that Germany does not propose to conquer the world, that Germany's purpose is to conquer France, that Germany is right in attempting to conquer France and to impose her will upon France, that that is her purpose in this war, and she is right about that—I say that the penalties that are provided by this bill to punish him for that declaration, while his country is the opposite party in that war, are mild in comparison with the offense which he commits against his people.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia is not used to cutting corners or dodging issues; at the same time it is not a matter of very great gratification to the Senator from Georgia to find that even recklessly—and I should hate to think that it had been done purposely—he had been misunderstood by one of his colleagues on either side of this Chamber. The Senator from Georgia never said, and never thought of saying, that he had ever himself for one moment entertained any sympathy for Germany in her quarrel with France. The very reverse of that is true. The Senator from Georgia comes of a line of English ancestry as long and as honorable as that of the Senator from Washington or any other Member of this Chamber. He has no sympathy with Germany, and never had any, and he is not to be put in any such attitude by any ill-advised, inconsiderate words of any Senator.

What the Senator from Georgia did say and what he has always said, and what he is prepared to maintain anywhere is this: That there are millions of people in this country, unnumbered and untold millions—it looks to me like a majority of them all from the returns of the last election—who believe that this quarrel in Europe, this war in Europe, was not primarily our concern, and who would have been glad if we could have honorably kept out of it forever. If that is not true, this entire country, the Senator from Washington and all others, have been slackers and laggards since Belgium's neutrality was first violated, and certainly and even in a more noticeable degree since the Lusitania was sunk. I know there are honest men—for whose opinions I have respect—who think that this country ought to have been put into that war from the beginning; but that was not the policy of the Government and it was not the sentiment of the people of the country.

What I did say and what I did mean was simply this and no more: That those of us who still insist that this country is fighting this war because her flag was fired on and because her citizens were murdered and because she was ordered off the high seas, and for no other reason, are just as loyal to this country, love her just as much, would give and have given just as much for it, and would sacrifice and have sacrificed just as much for it as the Senator from Washington or any other lip hero of whom I know.

Now, the country is at war; I voted to put her there. The country tried to have, and a majority of its representatives tried to enact, the armed-neutrality legislation, and, in spite of the inaccurate memory of my friend from Washington, I tried to help pass it. I did so for many reasons: First, because I thought the commerce of the country was entitled to that protection and the sovereign rights of this Nation were entitled to that vindication. I had no doubt, as it subsequently so developed, that the President of the United States had every substantial power as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States to arm the vessels of this country, to protect them against foreign aggression, as he subsequently did; but I felt then, as I feel now, that it was the last chance to serve a solemn warning, a solemn notice upon Germany and to Germany that this country meant to go to war if her rights on the high seas were violated.

But, Mr. President, those men would do this country a disservice, in my humble judgment, who insist on drawing those lines now. More than half of the country thought that the country ought to be kept out of war if possible; more than half of the country thought that the European war was not our immediate concern, and that we ought not to get into it if we could honorably keep out of it; but when we could not keep out of it, and when we did not keep out of it, and when we did get into it, all that was ended.

I simply do not like to have language employed in a statute—and it is still less pleasant to have it employed in speech on the floor of the Senate—that indicates that people who entertain those sentiments, in the opinion of any thoughtful American, are not just as good and loyal Americans as anybody on this earth. Nor do I like to have it indicated, as was indicated by the Senator, that because, forsooth, a Senator or a Member of the other House did not support some particular plan or method of waging or conducting the war, no matter by whom that method was suggested, and no matter how great the majority by which it was adopted, that is a reason for assailing a Senator or a Representative. The Senator from Georgia was called upon in the performance of his constitutional duty to vote on the question of how to raise an army, and he voted his own judgment and his own conscience about that matter, and for that vote he has no apology to offer to the Senator from Washington or to anybody else on this earth.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, if I am correctly informed, while the Senator turned away from this direction while he was speaking a moment ago so that, because of the acoustic properties of the Chamber, it was impossible for me to hear the words that he uttered, he made an insulting intimation and used insolent and opprobrious epithets directed to me.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator states that——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I decline to yield to the Senator. I claim the floor of the Senate.

Mr. HARDWICK. Well, the Senator, then, can not use language of that sort, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington declines to yield.

Mr. HARDWICK. I rise to a question of order. The Senator can not use language of that sort about the Senator from Georgia. If the Senator wants to use language of that sort about the Senator from Georgia this is not the proper place.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Who has the floor, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington has the floor.

Mr. HARDWICK. I am raising the question of order, let me say, that the language of the Senator is improper.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

Mr. HARDWICK. And I will say, then, that I did not intend to insult the Senator.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I decline to yield to the Senator. I do not propose to be taken off my feet, unless I am taken off by the Chair upon a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator from Georgia raises a question of order.

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes; the Senator from Georgia raises a question of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator characterized the language used by the Senator from Georgia as improper and insulting, and a few other things like that—I did not catch all the adjectives. I think that his language does not become a Senator to utter nor the Senate to hear, and it violates the rules in regard to the conduct of debate.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I submit it to the Chair.

Mr. HARDWICK. I refer the Chair to Rule XIX.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair——

Mr. HARDWICK. I will say——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I decline to yield.

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not ask the Senator to yield.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator is asking me to yield.

Mr. HARDWICK. I addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that in the opinion of the Chair the remarks of the Senator from Washington were not a violation of the rules of the Senate.

Mr. HARDWICK. Then, I, of course, yield to the Senator who has the floor.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, my purpose in rising was simply to call attention to what the Senator from Georgia has said in order that the manner in which the Senator from Georgia conducts a debate—and I have noticed it on several occasions heretofore—may be characterized by his own demonstration. The Senator from Georgia said a moment ago, in connection with his proposed amendment to this bill, that his purpose was to strengthen the measure; that he had no desire to weaken it. In view of the fact that the Senator from Georgia has departed from the accustomed proprieties of parliamentary language, I feel like saying that I am impelled to believe, from the entire record of the Senator from Georgia with regard to this war and his general discussion of this measure, that it is not the Senator's sincere desire to strengthen the hands of the Government by furnishing the aid provided by this bill. I think the Senator is opposed to the purposes of the bill, and that that is the reason of his amendment. I draw that conclusion from the Senator's own language and submit it to the country upon what the Senator himself has said.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia.

Mr. HARDWICK. I am absolutely terrified at the gallant Senator's assault. The Senator from Washington has been guilty of conduct on this floor that he ought to regret to his dying day, and he has been guilty of statements on this floor that were untrue, and he knows it. [A pause.] I yield to the Senator.

Mr. POINDEXTER. What does the Senator mean by saying that he yields to me? I did not request the Senator to yield.

Mr. HARDWICK. I thought the Senator——

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator knew perfectly well that I did not ask him to yield. The Senator has renewed his offensive remarks——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will say——

Mr. POINDEXTER. By the use of another word, and I call the Senator to order. It is easy for me to express my opinion here of the Senator from Georgia, but it would be a violation of parliamentary law.

Mr. HARDWICK. I will waive parliamentary law and everything——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair desires to explain both to the Senator from Georgia and the Senator from Washington that the proceedings in the Senate now trench on a violation of the rules governing the conduct of its proceedings.

Mr. HARDWICK. Very well, Mr. President, I will confine myself to the parliamentary rules.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like to ask if the characterization by the Senator of a statement which I made a few moments ago as being untrue is within the rules of the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair knows of no point of order being made at the time the language was uttered by the Senator, and the Chair feels that he is not authorized to make an ex post facto ruling. The Chair suggests, therefore, that the Senators proceed in order.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, because the Senator from Georgia expressed an honest doubt about the possibility of the misconstruction of some of the provisions of this proposed statute he has to have his motives judged, and foully misjudged, by the Senator from Washington and keep silent. He is not likely to do either; he is not likely to submit to any misjudgment about this matter, nor is he likely to keep silent. It is a very common thing nowadays for a good many men in this country to undertake to wrap the flag around themselves to hide their own shortcomings and their own mistakes. I object to that, because I have too much love and too much respect for the flag to see it so employed.

We are operating here under a written Constitution; it is not suspended by war; we are operating here under a written Constitution one of the first and most fundamental guarantees of which is the right of freedom of speech, and because the Senator from Georgia insists that whatever measures are necessary to meet the times, they shall be so framed as to conform as nearly as possible to the Constitution of the United States he, forsooth, is to be indicted and arraigned by such men as the Senator from Washington. God save the mark. Simply because the Senator from Georgia ventured upon the humble and lowly observation that there were many men in this country, including the President of the United States and himself, who had not felt from the beginning that this was a war to democratize the world, he has incurred the wrath of the distinguished Senator from Washington and has had the Senator from Washington, speaking out of the plenitude of his wisdom and the breadth and depth of his exuberant and vocal patriotism, challenge and asperse his motives.

At this point Mr. GORE, from his seat, addressed remarks to the Senator from Georgia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair suggests to the Senator from Oklahoma that if he desires to interrupt the speaker he should address the Chair.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I have no desire to interrupt.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma, then, will reserve his remarks.

Mr. GORE. I have not transgressed any rule of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma is out of order.

Mr. GORE. I do not care to be reproved by the Chair when I am not disobeying the rules of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma will observe order.

Mr. GORE. Indeed he will.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I should like to act as peacemaker if I can; but the unwarranted and unjustifiable comments of a man whom I had hitherto thought was my friend has somewhat provoked me and irritated me a little myself.

Now, this is the issue. If people can be bulldozed and browbeaten in this country because they venture to differ with other people about what are the best laws to be enacted for this country, about what plans and methods are to be pursued, even for prosecuting this war, then is the Senator from Georgia, forsooth, to be indicted by the distinguished Senator from Washington because he ventures to vote against that Senator on the question of what was the best way for this country to raise an army? Such is the illuminating issue which is presented to the Senate, to say nothing of the question of manners involved.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Georgia to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, on page 2, line 16, after the word "enlistment" and before the word "service," I move to insert the words "in the military or naval service of the United States," so that it will read:

Attempt to obstruct or discourage recruiting or enlistment in the military or naval service of the United States.

It is merely to make a little more clear the meaning of the section.

I will ask the Senator from North Carolina if he will not accept that amendment?

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not think there is any objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Utah to the fact that his amendment is not in order at this time, the pending amendment being the committee amendment.

Mr. KING. Oh, I beg pardon. I thought the committee amendments had been disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, in accordance with the suggestion which I made the other day, I move to amend the committee amendment by striking out the word "calculated," in line 24, page 2, and inserting the word "intended," so that it will read:

Or any language intended to bring the form of government of the United States * * * into contempt—

And so forth.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 24, in the committee amendment, it is proposed to strike out the word "calculated" and to insert in lieu thereof the word "intended."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. I simply wish to suggest to the Senator from Idaho whether it would not be better to leave in the word "calculated" and insert the word "and," so as to read: "Any language calculated and intended"?

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, with regard to the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho, I hope it will not prevail. When the amendment was first suggested I was somewhat impressed with it and thought it a proper amendment; but I do not believe any good purpose will be served by putting this statute in a form where it will be insisted that no intent has been shown to commit the offense described in the statute.

We have already adopted an amendment here, offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], by which the word "willfully" has been inserted, and all the acts herein enumerated as constituting offenses must be willful in order to come within the purview of the statute. To that amendment I did not object, but it will be insisted, of course, if the word "intended" is used, that circumstances showing guilty knowledge or intent must be proven in each individual case.

Mr. President, the word "calculated" here must mean language the reasonable or probable effect of which will be to bring into disrepute the form of government or the Constitution of the United States. I believe it is a case wherein a man ought to be held to have intended the reasonable or probable consequences of his act or of his language.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question right there?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota, yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. I want to ask the Senator if the word "intended" will not necessarily include that which is calculated? Any person charged with an offense where intention is of the gist of the offense will be presumed in law to intend the natural consequences, or, in other words, the results which will be calculated to flow from his words or his actions.

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. McCUMBER. Therefore, if he is accused of saying or doing something with intent to produce a certain result, is it not absolutely true that it must be calculated to produce that result in order to establish the intention?

Mr. STERLING. No. It makes no difference, or should not, and does not in many instances of penal statutes make any difference, as to what is in the mind of the doer or the actor charged with an offense. There is the great class of crimes commonly called mala prohibita, where the statute simply makes it an offense to do the act, and the intention with which the act is done is immaterial. The use of the word "intended" may embrace what is meant by the word "calculated" here; but it embraces too much, I think, in addition to what the word "calculated" ordinarily means.

Mr. McCUMBER. May I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. If a person were charged with uttering words or doing an act intended to produce a certain result, could he defend himself upon the ground that he did not so intend if the natural consequence of his words or its results would produce that result?

Mr. STERLING. It would at least give him a good pretext for so contending that he did not intend.

Mr. McCUMBER. But the court would not listen to that.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. The making or conveying of false reports or false statements which interfere with the operation or success of the military or naval forces of the United States is a far more serious offense than that included in this amendment, and yet the bill, which has not been changed by the committee in that respect, says "with intent to interfere." Again, in the case of statements interfering with the sale of the bonds, it is necessary to show intent to obstruct the sale, and in this very amendment, on line 13, page 3, in case of language used to advocate or to incite curtailment of production, it is necessary to show intent by such curtailment to cripple or hinder the United States in the prosecution of the war. We use the word "intent" in three places and the word "calculated" in two places.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, in regard to the last instance, to which the Senator from Massachusetts calls attention, it is very reasonable and proper that the word "intent" should be used there, because it is used in connection with the curtailment of production, and a man might advise curtailment of the production of certain lines of foodstuffs, for example, and not intend any curtailment whatever that would hinder the Government in the prosecution of this war, and the word "intent" is put in there as a proper safeguard.

Mr. LODGE. How about intent in interfering with the operation or success of the military or naval forces or intent to obstruct the sale of United States bonds?

Mr. STERLING. I think the situation there is a little different. In either of these cases the situation is different. A man may advise that the purchase of other bonds than Government bonds is better—better for the purchaser, better for his client, better for his ward, for example, if he be a guardian—and he does not intend thereby to obstruct, although he may be accused of obstructing, the sale of United States bonds.

Mr. LODGE. The Senate amendment takes care of those cases specifically.

Mr. STERLING. The instances cited in the committee amendment, however, differ in purpose from the amendment to which the Senator from Massachusetts has called attention. They are cases where the commission of an act calculated to bring about these results ought to be punishable without a regard to intent on the part of the doer of the act, especially since, according to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado, we have incorporated in the act the word "willfully" and have provided that the act must be willfully done. I would rather say "language the probable effect of which will be" than to use the word "calculated." I think it would be the better and the more apt expression and the more easily understood.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the pending bill and ask that it may be printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be received and printed and lie on the table.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I had intended to make some observations, but I will let the matter come to a vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Idaho to the amendment of the committee. [Putting the question.] By the sound the noes seem to have it.

Mr. BORAH. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I should like to have the amendment stated. I have just entered the Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], in the committee amendment, on page 2, line 24, to strike out the word "calculated" and to insert in lieu thereof the word "intended."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Idaho to the amendment of the committee. On that question the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I think that if it is required by the express provisions of the act to prove an intent hostile to the United States on the part of the man who says or does the acts that are prohibited it will never be possible to enforce the act. I am of the opinion that it would be utterly useless to enact a law if it were required to prove a man's intent. It ought not to be necessary to prove the intent any more than it would be necessary to prove whether or not a man who had the smallpox and was quarantined, if he violated the quarantine regulations and went out into communities spreading the germs of the disease, intended to injure his country. If he does the act, it itself is a crime, whatever his intent may be.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I want to call attention to one thing, and ask the careful, thoughtful attention of the Senators to it.

The word "calculated" qualifies the language which one is prohibited from using. The provision of the bill reads, "language calculated to bring the form of government, * * * the Constitution of the United States," and so forth, into disrepute, There, "calculated" qualifies the language uttered by an offender; but the word "intended" would apply to the individual, the man uttering the language, what is in his heart, and it would put an entirely different phase upon the matter.

The clause as it reads now is that anyone who uses language "calculated" to do these things shall be punished, the word "calculated" describing and qualifying the language. Now, if you say that anyone shall be punished who uses language "intended" to bring the Constitution or form of government of the United States into disrepute, the word "intended" refers to something in the heart of the man who uses the language, and I believe its substitution would practically nullify that part of the bill, and render it futile and unenforceable. How would you prove what the man intended, in addition to using the language?

I think the use of language calculated to have the effect described ought to render a man guilty, because if a man has any sense at all he knows the probable effect of his language, and ought to be held to know it; but if you have to prove what is in the man's heart; if you have to prove that he used certain language and then in addition prove that he did it with intent to bring the Constitution or our form of government into disrepute, it will be impossible of proof. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] would divert the qualifying adjective from the language used by the offender to the heart of the man himself, and that is something that it is impossible to prove. Nobody but the one who utters language and the Almighty can know with what intent it was uttered. Let us not make this provision of the bill unenforceable. Proof of intent should not be required as a part of this provision. I am opposed to the amendment of the Senator from Idaho. It would greatly weaken the bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I did not intend to discuss this amendment. I am quite willing to have it voted upon; but in view of the suggestions of the Sentor from Washington and those of the Senator from Montana, and being a member of the committee which reported the bill, I feel that I ought to say a word expressive of my views on the subject.

First, let me say to the Senator from Washington that, ordinarily speaking, the intent with which an act is committed or a word is spoken is the essential ingredient of the crime. It has not been very long since the first example of a crime without an intent was introduced into the laws of any civilized country. We have in the statutes of the United States some crimes defined which do not require an intent in order to prove commission; but they are all minor, unimportant violations of the law. They do not relate, ordinarily, to life or liberty. There are not attached to them long sentences for their violation; and I think those who are in favor of the amendment can well assume that the general policy of the criminal law, recognized for centuries, ought to be recognized here and obtain here unless there is a very persuasive reason to the contrary.

The first part of this amendment makes it an offense to use disloyal, profane, scurrilous, contemptuous, or abusive language with regard to the form of government, the Constitution, the Army or Navy, or the uniform of our soldiers or sailors. That is reasonably clear and definite. What is profane and disloyal and scurrilous and contemptuous and abusive language is pretty well settled in the minds of intelligent citizens. But then we proceed:

> Or any language calculated to bring the form of government of the United States, or the Constitution of the United States, * * * into contempt, scorn, contumely, or disrepute.

Here we enter the domain of opinion. What language tends to do these things, or one of them? That is a matter of mere opinion. It is an opinion to be delivered by a judge or a jury; and I think it would be exceeding dangerous to submit to a judge or jury, with reference to a perfectly innocent and upright man, known by his whole community to be an honest and upright and loyal man, the question of whether what he had said, neither contemptuous nor scornful nor abusive nor profane, was calculated or had a tendency to bring these charters of our liberties into scorn or disrepute. We are in danger of embracing within the statute, if we allow it to remain as it is, a great many well-meaning and innocent men; and the very moment the statute is so broadened that it may or probably will bring within its scope men in whom the community generally has confidence, and such men are convicted under the letter of the law, that moment the whole statute ceases to be of any value whatsoever; and instead of confirming and strengthening the loyal and aggressive sentiment of the people of the country for the prosecution of the war, we have done it infinite harm.

I believe that before we can attach to the utterance of any language, no matter how decent, how reasonably argumentative, how fair in its appearance and in its form, the penalties of a crime, we ought to prove that it was uttered with wrongful intent. Now, there is not any difficulty, ordinarily, about proving intent. We have to prove it in nearly every crime that is prosecuted; and almost every criminal that goes to jail has been found to entertain a guilty intent or a wrongful intent in doing the act for which he is prosecuted. Through the use of the word "intended" we will reach the guilty, and we will be in no danger of calling down upon the heads of innocent men the penalties of the law.

There is the widest difference of opinion with regard to language, fair and proper in itself, which tends to bring our institutions into disrepute. Even Senators have a very wide difference of opinion upon that subject, as is evidenced in the debates here from day to day. Let us keep the law strong and well fortified in the minds of reasonable men, and in that way we will do more to strengthen the country, even though now and then a man who ought to be punished escapes the penalty of the law.

I hope very much that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] will be adopted.

I wanted to say this much because I am a member of the committee. There was no minority report; but all the members of the committee who were present during the consideration of the bill knows that this was my view then, as it is now.

Mr. KING and Mr. STERLING addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. CUMMINS. Does the Senator from South Dakota desire to ask me a question?

Mr. STERLING. No.

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield, then, to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should be very glad to get the views of the Senator from Iowa, if he cares to express them, in regard to a suggestion which I made the other day when the Senator from Idaho was addressing the Senate upon this section of the bill. It occurred to me that the language found in lines 24 and 25, on page 2, and lines 1, 2, 3, and part of line 4, on page 3, was unnecessary in view of the preceding matter found in the same section.

The words to which I refer, and which I thought might be eliminated with propriety without weakening the section or the objects of the section, are these:

> Or any language calculated to bring the form of government of the United States, or the Constitution of the United States, or the soldiers or sailors of the United States, or the flag of the United States, or the uniform of the Army or Navy of the United States into contempt, scorn, contumely, or disrepute.

The Senator will see that the words preceding, which relate to the same subject, are these:

> And whoever, when the United States is at war, shall utter, print, write, or publish any disloyal, profane, scurrilous, contemptuous, or abusive language about the form of government of the United States, or the Constitution of the United States, or the soldiers or sailors of the United States, or the flag of the United States, or the uniform of the Army or Navy of the United States.

Then follows the language which I have just suggested might with propriety be eliminated without weakening the section and without cutting out, so to speak, the acts which were sought to be made criminal. It seemed to me that when it was made an offense to utter contemptuous language or abusive language about out form of government, or about the soldiers or the sailors, or the flag, or the uniform, of necessity that language would tend to bring the form of government, the Constitution of the United States, or the uniform, or the soldiers or sailors, or the flag into disrepute; and it seemed to me there was no necessity of enacting the language that I have just suggested might be eliminated. You have covered the case when you make it an offense to utter those words against the Government, or the Constitution, or the soldiers, or the sailors, or the uniform, or the flag.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I do not quite agree with the Senator from Utah, and I will give him my reasons for the disagreement.

The previous part of the amendment, in order to be effective, must find language that is profane, scurrilous, contemptuous, or abusive. The only other word is "disloyal," and I think it is quite true that that word can apply only to a citizen of the United States. It does not embrace subjects of foreign countries who may be temporarily within our jurisdiction or territory. I can well conceive that a skillful man can attempt to bring the United States or the form of our Government, and the Constitution, and our soldiers and sailors, and the flag, and the uniform into contempt and into disrepute without using a profane word, a scurrilous epithet, or an abusive term. If that man employing our tongue or any tongue, however adroitly, intends by his utterance or his publication to accomplish the purpose that is here named, he is even more guilty than the man who uses a profane word or a scurrilous epithet or an abusive term. All that I ask is that with respect to him the question shall be submitted to the jury, "Did he intend in these utterances or publications to accomplish the purpose that is condemned by the statute?" If he did, he ought to be punished. If he did not, he ought not to be punished.

Therefore I would not give my consent to the elimination of that part of the amendment which was just read by the Senator from Utah. I think it should remain, but should be qualified in the way proposed.

Mr. STERLING. If the Senator from Iowa will permit a question, I hope I do not have an extreme view in regard to this matter, yet I almost feel that I would sooner see the suggested amendment of the Senator from Utah prevail than have the word "calculated" stricken out and the word "intended" substituted therefor. But it occurs to me as to whether it is not analogous to the element of "probable cause" in a case for malicious prosecution. We would interpret the word "calculated" as here used to mean language the probable effect of which would be, and so forth. Would it not in a case for malicious prosecution be decided by the court or by the jury under instructions from the court whether probable cause exists or not? Would not the phrase "Probable effect" be so construed by the judge or the jury properly instructed so that there would be no danger of any unjust conviction?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not see any parallel between the case cited by the Senator from South Dakota and the present amendment, but I can put it to the Senator from South Dakota so that I will explain at least my view of the difference between the word proposed and the word now in the amendment. The Senator from South Dakota might—this is purely a suppositious matter, because he is incapable of doing what I am about to interject—the Senator from South Dakota might deliver a speech that I really thought the probable effect would be to do these things, namely, bring our Constitution or our Government or the form of our Constitution or our Army and Navy, and so forth, into disrepute. I might utter a sentiment of which he thought the same thing. If I were on a jury called to try the Senator from South Dakota or he were on a jury called to try me, what would be his duty or mine?

It would be his duty to find me guilty if he believed that the probable effect of what I had said in perfect good faith, in absolute loyalty, with the best intent of which a citizen is capable, and I would be compelled to do the same sad office for the Senator from South Dakota.

Now, I am not willing to submit that question to a jury. I do not believe that there is a single man in the United States who ought to feel the weight of a law of this sort of which the intent can not be easily and satisfactorily proven, and why, in order to embrace some mythical man, should we trespass upon the domain which has hitherto been held sacred to free speech and free action?

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I certainly did not intend to take up any further time of the Senate in discussing this matter. However, I feel so strongly on the question of this proposed amendment that I can not refrain from offering one or two words further about it.

In my judgment, it absolutely weakens the entire effect as I understand the proposed effect of the legislation itself. This country is on fire practically. As the President of the United States said at one time before we declared war, the world is on fire and the cinders and sparks are falling all around. That is peculiarly true of the conditions existing in this country. We can not disguise from ourselves the fact that we are not a homogeneous people; that there are 30,000,000 people of foreign birth of the first generation or naturalized citizens among us, and that a large number of them, at least 10,000,000 of that 30,000,000, if not in sympathy with our opponents yet must necessarily be to some extent affected by the fact that they are of the blood of the central powers.

Now, those are the conditions existing. In every State in the Union practically we have to meet those conditions. In some of the States of the Union those conditions are very much more critical and serious than they are in others. Any reckless statement the ordinary effect of which would be to cause the act to be perpertrated which this bill seeks to punish, any reckless statement made with no deliberation whatsoever, should be punished in some way. That is my deliberate judgment. I think that you very materially weaken, that you do not recognize the effect of, your action in inserting the word "willfully" with reference to this proposed language, "willfully uttered." Naturally it will be construed, whenever a court meets the proposition upon the application of some shrewd attorney making a technical defense of the guilty party, and the court will instruct as to what the word "willful" means.

The word "willfully," which you have put in here, means that these utterances must have been made with some measure of care and deliberation; that they must have been uttered not simply as the utterance of a moment, but that they must have been thought over; that there must have been some previous design upon the part of the party uttering the words, as the word "willfully" in the statute naturally imports some such design. The consequence is you are going to have a charge upon the definition of the word "willful" submitted to the jury, though the effect of the language may have been to cast contumely or contempt upon the Government of the United States, the Constitution of the United States, the uniforms of the soldiers of the United States. That may be admitted by every word of evidence; the defendant himself may admit that he knows that that was the effect of the language; but before the jury is justified in finding him guilty they must find that his language which had that effect was uttered with some degree of deliberation, and had some more or less thought given to the subject.

Again, you put in this act a provision that he must have uttered it not only after thought and after deliberation, but that he must have uttered it with the intent. Sir, in the inflamed condition of public sentiment in certain districts in the United States the greatest injury that can possibly be done, in my judgment, may be carelessly and recklessly done by usually the most thoughtful man or the most prominent man in the community.

I would prohibit the use of careless or reckless language the ordinary effect of which would be, in the minds of the jury, to bring about riot or trouble upon the one hand or to cast contumely or reflection or contempt upon the uniform of the man who is fighting our battles in Europe, on the other hand.

I think that you are emasculating this clause and you are going back to exactly the condition which we are now confronted with in every State in the Union. You are undertaking to pass a law which will furnish quibbling for attorneys and put in the statute words which must be passed upon for the liberation of the offender. Those are the conditions which we must confront.

I am just as sincere in regard to the view of those who insist that the difference between the word "calculated" and the word "intended" is merely a matter of tweedledum and tweedledee. The careless enactment of a statute of this kind upon the theory that there is no difference in the use of one or two different words is exactly what causes in times of peace the people of the country to believe that courts do not do justice; that they can not get a case tried; that the legislature or the Congress, as the case may be, throws so many technical defenses around an action that justice can not be done.

I tell you, Senators, in my judgment, you had best provide here a method through which the people of the United States can understand that immediate justice can be done to those offenders, or else they will hang them by the neck until they are dead or will tar and feather them and run them out of their respective communities. This is my deliberate judgment, and I am going to vote against the proposed amendment, just as I opposed with my vote the proposition to put "willfully" into the statute.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, as following the remarks of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] I should like to quote the language used by the governor of Montana at the meeting of governors here a few days ago, in which he said:

> The greatest criticism heard is against the timorous attitude of the National Government toward treason.

And then the statements of Govs. Manning, of South Carolina, and Milliken, of Maine, in which they—> warned that unless drastic steps were taken soon, mob violence was to be expected.

That is in line, as I read it, with what the Senator from New Mexico has just said in regard to this matter.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I shall not postpone the vote more than a minute. I ask Senators to stop to think a minute and look at the condition of things in this country. I was impressed by the statement of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] of the varied and variegated population of this country. On the one side there is absolute loyalty. There is not one loyal citizen of America who could ever be held under the provisions of this bill whether you adopt the amendment of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] or do not adopt it. There are hundreds of crimes where no intent is alleged. What is the necessity to allege an intent to murder or an intent to kill by firing off a Winchester rifle on the crowded street of a city? The crime is in doing it whether people were killed or not killed.

Mr. FALL. The illustration which the Senator is making emphasizes the fact that the crime, as the law charges, is in doing it carelessly.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Yes, sir; they do not need any intent; even doing it carelessly, as the Senator suggests, as walking up the street and handling a pistol in a careless manner. The intent has nothing to do with that crime. There are many other crimes we can think of where there is no need to say that any intent was involved.

But there is a crime against this country, a disloyal person doing the things denounced in this bill—and why do we say here, as the Senator so ably suggested, that we must throw around everyone who is guilty the proof before a jury of the intent? You know and every other man who has served, as the Senator has, so ably on the bench, and as I served so unably as prosecutor for several years of my life and for many years engaged in defense in actions, I want nothing better than to say "You will make me prove your intent," and I can show the man of such insignificant purpose, so little read that he did not know what the result would be; that he did not intend to stir up this crowd that was standing around him. I have got to go to the question of proving the intent instead of punishing him for the commission of crime. We should not throw around this bill measures of protection in the fear that the United States is going to run amuck, that it is going to punish loyal American citizens for a mere criticism of the President, a criticism of any one thing that anybody does. There is no American jury in the world that will not preserve the right of every loyal citizen in any criticism he wants to make. There is no doubt about that. But see this insistence that we shall throw protection around crime, treason to our country, if you please, by proof of what the person intended to result from his act. It seems to me that we are merely quibbling with a question in this hour that ought to hold us pretty strongly to the fact of seeing that no man in America is shot in the back, and that our great efforts to win this war shall not be weakened by hedging about every violator of the common rules, the decencies, and the common sense of what a patriotic citizen ought to do; questions of the intent that he deliberated, as the Senator says, and came to the conclusion after a long time that this was the best possible way to hurt America or to help Germany. That thing we want to avoid if we can. I thoroughly agree with the patriotic and luminous statement made by the Senator from New Mexico in that regard.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, of course my knowledge of the law is very slight compared to that of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] or the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH], but I had thought always that intent had something to do with establishing the degree in a murder case. There are various degrees in a charge of murder, and I thought that intent had something to do with it. That, however, is a mere passing reflection. Here we are proposing to make an offense remarks against our Constitution and form of government; and in our zeal we are running the risk of destroying not only the form but the very essence of free government.

Mr. President, I have become a little weary of having Senators get up here and say to those of us who happen to think a word had better be changed, and that we had better retain the usual protection of intent, that Senators who favor that course are trying to shelter treason.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Does the Senator mean that I made any such suggestion?

Mr. LODGE. The Senator made precisely that statement.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I should like to answer the Senator.

Mr. LODGE. He said we were trying to shelter treason.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I should like to answer the Senator when he shall have concluded.

Mr. LODGE. At least I understood the Senator to say so; and I think the RECORD will show it.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. That I said what?

Mr. LODGE. That the Senators who were supporting the use of the word "intended," instead of the word "calculated," were trying to shelter treason.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. On the contrary, I never made any such statement. If I did, I do not understand my own language. I never made even a suggestion of that kind.

Mr. LODGE. I am very glad the Senator did not.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I never dreamed of saying that.

Mr. LODGE. I sat here listening, and I thought the Senator did say so.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I never dreamed of saying, as the Senator from Massachusetts ought to know, that any Senator on this floor would for one minute intentionally favor protecting treason in this country. On the contrary, I was simply trying to show to the Senate that when we got into a trial of such a case as would arise under this proposed law, if in framing it we threw about offenders all the safeguards which are attempted to be thrown around the defendant in the trial of a case of murder in a State under ordinary conditions, we would open a vast field of defense to any ingenious defender of a criminal on the ground of requiring to be proved not only his intent but his deliberate purpose and intent to do something to injure the United States. I said that under that kind of a provision very likely those absolutely guilty of treason might escape. Certainly I did not, as the Senator from Massachusetts must know, intimate that any Senator in this body or any other genuine American ever had an idea of throwing the least protection around anybody who exhibited the least infidelity to the Government in the prosecution of this war or want of sympathy with our ultimate victory.

Mr. LODGE. I am glad to hear the Senator's explanation. I do not think there is anybody who feels more strongly in regard to any expression of sympathy with Germany than do I, and I have felt so from the time before we entered the war; but I do think, Mr. President, that it is important in passing legislation of this kind—with which I have entire sympathy; and I wish to see such offenses put down—that we should guard the legislation so that it will not be used as a means of persecuting loyal and innocent men.

I do not think the word "intend" is a very serious protection. We have got it in this bill no less than three times. Proof of the intent is required in the case of any person who interferes with the military operations of the Government; it is necessary to show intent in the case of obstructing the liberty loan; it is necessary to show intent, according to this very bill, in the case of advocating the curtailment of production; and yet it is proposed to abandon such defense as the use of the word "intended" may afford—I do not think it is a very great protection—in connection with a prosecution for what may be a hasty remark or what may be an unconsidered speech in a moment of excitement, or what may be perfectly ligitimate and proper criticism. I think it is a very slight protection to give, and one that ought to be given.

In our zeal to punish these crimes we do not wish to run the risk of injuring innocent men and injuring respect for the law or breaking down the Constitution of the United States by law when we are proclaiming punishment for those who speak contemptuously of it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, just one word. I agree entirely with what the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] has just stated, and I think it may simplify the exact question that is before the Senate by admitting that men may with good intentions favor the German cause in the manner stated in this bill. The question is whether we are going to allow that. That is the exact question before the Senate. Senators may differ in opinion as to whether or not a man, even though with good intentions, should be allowed to go out and make the remarks or do the things specified in this bill. I think that public policy, on the grounds stated by the Senator from Arizona and the Senator from New Mexico, justifies the Senate in making it unlawful, even though the intention is good.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. POINDEXTER. In just a moment I shall yield to the Senator from Iowa.

To answer another question that was made, it has been suggested that it makes no material difference if we put the word "intended" into the act. It is said that the intent will be presumed as a matter of law from the natural consequences of the act. That may be true in a certain class of cases; it might be true in some cases of this kind; but it is also true—and the Senator from Arizona, with his experience as a prosecuting attorney, and I can sympathize with him in that, because I have wrestled a good deal myself with those difficulties—that it is always open to the defendant to prove that he did not intend it; it is always open to the defendant to rebut the presumption that he intended to commit the offense charged. So in the cases which are covered by this bill, if it be said that it is presumed that the intent existed, then he could come into court at any time and rebut it by swearing that he did not intend the consequences alleged and go scot free.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN], who is necessarily absent. I am released from my pair with the Senator from Connecticut as to my vote on the amendments to this bill. I therefore will take the liberty of voting. I vote "nay."

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] and vote "yea."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). Transferring my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD], I vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I understand the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], with whom I have a pair, has not voted. That being the case, I transfer my pair to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], which I transfer to the junior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] and vote "yea."

Mr. CALDER (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] and permit my vote to stand.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. JAMES (after having voted in the negative). I transfer the general pair I have with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] to the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. STERLING (after having voted in the negative). I inquire if the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that he has not.

Mr. STERLING. I transfer my pair with that Senator to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] is absent in connection with the liberty-bond campaign.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to announce that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] is necessarily detained on important public business.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH];

The Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON];

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD];

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT]; and

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 28, not voting 33, as follows:

YEAS—34.

Baird	Gallinger	McCumber	Smith, Ga.
Borah	Gore	McKellar	Smoot
Calder	Hale	McNary	Stone
Chamberlain	Hardwick	New	Sutherland
Colt	Hitchcock	Norris	Thomas
Cummins	Kellogg	Reed	Vardaman
Curtis	King	Shafroth	Warren
France	Lewis	Sherman
Frelinghuysen	Lodge	Shields

NAYS—28.

Ashurst	Jones, N. Mex.	Pittman	Smith, Ariz.
Beckham	Jones, Wash.	Poindexter	Sterling
Fall	Kirby	Ransdell	Swanson
Fletcher	Martin	Robinson	Thompson
Henderson	Myers	Saulsbury	Tillman
Hollis	Nugent	Sheppard	Trammell

So Mr. BORAH's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, there was considerable said on the floor of the Senate on Saturday about a bill on this subject and having the same object as the pending committee amendment, which I introduced last August, and there was more said about it to-day. An editorial with reference to it, from the New York American, was to-day incorporated in the RECORD.

The bill which I introduced last August, having the same object in view as the committee amendment to the pending bill, and using in large part the same identical language, appears to have fallen under the condemnation of the New York American and of Mr. Roosevelt. The condemnation of the New York American is shown by the editorial which was put into the RECORD this afternoon; and in the Washington Post of this morning I notice that, in explaining the charge which was made against Mr. Roosevelt here Saturday of having misstated the facts in regard to the proposed legislation before the Senate, Mr. Roosevelt says he has discovered that he had in mind the bill which I introduced on the same subject last October, which he thought was before the Senate, instead of the pending measure, and that I am to blame, to use his own words. He uses those words and says the blame, whatever "blame" he may have in mind, rests upon me. Now, that is the first time I ever heard of a legislator being blamed for introducing in a legislative body a bill to suppress treason and disloyalty. If there is any blame in that, I am quite willing to take it. Mr. Roosevelt has blamed this administration, its officials and representatives, from the President down, for nearly everything they have done since we entered into this war; therefore, I have at least been placed in good company.

I want to say a few words about a very slight difference between the committee amendment to the pending bill and the bill on the same subject which I introduced last August, the two being in large part identical. The bill which I introduced last August embodies language which is embodied in this bill and, in addition, simply includes the words "the President of the United States." My bill includes the President of the United States as one of the objects about which disloyal, profane, scurrilous, contemptuous, or abusive language should not be used in time of war.

The committee amendment to the pending bill provides that in time of war it is unlawful to use "any disloyal, profane, scurrilous, contemptuous, or abusive language about the form of government of the United States, or the Constitution of the United States, or the soldiers or sailors of the United States, or the flag of the United States, or the uniform of the Army or Navy of the United States." My bill used that same language, and simply added "or the President of the United States."

The criticism that has been directed at my bill by those who find fault with it and blame me for it asserts that under that bill criticism of the President of the United States would not be permitted. There is no ground for any such assertion. I contend that nobody can seriously assert that the provision in the committee amendment before us, which forbids the use of disloyal, profane, scurrilous, contemptuous, or abusive language about the form of government of the United States and other objects there enumerated forbids criticism of the form of government of the United States, or forbids criticism of the Constitution of the United States, or the soldiers or sailors of the United States, or the flag of the United States, and so forth. If it does not prevent criticism, legitimate and decent criticism, of the form of government of the United States, the Constitution of the United States, or the flag of the United States, then if the words "the President of the United States" were in there, it would not prevent criticism of the President of the United States. If the terms of the committee amendment are not such as to forbid any decent and legitimate criticism of the objects mentioned therein, then they would not prevent criticism of the President of the United States. All would be on the same footing. I believe when we are engaged in war that anybody who uses vile, opprobrious, or offensive epithets about the President of the United States, the Commander in Chief of our Army and Navy, ought to be punished as an enemy of the country. I do not mean criticism. I mean vile, profane, scurrilous, abusive language. Criticism is one thing; vile, scurrilous abuse is another. The President of the United States is the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, and I believe that it is just as offensive and disloyal to use scurrilous, contemptuous, abusive, profane, or disloyal language about the President of the United States, the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, in time of war as it is to use the same kind of language about our form of government, the Constitution, the flag, or the soldiers and sailors of the country. It would be a strange law, indeed, that would prohibit such language about the soldiers and sailors of the country in time of war and permit it to be used at the same time about the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy.

The bill before us is not intended to prevent any temperate or legitimate criticism of the form of government of the United States, or the Constitution of the United States, or the flag of the United States, or the soldiers or sailors of the United States, and the bill which I introduced, and which some outside of this body seem to think censurable, was not intended to prevent criticism of the President of the United States, nor would it. Here is what it was aimed at, in making reference to the President of the United States. I read from the Washington Post of this morning the following:

MEMPHIS, TENN., April 7.

Federal officials were called on by local officers last night to protect O. L. Agnew, a cotton-press watchman, from mob violence.

During the liberty-loan parade Agnew is said to have cursed President Wilson, Gen. Pershing, and Red Cross workers.

Think of that, please! In time of war, when a liberty-loan parade is in progress, a man publicly curses the President of the United States, the Commander in Chief of our Army and Navy, and no law to punish such vile and reprehensible, such disloyal, utterances! Yet I am criticized and blamed because I introduced in Congress a bill to punish such loathsome conduct. I say there is need of such a law.

I say that when we are engaged in war, and a liberty-loan parade is in progress, a man who curses the Red Cross workers, Gen. Pershing, the form of government of the United States, the Constitution of the United States, the flag of the United States, the soldiers or sailors of the United States, or the President of the United States ought to be severely punished. That was my idea in including in the inhibitions of my bill, from which this is largely taken, the President of the United States. Of course, all reference to the President of the United States was eliminated by the committee in its amendment, and we now simply have the provisions forbidding disloyal, profane, scurrilous, contemptuous, or abusive language about the form of government of the United States, or the Constitution of the United States, or the soldiers or sailors of the United States, or the flag of the United States, or the uniform of the Army or Navy of the United States. While I think it would have been better if the words "President of the United States" had been left in, since they have been eliminated I think, nevertheless, the committee amendment which we have before us should be adopted and that the bill so amended should be enacted with the inhibitions contained. They are needed. I heartily favor them.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, is it true that as the bill is now a citizen is forbidden to curse the Army and Navy but he can curse the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy?

Mr. MYERS. That is the exact anomaly, strange to say. That is the condition of the bill before us, as it is now worded, and that is why I say I believe it would be a better bill if the words "the President of the United States" were in there if those words had not been eliminated by the committee from the language apparently taken from my bill; but I would rather have the bill as it is than no bill at all on the subject. There is urgent, crying need for this legislation, whether or not it may contain reference to the President. I am for the bill, heartily and earnestly, for every provision, every clause, of it, and I hope it may be speedily enacted.

Mr. GALLINGER. I offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the bill, which I ask to have printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That order will be taken.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I have an amendment to the pending measure which I think the Senator in charge of the bill will accept. I ask that it be read from the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 21, on page 3——

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, the amendment is not in order now, as I understand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from New Mexico to the fact that the amendment is not now in order, because the committee amendments are being considered.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I understood that we had disposed of the committee amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There remain some undisposed of. The amendment of the Senator from New Mexico will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I ask that it may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment for the information of the Senate.

The SECRETARY. After line 21, on page 3, it is proposed to insert a paragraph, as follows:

Any employee or official of the United States Government who commits any disloyal act or utters any unpatriotic or disloyal language, or who, in an abusive and violent manner, criticizes the Army or Navy or the flag of the United States, shall be at once dismissed from the service. Any such employee shall be dismissed by the head of the department in which the employee may be engaged, and any such official shall be dismissed by the authority having power to appoint a successor to the dismissed official.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

RECESS.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock p. m., Monday, April 8, 1918) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Tuesday, April 9, 1918, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, April 8, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

By Thy Grace, O God, who lives and reigns above us; by the vast and illimitable space around us; by the myriads of worlds which fill it and declare Thy glory; by the earth's great luminary which fills it with light and quickens all life to new activities, joy, and gladness; by the love that binds us together in families and nations, makes statesmen and patriots; by the high ideals which move men to action; by the hope that cheers them on their way; by the devout of every age, the prophets, seers, and martyrs; by the precepts and incomparable life and character of the Master; by the hopes of yon bright heaven, may we be inspired to unboundless faith in the eternal verities and quickened into faithful and fruitful servants to Thee, our God and our Father. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday was read and approved.

HOMING PIGEONS IN THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill S. 3980.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 3980) to prevent interference with the use of homing pigeons by the United States, to provide a penalty for such interference, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That it be, and it hereby is, declared to be unlawful to entrap, capture, shoot, kill, possess, or in any way detain an Antwerp, or homing pigeon, commonly called carrier pigeon, which is owned by the United States or bears a band owned and issued by the United States having thereon the letters "U. S. A." or "U. S. N." and a serial number.

SEC. 2. That the possession or detention of any pigeon described in section 1 of this act by any person or persons in any loft, house, cage, building, or structure in the ownership or under the control of such person or persons without giving immediate notice by registered mail to the nearest military authorities, shall be prima facie evidence of a violation of this act.

SEC. 3. That any person violating the provisions of this act shall, upon conviction, be punished by a fine of not more than $100, or by imprisonment for not more than six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, under the rule which the House adopted last Saturday there are 15 bills on the calendar that the Committee on Military Affairs would like to have disposed of, and every one of those bills has the approval of the War Department and every one has a unanimous report from the Committee on Military Affairs of the House, except one on which a member reserved the right to object to offer an amendment. That bill, after a consultation with the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], the ranking minority member, we have put at the foot of the list, and I do hope that the House will be patient with the Committee on Military Affairs to-day and let us pass these bills, which have the approval of the War Department and the Committee on Military Affairs. Unless some gentleman desires to discuss this question, I desire to move the previous question on the passage of this bill.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CANNON. I have just glanced at the bill. I do not know much about carrier pigeons. I see they use the term "homing pigeons."

Mr. DENT. Commonly known as carrier pigeons.

Mr. CANNON. I see it is declared to be unlawful to entrap, capture, shoot, kill, possess, or in any way detain an Antwerp or homing pigeon. I have just glanced hastily through it, and it seems to me it should be "knowingly." You could hardly say it was unlawful if I were to kill a homing pigeon—and I never did kill a pigeon in my life. I would not know if it were a canvasback or a homing pigeon——

Mr. DENT. Well, if the gentleman reads a little further he will find that the pigeon will have to have the earmark, or "U. S. A." or "U. S. N.," showing it belongs to the Government. It is the only pigeon the Government uses.

Mr. CANNON. Suppose you shoot one unknowingly that had "U. S. N." on it.

Mr DENT. Oh, I would not object to the word "knowingly" going in there.

Mr. CANNON. It seems to me it should go everywhere.

Mr. WALDOW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. Insert after the word "to," in line 3, the word "knowingly."

Mr. DENT. I ask unanimous consent for the amendment suggested by the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to insert the word "knowingly," line 3, after the second word "to." Is there objection?

Mr. WALDOW. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does not the gentleman believe that in section 2 that is taken care of, that section 2 takes care of what the gentleman has in mind by the mere fact you notify the authorities you have that pigeon in your possession.

Mr. DENT. Well——

Mr. CANNON. Suppose he has killed it.

Mr. DENT. If the gentleman will let me answer the question that the gentleman asked, section 2 is a section in reference to a rule of prima facie evidence in cases of this kind. It does not declare the crime. I have no objection to the amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the insertion of the word "knowingly" as designated? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 4, after the word "military," insert the words "or naval."

Mr. DENT. I move the previous question on the bill and amendments.

The question was taken, and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DENT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

AMENDMENT TO SECTION 1342, REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 9570.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9570) to amend articles 52 and 53 of section 1342 of the Revised Statutes, as amended by an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes," approved August 29, 1916, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That articles 52 and 53 of section 1342 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes," approved August 29, 1916, be, and the same are hereby, amended to read as follows:

"ART. 52. Suspension of sentences: The authority competent to order the execution of the sentence of a court-martial may suspend the execution, in whole or in part, of such sentences as do not extend to death or to the dismissal of an officer, and may restore the person under sentence to duty during such suspension. A sentence, or any part thereof, which has been so suspended may be remitted, in whole or in part, by the officer who suspended the same, by his successor in office, or by any officer exercising appropriate court-martial jurisdiction over the command in which the person under sentence may be serving at the time. The same authority may vacate the order of suspension at any time and order the execution of the sentence or the suspended part thereof in so far as the same shall not have been previously remitted. The death or honorable discharge of a person under suspended sentence shall operate as a complete remission of any unexecuted or unremitted part of such sentence.

"ART. 53. Execution or remission—Confinement in disciplinary barracks: When a sentence of dishonorable discharge has been suspended until the soldier's release from confinement, the execution or remission of any part of his sentence shall, if the soldier be confined in the United States Disciplinary Barracks, or any branch thereof, be directed by the Secretary of War."

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MADDEN. I want to ask if this bill is intended simply to authorize the commanding officer in a case where a court-martial has taken place inflicting a punishment less than death to suspend sentence and restore the convicted man to duty pending the execution of the sentence?

Mr. DENT. Well, in all cases except the death penalty and dismissal from the service. Those are the only two exceptions.

Mr. MADDEN. In other words, it is intended to utilize the service of men pending the execution of sentence?

Mr. DENT. It gives a man who has committed some slight, trivial offense, probably staid out his leave a little too long, an opportunity to get back into service and be restored thereto.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DENT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 3911. An act authorizing national banks to subscribe to the American National Red Cross; and

S. 3475. An act to prescribe to the requisite form or proof of death under policies or contracts of insurance covering the lives of persons in or serving with or attached to the military forces of the United States, and for other purposes.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. McCLINTIC, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence indefinitely, on account of making liberty loan speeches.

SIX MONTHS' PAY TO DEPENDENT RELATIVES OF DECEASED OFFICERS OR ENLISTED MEN.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill S. 3736.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama calls up the bill S. 3736, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 3736) to provide for the payment of six months' pay to the widow, children, or other designated dependent relative of any officer or enlisted man of the Regular Army whose death results from wounds or disease not the result of his own misconduct.

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter, immediately upon official notification of the death from wounds or disease, not the result of his own misconduct, of any officer or enlisted man on the active list of the Regular Army, or on the retired list when on active duty, from and after October 6, 1917, the Quartermaster General of the Army shall cause to be paid to the widow, and if there be no widow to the child or children, and if there be no widow or child to any other dependent relative of such officer or enlisted man previously designated by him, an amount equal to six months' pay at the rate received by such officer or enlisted man at the date of his death. The Secretary of War shall establish regulations requiring each officer and enlisted man having no wife or child to designate the proper dependent relative to whom this amount shall be paid in case of his death. Said amount shall be paid from funds appropriated for the pay of the Army.

SEC. 2. That nothing in this act or in other existing legislation shall be construed as making the provisions of this act applicable to officers or enlisted men of any forces or troops of the Army of the United States other than those of the Regular Army, and nothing in this act shall be construed to apply in commissioned grades to any officers except those holding permanent or provisional appointments in the Regular Army.

Also the following committee amendments were read:

Page 1, line 6, after the word "Army," insert the following: "or on the retired list when on active duty."

At the end of the bill insert a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 3. That the sum received hereunder shall be deducted from any amount that may be, or may become, due and payable to any such widow, child, children, or dependent relative of such officer or enlisted man under the act entitled 'An act to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, and for other purposes,' approved October 6, 1917, or any act or acts amendatory thereof."

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I think this is a very important bill and should receive some consideration in the Committee of the Whole, and therefore I object.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 3736.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 3736, with Mr. BURNETT in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 3736) to provide for the payment of six months' pay to the widow, children, or other designated dependent relative of any officer or enlisted man of the Regular Army whose death results from wounds or disease not the result of his own misconduct.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DENT. Now, Mr. Chairman, I would like to make just this brief statement in regard to this bill.

The bill restores a law that was on the statute books prior to the adoption of the amendment to the War-Risk Insurance bill. That bill repealed a statute which had been on the books for years and years—I know not how long but for many, many years past—providing for the taking care of the widows and the children and the dependent relatives of soldiers by providing six months' pay, pending the time that they were readjusting their situation. The bill, as the committee knows, amending the war-risk insurance act did not come from the Committee on Military Affairs, but was reported out by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

I do not know whether the repeal of that law was intentionally done at that time or not. I do not recall whether there was any discussion of it. But, at any rate, the War Department insists that that law ought to be restored in order to take care of the widows and the children and the dependent relatives and soldiers who are killed or who die while in the service, by giving them the additional pay of six months.

Mr. WELTY. Will that law, if passed, apply to the officers and soldiers of the National Army?

Mr. DENT. It will not, Mr. Chairman. It simply restores the law as it was and makes it applicable to the officers of the Regular Army, on the theory that an officer of the Regular Army has made a profession out of that particular life and that he has made no preparation, whereas the other people are going in only for temporary service.

Mr. WELTY. Mr. Chairman, do not the officers and soldiers of the National Army make a greater sacrifice than the man who is educated in the Regular Army and makes a profession of that?

Mr. DENT. Well, I would not undertake to draw any comparisons as to who makes the greatest sacrifice, but the business proposition and the practical proposition is the one I am suggesting, that in the one case the soldier has made a profession out of that particular life, whereas, in the other instance, a man who has gone in temporarily is supposed to have made some arrangement for his family prior to service in the Army.

Mr. WELTY. Now, does it include the soldiers and the officers of the National Guard of the various States which were taken into the Army?

Mr. DENT. It only includes the officers and enlisted men of the Regular Establishment.

Mr. WELTY. I will ask whether or not the chairman of the committee and the committee itself will accept an amendment to include the soldiers and officers of the National Army and soldiers and officers of the National Guard?

Mr. DENT. I will state to the gentleman that, so far as I am concerned, I will not object to it if he will limit that to the pending emergency.

Mr. WELTY. That is all right.

Mr. DENT. But this law restores the old law so that it is permanent legislation as to Regular Army officers.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. But it is a little more than that, if you will allow me. It not only restores the old law giving this compensation, but the amount is finally deducted from the insurance. Under the old law the widow or the other relatives got the money outright. Under this bill they only get the advance for immediate needs.

Now, some suggestion has been made here that this ought to refer to the men in the National Army and the National Guard as well as the men in the Regular Army. Of course, the Regular Army officers are shifted from one military post to another. They have to go wherever they are ordered, and in the natural course of events they do not have the opportunity for establishing homes. The man who comes into the Military Establishment from civil life has a home, and he undoubtedly has somebody at his home who has sufficient credit there to keep off the creditors until the insurance money is paid. That does not apply to the Regular Army officers as a rule.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Are there not thousands of officers who recently were commissioned in the Regular Army who have not made a career in army life?

Mr. KAHN. Yes. That is so. Yet the number is very small in comparison with the great number of officers who have been commissioned in the National Guard and in the National Army.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Assuming the case of an officer in the National Army and the case of an officer in the Regular Army, both of them neglecting to take out insurance, the officer in the Regular Army would get the advance, and his dependents would be paid six months' pay, whereas the dependents of an officer in the National Army who neglected to take out insurance would have nothing.

Mr. KAHN. The amendment proposed as section 3, I take it, covers the case of the Regular Army officer who failed to take out insurance. He would not be able to draw anything under this bill, because section 3 provides that it shall be deducted from his insurance.

Mr. WALSH. But that does not prevent his being paid where there is no insurance. It simply provides for deducting it from what insurance may be due. But if he has no insurance at all, it does not provide that the payment shall not be made. It may be due. Now, if none is due, that would not prevent its being paid. The point I was trying to make, if the gentleman will permit me, was this: That in the case where a Regular Army officer failed to take out insurance, and in a case where an officer in the National Army failed to take out insurance, the dependents of one would receive this payment, whereas the dependents of the other would not?

Mr. KAHN. I do not think that the War Department would make any payment where the man has not taken out insurance.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. If the gentleman will permit, the War Department would have to do it, I think, under this law.

Mr. KAHN. I do not so understand. I have no objection personally to allowing the bill to be amended so as to take in the officers, whether they are in the National Army or in the National Guard or in the Regular Army. I have no objection to that.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. REAVIS. Would the gentleman have any objection to restricting this payment to those officers who have taken out insurance? Then it could be deducted.

Mr. KAHN. I am perfectly willing to have such a restriction made.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It seems to me that if that proposition is accepted and made a part of the law we defeat the intention of the bill, inasmuch as it is based on the argument the gentleman has used—that the regular officer, having no home, has no means of localized credit, whereas the National Guard officer or National Army officer might have credit enough to bring his remains back.

Mr. KAHN. I believe that if the gentleman will look into the record of the War-Risk Bureau he will find that practically every officer has taken out the insurance to the full amount—$10,000.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I can not fully understand the bill, but it seems to me it is of very little advantage to those who have taken out insurance. It is chiefly of advantage to those who have not. It is mainly an advance to those who have taken out insurance.

Mr. KAHN. As I explained a moment ago, the Regular Army officer, having no fixed habitation, is so situated that his dependents left behind can not probably get credit.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That was the object. But I was speaking of the effect of it. It will only afford substantial relief to those who have not taken out insurance. It is deducted from those who have taken out insurance, and they get it a little quicker.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. This is confined in its expression to those who are in the Regular Army?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Those who are retired or on the active list of the Regular Army?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. It is really the reenactment of the law that has heretofore existed?

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman is quite right.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. It is really continuing to this class of people benefits heretofore enjoyed by them?

Mr. KAHN. Exactly.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Now, I am assuming that this is proper legislation; but why is it not advisable to extend the benefits of it to the National Guard and the National Army?

Mr. KAHN. I have no objection to that, I will say to the gentleman. I have so stated already. I have no objection to having the bill amended so as to take in the officers from every branch of the service.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Did the committee give consideration to that feature?

Mr. KAHN. I do not think so.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The gentleman is undertaking to state that the Committee on Military Affairs would not be opposed, at least, as a body, to any such suggestion?

Mr. KAHN. I do not think these gentlemen at my left are opposed to the extension of it. I would ask the chairman of the committee this question: Does the chairman of the committee object to an amendment of this bill making it applicable to the National Guard and the National Army as well as to the Regular Army?

Mr. DENT. As I stated a moment ago, I would be willing to accept an amendment of that kind provided it was limited, of course, to the present emergency.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Would it not be advisable for the chairman of the committee to propose or offer such an amendment?

Mr. DENT. It might be.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Now, may I make an inquiry there of the gentleman from California and the gentleman from Alabama? The language here used is "any officer or enlisted man." I have long been somewhat confused as to just what the enlisted man is. Would the law construe a man who has been drafted under the selective-draft act as an enlisted man?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Has that been officially determined, to make that certain?

Mr. KAHN. I do not know what decisions have been handed down, but, as I understand it, the officials of the War Department have invariably referred to the men in the National Army as enlisted men. In fact, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY], who has just rung up the Judge Advocate General's office, has been informed that the words "enlisted men" applies to all private soldiers in the National Army as well as privates in the Regulars and those in the National Guard organizations.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I think that is the way it ought to be; but I have wondered several times if it would not be better if the committee used some language somewhere in the bill distinctly showing that that is the case.

Mr. MADDEN. They have to enlist after they are drafted, do they not?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The words "enlisted man" do not refer to the means by which a man gets into the service. They refer to his status after he gets in.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Is that quite true?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly. He is either an officer or an enlisted man. Neither the word "officer" nor the words "enlisted man" refer to the means by which he got in.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. But the gentleman knows that heretofore the only way a man could get in was by enlisting.

Mr. KAHN. Oh, no; we had drafted men during the Civil War, and they were considered enlisted men at that period.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. A West Pointer does not enlist.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. But he is an officer.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Exactly; and it refers to the status of the man after he is in the service and not the means by which he got in.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. We are all agreed that that is what it ought to mean.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. But I have been afraid that some court might not take that view of it.

Mr. MADDEN. Does a man who goes into the Army as an officer voluntarily enlist?

Mr. KAHN. No; he is commissioned in the Army.

Mr. MADDEN. When a man is sworn in, that is his enlistment, is it not?

Mr. KAHN. As a private; certainly. If he goes into the ranks, he is an enlisted man. If he goes in as an officer, he is a commissioned officer.

Mr. MADDEN. The part I want to get information on, so that it will go into the RECORD and may guide the executive branch of the Government at some time, is whether or not the oath itself is not the thing that constitutes enlistment.

Mr. KAHN. Yes. It constitutes his entrance into the Army. If a man goes into the ranks, then he is an enlisted man. If he takes the oath as an officer, he is a commissioned officer.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; but that is the thing that completes his enlistment, either as an officer or as a private.

Mr. KAHN. Yes; the taking of the oath.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Now, if I may go back once more—and I hope the gentleman will pardon me—Gen. SHERWOOD just advises me that during the Civil War men who were taken into the service by the operation of the draft were never called enlisted men. They were always technically known as conscripts.

Mr. KAHN. Yes; and it was used as a term of contempt, to their detriment.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. That is very true, but we do not care anything about that.

Mr. DYER. The records do not show that.

Mr. KAHN. That was the common term used in the Army, but the records of the War Department show that they were enlisted.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The gentleman may be mistaken about that.

Mr. FOSTER. Let me say to the gentleman that last summer when we were passing the bill to relieve those in the Army from the work necessary to be done on mining claims we investigated that, but I can not recall to whom we talked about it. We were informed, however, that the term "enlisted men" meant everybody.

Mr. KAHN. Yes. Noncommissioned officers are enlisted men.

Mr. FOSTER. We thought of changing the wording, but they said it was not necessary, because that meant everybody.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Let us analyze that for a minute. I do not know who it was who said that enlistment means everybody.

Mr. FOSTER. It means those who go into the Army, either drafted or as volunteers.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. It might be somebody not qualified to give affirmative technical information who said that.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DYER. I should like to know who has the floor?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] has the floor.

Mr. DYER. Are we under the five-minute rule?

The CHAIRMAN. We are not. The gentleman from Alabama is entitled to an hour.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The gentleman from California had the floor, and I interrupted him, and I beg his pardon.

Mr. DENT. I have the floor, and I yielded to the gentleman from California.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama yielded to the gentleman from California.

Mr. DYER. I ask the gentleman if he will yield to me five minutes?

Mr. RAYBURN. I object to that; that is, I want some explanation from the Committee on Military Affairs of what is meant by this bill before time is yielded to anybody else.

Mr. WALSH. A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman from Texas [Mr RAYBURN] certainly can not object to the gentleman from Alabama yielding time.

Mr. RAYBURN. I said I objected, but I amended that by saying I wanted somebody on the Committee on Military Affairs to explain what is meant by this bill. I do not know.

Mr. DYER. The chairman of the committee explained it very fully.

Mr. RAYBURN. I want to ask a question or two about it.

Mr. DENT. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. RAYBURN. I want to ask the chairman of the committee this question: In section 3 of this bill it says:

> That the sum received hereunder shall be deducted from any amount that may be, or may become, due and payable to any such widow, child, children, or dependent relative of such officer or enlisted man under the act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department,' approved September 2, 1914, and for other purposes," approved October 6, 1917, or any act or acts amendatory thereof.

What does that mean? What deduction?

Mr. DENT. It means any benefit, any amount, any sum received from the insurance; an allowance or anything else under that act shall be deducted on account of this advance.

Mr. RAYBURN. Let me ask this question: We have established an Insurance Bureau in the Treasury Department. A man makes a contract with the Government for insurance. He or somebody for him pays the premium. Does the gentleman think this six months' allowance would come out of that, when it is provided in the law that that is the insurance for which he has contracted, for which he has paid the premium in good faith, and which the law provides shall be paid in monthly installments running over 240 months? Does the gentleman think that this deduction would come out of that?

Mr. DENT. Unquestionably.

Mr. RAYBURN. But we have a contract with this man for which he has paid valuable consideration.

Mr. DENT. Does the gentleman from Texas, who is a good lawyer, contend that the widow or dependent relative could receive advance payment under the provisions of this act and not be bound by it?

Mr RAYBURN. I do; because it is a contract made in good faith with the Government, and for which he has paid.

Mr. DENT. This is a gratuity that the Government is giving and the Congress of the United States can repeal it to-day.

Mr. RAYBURN. I beg the gentleman's pardon, does the gentleman think that when an insurance bureau is established and a soldier takes out insurance under that law and pays his premium that it could violate that contract? The Government has placed the man in a hazardous employment, the Government is only taking the risk of the hazard; then does the gentleman say that that is a gratuity to the man after he has taken out the insurance and paid the premium?

Mr. DENT. I say unqualifiedly, so far as my opinion is concerned, that the Congress of the United States can this afternoon repeal the whole insurance law.

Mr. RAYBURN. Absolutely; but it is not a gratuity.

Mr. DENT. We can repeal it, and anyone who accepts a benefit must be bound by it.

Mr. RAYBURN. I think the gentleman's law would apply to compensation, but certainly it would not apply to the insurance.

Mr. DENT. What is the difference between compensation and insurance?

Mr. RAYBURN. He pays nothing for the compensation; that is a pension; but insurance he pays for. We established a bureau of insurance for the reason that nine companies out of ten canceled all the insurance that the man had, and we established a bureau which said that they would take every man and insure him at peace-time rates.

Mr. DENT. And the gentleman thinks that the Congress of the United States would be estopped from repealing it?

Mr. RAYBURN. I do not think your bill repeals it, and I do not think it ought to be repealed.

Mr. PADGETT. Is not this an advanced payment?

Mr. RAYBURN. No.

Mr. PADGETT. It pays them six months' gratuity; it is admitted that they have got the money and are deprived of nothing.

Mr. RUCKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. I will.

Mr. RUCKER. This bill refers to enlisted men in several places. Do these payments include drafted men?

Mr. DENT. No; they do not as the bill is drawn, but I am willing that the bill should be amended and make it cover all branches.

Mr. RUCKER. So that it will clearly embrace drafted men?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. RUCKER. Then what would become of section 2?

Mr. DENT. I will move to strike that out.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. I will.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman has probably stated it before, but I have not been able to hear it. What is the reason, in view of what we have done under the insurance law for the soldiers, that he gives as warranting this legislation?

Mr. DENT. The reason given by the War Department, stated in the letter published in the report, is that it takes a long time for the widow, child, or dependent relative to collect the insurance money. The allowance under this act would tide them over.

Mr. SHERLEY. In the first place, that is an assumption concerning matters the War Department knows much less about than the War-Risk Insurance Bureau, and it is an assumption that ought not to be true in fact.

Mr. DENT. I am not disposed to take issue with the Secretary of War or the War Department myself on that subject.

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not see why the gentleman should not. They have no particular monopoly of wisdom and have nothing to do with enforcing the insurance act.

Mr. DENT. They have all to do with the payment of the six months' pay.

Mr. SHERLEY. Ah, now the gentleman is coming to what seems to me to be the situation. Under the old law, before we provided a new compensation, they had it; and they do not like to give up something they formerly had, whether the reason has passed away or not. That is what I would like to hear the gentleman about.

Mr. DENT. I have explained the reason for the bill, that it is to tide over the dependents in the first place, and in the next place to restore the law as it was before this act was repealed for those who have not taken out any insurance.

Mr. SHERLEY. There is some benefit in the insurance act that we have passed.

Mr. DENT. They are credited for that; it is to be deducted.

Mr. SHERLEY. Why should you assume that the Government will have to be more tardy than the insurance companies in adjusting things of that sort?

Mr. DENT. The gentleman knows that in proving up claims for insurance it will take time.

Mr. SHERLEY. There ought to be no more delay in the War-Risk Insurance Bureau paying under that act than in the War Department paying under this act.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KAHN. In further reply to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], the gentleman was not here when I first explained the matter. As the gentleman knows, many of the Army officers have no fixed abode. The wife happens to be at some post for the time being, if there are quarters there, and if not she goes to some city and rents quarters. She has no established credit in that city and probably has not enough money to buy widow's weeds in case her husband is killed. This is an attempt to allow the War Department to advance her the money, in order that she may get those supplies which are absolutely necessary under the circumstances.

Mr. SHERLEY. I can not, of course, in question and answer reply to a great many assumptions in the gentleman's statement that I do not think are fully warranted. He assumes that this is the only way that such a person is going to be able to get any money immediately from the Government, which I deny.

Mr. KAHN. It is the speediest way of doing it.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is the question at issue.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. I yield.

Mr. REAVIS. I have not been able to hear much of what has been going on here, and I would like to know why it is that the benefits in this bill are confined to the Regular Army officers and not given to the Reserve officers?

Mr. DENT. In the confusion the gentleman has not heard me repeat two or three distinct times, on several occasions, that I was willing to offer an amendment extending the provisions to the National Guard, the National Army, and the Officers' Reserve Corps.

Mr. REAVIS. I am very glad to hear that. There has been so much confusion that we have not been able to hear much of what has been going on.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman state why the committee reported this bill without that amendment; why the report confined it?

Mr. DENT. Of course, if the gentleman wants to go into the motives that inspired the committee, I would state to him that when we considered the bill we were simply undertaking to restore as permanent law that which we thought was unintentionally repealed by the war-risk insurance law, which the Military Committee did not handle.

Mr. WALSH. That was the only reason?

Mr. DENT. That is the only reason we had in mind when we reported it.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The theory upon which this is being done is that the beneficiary will be able to get this money more quickly through the officers of the War Department than the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance?

Mr. DENT. That is the statement the Secretary of War made in approving this bill.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman permit me to call his attention to the fact that the operation of the War-Risk Insurance Bureau is much more speedy than the War Department? It means delay instead of speed, according to my experience, and I have handled several of these things. Will the gentleman permit me to further call attention to another aspect of this matter? Under the war-risk act the soldiers are permitted to designate their beneficiaries, and under this act the beneficiary is arbitrarily designated, not according to the will of the soldier in some instances. The effect of this will be to take away insurance that the soldier has been paying for, in order that it may be paid to some one not the beneficiary and given to some one else, to whom the soldier does not want it to go, and have it charged to the beneficiary.

Mr. DENT. I can not agree to that. I think the gentleman is wrong, because whatever is gotten under this is to be deducted from what is given under the war-risk insurance.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. In other words, there will be a double benefit?

Mr. DENT. No.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. As I understand the gentleman, the beneficiary in the policy of insurance will still get what it was intended she should get, and this benefit if it be paid to a different beneficiary——

Mr. DENT. I guess that is true.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Would be a double benefit. Therefore there will be cases in which there will be discrimination and double payments.

Mr. DENT. There can not be any double payments.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I understood the gentleman to admit there would be.

Mr. DENT. It may be that there will be an increase in the number of beneficiaries, but there will not be any double payments.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. LOBECK. In line 3, on first page, it is provided "That hereafter," and so forth. Why should not this apply to men who are now at the front, who may have died in the last two days? Why should it not take effect from the time these men have gone into the service, if they have not been paid?

Mr. DENT. That is taken care of. The committee considered that proposition, and that is taken care of in the language on lines 6 and 7, "from and after October 6, 1917," which was the date that the war-risk insurance law repealed this law.

Mr. LOBECK. It does not affect those before October 6?

Mr. DENT. The law was not repealed until October 6, and every one had the benefit of the law up until that time. This restores the law from and after that date.

Mr. LOBECK. I have had cases where men lost their limbs or died before October 6. It would not affect those cases?

Mr. DENT. This bill would not affect them. Under the old law they would have been entitled to the benefits of the law.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. WINSLOW. Does the gentleman know whether or not a like provision is contemplated for members of the naval service?

Mr. DENT. Yes; the chairman of the Naval Committee proposes to offer an amendment to that effect, and I shall accept it.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. LITTLE. The question was raised as to whether this term "enlisted men" would include drafted men. Several gentlemen gave us their definite opinion that it would, but on looking at the dictionary I find the dictionary does not agree with them. I call the attention of the chairman to the definition of the word "enlist":

> To enter voluntarily the military service, the navy, or the like, by formal enrollment; authorize the placing of one's name on the muster roll or list of recruits.

What I have been afraid of is that the courts might decide that the gentlemen who stated their opinion to us are wrong and that the dictionary is right, and I would suggest to the gentleman that when he offers his amendment to include men in the National Army and the National Guard and the Reserve Corps he bear in mind the dictionary definition rather than the floor suggestion.

Mr. DENT. Well, I understand the War Department construes the words "enlisted men" as covering every man in every branch of active service.

Mr. LITTLE. I have heard that statement several times——

Mr. DENT. That is the construction the War Department puts on it, and that is the language that has been used.

Mr. LITTLE. If the gentleman will permit me, the courts will have to construe it according to the dictionary, and I think probably the War Department would follow the courts. It would be a very simple matter to word that so as to agree with the dictionary. That is just a suggestion——

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. If the gentleman will permit, I think the gentleman from Kansas would get a satisfactory definition, at least if not definite an indirect one, by reading anything of the law that relates to the National Army or the National Guard. Now take the National Army. It is made up of drafted men, and men in the National Army who are not officers are referred to in orders and everything else as enlisted men.

Mr. LITTLE. That may be, but whoever wrote those orders did not read the dictionary and did not know the English language.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I did not understand that Noah Webster got up our Army.

Mr. LITTLE. No; but he got up the dictionary.

Mr. DENT. I hope we can reach some conclusion on this bill. I had rather lay it aside than to spend the whole day on this bill. There are 15 other bills here.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. STAFFORD. I would like to have some time in opposition to the bill. I have already expressed the desire to the gentleman from California, and I would like to have 10 or 15 minutes, but I do not wish to be recognized in my own right.

Mr. DENT. I was just suggesting I hope to reach some agreement. I know it is not proper in the Committee of the Whole House, but I would like an understanding that general debate be closed on this proposition, say, in 30 minutes.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. There are gentlemen on this side who want time to speak on this bill. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] wants 10 minutes to speak on this bill. I believe I am entitled to an hour in my own right under the present proceedings on this bill, and I would desire to yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin on this bill. If the gentleman will reserve the balance of his time we can probably pass this bill without much trouble.

Mr. DENT. I was trying to reach some agreement. I know it is not exactly in order to reach an agreement in the Committee of the Whole House, but I hoped to reach some agreement by which we could finish discussion of this bill. The gentleman has suggested 30 minutes. If the gentleman has any other suggestion——

Mr. KAHN. I have no suggestion; the 30 minutes will satisfy me.

Mr. DYER. I would like to ask who is to have the 30 minutes?

Mr. WALSH. That does not mean exclusive of the five minutes for amendments?

Mr. DENT. Of course not.

Mr. WALSH. But 30 minutes for general debate.

Mr. DENT. Then I ask unanimous consent that general debate upon this bill be closed in 30 minutes.

Mr. RAYBURN. I want 10 minutes.

Mr. DENT. Half of it to be controlled by myself and half by the gentleman from California.

Mr. RAYBURN. Can I get 10 minutes of that time?

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BURNETT, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill S. 3736, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill S. 3736 be temporarily laid aside.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that Senate bill 3736 be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection?

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does the gentleman mean by "temporarily" that he intends to take up this bill to-day, because some of us want to be here when it comes up again?

Mr. DENT. I hardly think it possible to reach it to-day. We have 13 bills, and I propose to go on with the calendar and put that at the foot of the list.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

SALE OF CERTAIN WAR SUPPLIES.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 9900.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9900) authorizing the President during the existing emergency to sell war supplies, materials, and equipment heretofore or hereafter purchased, acquired, or manufactured by the United States.

Be it enacted, etc., That during the existing emergency the President be, and he hereby is, authorized, in his discretion, and upon such terms as he shall deem expedient through the head of any executive department, to sell any war supplies, materials, and equipment heretofore or hereafter purchased, acquired, or manufactured by the United States to any person, partnership, association, or corporation, or to any foreign State or Government engaged in war against any Government with which the United States is at war; and any moneys received by the United States as the proceeds of any such sale shall immediately become available as part of any existing appropriation for the support of that department, corps, or bureau which furnished the war supplies, materials, or equipment so sold.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Page 2, strike out all of lines 4, 5, 6, and 7 and insert "be covered into the Treasury of the United States and a full report of the sale shall be forthwith submitted to Congress."

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, this bill simply gives to the War Department the authority to sell property to our cobelligerents and also to dispose of useless property that the War Department may have on hand, and it is recommended by the War Department. I hope the bill will be passed. I wish to call attention to the fact that the Senate has passed a similar bill, and I ask to substitute the Senate bill with the amendment proposed by the Committtee on Military Affairs. I ask to substitute the Senate bill, together with the House amendment, for the House bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am informed that the Senate bill varies in some particulars from the House bill as reported other than the amendment which was reported by the committee. Will the gentleman inform the House wherein there is a difference. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate bill be reported.

Mr. DENT. I yield to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE].

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 3803) authorizing the President during the existing emergency to sell supplies, materials, equipment, or other property, heretofore or hereafter purchased, acquired, or manufactured by the United States, in connection with, or incidental to, the prosecution of the war.

Be it enacted, etc., That during the existing emergency the President be, and he hereby is, authorized, in his discretion, and upon such terms as he shall deem expedient, through the head of any executive department, to sell any supplies, materials, equipment or other property heretofore or hereafter purchased, acquired, or manufactured by the United States in connection with, or incidental to, the prosecution of the war, to any person, partnership, association, or corporation, or to any foreign State or Government engaged in war against any Government with which the United States is at war; and any moneys received by the United States as the proceeds of any such sale shall immediately become available as part of any existing appropriation for the support of that department, corps, or bureau which furnished the war supplies, materials, or equipment so sold.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. If the gentleman from Alabama will permit, I will explain the difference between the bills.

Mr. DENT. I will.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. If Members will take the bill H. R. 9900, and on page 1, line 6, strike out the word "war," and the final word in the line, "and," and on line 7, after the word "equipment," insert "or other property," and, again, in line 8, after the word "States," insert "in connection with or incidental to the prosecution of the war," they will find they have the only difference between the text of the two bills. And the title is amended also. The purpose of that was simply to amplify the definition of war supplies so that there would not be any too small construction put upon the purposes for which some very useful and necessary materials might be included.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman from Alabama yield?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman from Vermont inform the House the extent to which the Government will loan and advance machinery to the private manufacturers who will be engaged in the manufacture of munitions or supplies necessary for the Army?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The only information I have about it is that more or less vague and indefinite suggestion which we have had all through the period of war, namely, as fast and as much as will be necessary.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the War Department suffered much handicap in having their supplies manufactured because of the inability of private manufacturers to equip their plants with machinery, and, if so, to what extent? Of course, we all know that large numbers of private manufacturing establishments have received contracts from the War Department for the manufacture of supplies. This bill, as I take it, is to aid those manufacturers who have not the capital or the machinery that the Government may wish them to have with which to manufacture supplies.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I take it that, in general words, the idea is that this Government, entering the war without very many plants of its own and no plant adequate to take care of the demand, has been put to the expedient of taking over private plants, or taking, evidently, such possession of them as might be necessary for the operation of them, and in cases installing its own machinery or other facilities in it, so that, in a sense, they are quasi-Government plants to that extent. And by that fact, of course, it is evident that nobody could foresee exactly when and where and under what circumstances a necessary proposition of that kind might be considered. Thus there is no accurate data to be gathered by way of forecast.

Mr. STAFFORD. Of course, we all realize it is important in the prosecution of the war to supply machinery under contractural relations that will be taken over by the private manufacturers at the end of the war, to be used during the war for the necessary war supplies.

I ask the gentleman's further attention to the letter of Gen. Crowder, in which he says, in the second paragraph:

The second purpose is not clearly divulged in the language of the act.

That is rather ambiguous. I had difficulty in determining to what that referred.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. It is explained by the paragraph that immediately follows, as I understand it.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman believes that the reference in the third paragraph is to that particular matter?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Yes. I had the same difficulty and have come to exactly the same conclusion that I have just stated.

Mr. ELSTON. The gentleman is perfectly satisfied with the language in the Senate bill and prefers it to that in the House bill?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. We prefer it because it is more ample and gives less opportunity for quibbling in some emergencies.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman from Alabama yield?

Mr. DENT. I will.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I do not quite understand why the Judge Advocate General should have jurisdiction over a matter of this sort that has been referred to that department.

Mr. DENT. What is the question?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I simply asked why the Judge Advocate General should have been appealed to in a matter of this sort.

Mr. DENT. Does the gentleman refer to the letter in the report?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. DENT. I will state to the gentleman that the Judge Advocate General is the representative of the Secretary of War in legislative matters during the Secretary's absence.

Mr. LONGWORTH. May I ask if there is any one individual or board now in existence which has final jurisdiction over these matters of purchase of supplies or arranging for supplies?

Mr. DENT. I can not answer that. I am not familiar with it.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman wishes to offer an amendment, does he not?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves the previous question on the Senate bill with the House amendment.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the House amendment to the Senate bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time as amended by the House amendment, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DENT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the House bill (H. R. 9900) will lie on the table.

There was no objection.

TEMPORARY INCREASE, MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 9902.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9902) to amend section 8 of an act entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May 18, 1917.

Be it enacted, etc., That the last sentence of section 8 of an act entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May 18, 1917, be, and the same hereby is, amended to read as follows:

"Vacancies in the grades of the Regular Army resulting from the appointment of officers thereof to higher grades in the forces other than the Regular Army herein provided for shall be filled by temporary promotions and appointments in the manner prescribed by section 114 of the national-defense act, approved June 3, 1916, except that such promotions and appointments may be made by the President alone when such vacancies are in grades not above that of colonel; and officers appointed under the provisions of this act to higher grades in the forces other than the Regular Army herein provided for shall not vacate their permanent commissions or be prejudiced in their relative or lineal standing in the Regular Army.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman state whether the only difference that is sought to be remedied by this legislation is that in the National Army and these other branches of the service the law now provides that appointments above the grade of colonel must be affirmed and ratified by the Senate, and that is not so in reference to the Regular Establishment?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. And this seeks——

Mr. DENT. To allow the President to make appointments in the Regular Establishment up to and including the grade of colonel without confirmation by the Senate. They are merely temporary appointments, so as to put the temporary appointments in the Regular Establishment on the same footing with the appointments in the National Army. I move the previous question, Mr. Speaker.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DENT, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ARMY MINE-PLANTER SERVICE.

Mr. DENT. Now, Mr. Speaker, I call up House bill 9898.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9898) to establish in the Coast Artillery Corps of the Regular Army an Army mine planter service.

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter there shall be in the Coast Artillery Corps of the Regular Army an Army mine planter service, which shall consist, for each mine planter in the service of the United States, of one master, one first mate, one second mate, one chief engineer, and one assistant engineer, who shall be warrant officers appointed by and holding their offices at the discretion of the Secretary of War, and two oilers, four firemen, four deck hands, one cook, one steward, and one assistant steward, who shall be appointed from enlisted men of the Coast Artillery Corps under such regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe: Provided, That the Coast Artillery Corps is hereby increased by such numbers of warrant officers and enlisted men as may be necessary to constitute the force provided by this act: Provided further, That the annual pay of the warrant officers and enlisted men in the various grades established by this act shall be as follows: Masters, $1,800; first mates, $1,320; second mates, $972; chief engineers, $1,700; assistant engineers, $1,200; oilers, $432; firemen, $396; deck hands, $216; cooks, $360; steward, $540; assistant stewards, $288: And provided further, That warrant officers shall have such allowances as the Secretary of War may prescribe, and shall be retired and shall receive longevity pay, as now provided by law for officers of the Army, and that the enlisted force herein provided for shall receive the allowances and continuous-service pay now provided by law for enlisted men of the Army: Provided, That in computing length of service for retirement, and in computing longevity pay for warrant officers and continuous-service pay for the enlisted men authorized by this act, service on boats in the service of the Quartermaster Department or the Quartermaster Corps prior to the passage of this act shall be counted: And provided further, That during the continuation of the present emergency all enlisted men of the mine planter service of the Army of the United States in active service whose base pay does not exceed $21 per month shall receive an increase of $15 per month; those whose base pay is $24, an increase of $12 per month; those whose base pay is $30, $36, or $40, an increase of $8 per month; and those whose base pay is $45 or more, an increase of $6 per month: And provided further, That the increases of pay herein authorized shall not enter into the computation of continuous-service pay.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. DENT. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DENT. Now, Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] to explain this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, for several years the Coast Artillery Corps has asked for this legislation. The Committee on Military Affairs has not heretofore taken it up, but since we have gone into this war it is essential that this legislation be passed.

The Coast Artillery Service has charge of the mine planters of the country. The officers of that corps find now that they have a great deal of difficulty in getting civilians to work on the mine planters if the weather happens to be a little rough, or if they do not like the kind of work required in the service. In war we can not wait for the weather. We have to be ready to act immediately, and the War Department feels that by enlisting men in this service they can be ordered to do the work at any time, at any hour of the day or night, as occasion may arise.

It is a service, of course, that operates only along the coast of our country. I understand there are only nine mine-planter stations in the country. It is not always possible to get men in an emergency to do this necessary work. The passage of this bill will enable the War Department to enlist men for this service. Under the circumstances it is believed that we will have no further difficulty in operating mine planters at any hour of the day or night.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. I wanted to ask a question with reference to deck hands on these mine planters. I suppose they perform a character of work similar to that of a seaman upon that class of vessels?

Mr. KAHN. Not what you would call a seaman, but what they call a deck hand. He is a man who——

Mr. WALSH. Well, he would be the only seaman on board of the mine planter.

Mr. KAHN. The mine planters do not go out to sea for any great distance. They are operating in and near the harbors. We have deck hands on the ferryboats that ply in our ports. The men on the mine planters are like those deck hands.

Mr. WALSH. They go as far out to sea as these submarine chasers—these small boats?

Mr. KAHN. No. They simply mine the harbors.

Mr. WALSH. They might not go as far out to sea as it is intended that the submarine chasers should go, but they would go out as far as some of the submarine chasers actually do go. My inquiry was prompted by noting the small pay that was paid these deck hands—$216 a year.

Mr. KAHN. That is about the same pay they get for the same work in private service.

Mr. WALSH. On board these tugboats?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. And it is thought to fix the pay at the same rate they receive in private service, and then they get $180, I see, additional, according to the last proviso.

Mr. KAHN. Well, we have given all the employees of the Government some increase of pay through the legislation that was passed through this House.

Mr. WALSH. They get $15 a month if their base pay does not exceed $21. That would give the deck hands $396 per year. Now, I wanted to ask if they would also get commutation?

Mr. KAHN. No.

Mr. WALSH. Would they get this 30 or 40 cents a day for meals, as in the Navy?

Mr. KAHN. No. They are furnished their meals.

Mr. WALSH. And they do not have to contribute to that?

Mr. KAHN. No. They will get rations like the enlisted men of the Army.

Mr. WALSH. Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman a question with reference to the salary fixed for masters and for the mates. What did the committee have to compare with?

Mr. KAHN. That is about the salary they are getting now in that service.

Mr. WALSH. Would the gentleman state in what part of the country you can find the master of a tugboat that gets $1,800 a year?

Mr. KAHN. You will find that mine planters are located around Boston Harbor, and they are located around New York Harbor, and that they are located at the mouth of Chesapeake Bay. They are located on the Atlantic coast, as you go down the coast and around the Gulf shore; they are located on the Pacific coast around Puget Sound, and the harbor of San Francisco.

Mr. WALSH. Well, they have been in the service of the Government?

Mr. KAHN. Yes; as civilians.

Mr. WALSH. How does it compare with the compensation in private employment?

Mr. KAHN. Well, I imagine that it must be about the same, because these men are not enlisted. They are not commissioned. If they could get better pay in private employment they would probably not serve with the Government for less wages than they could get from private concerns.

Mr. WALSH. I have no desire to unduly consume time upon this measure, Mr. Speaker, but I wanted——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. WALSH. I move to strike out the last word, to permit the gentleman from California to answer a question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. WALSH. Who would be the warrant officers under this schedule?

Mr. KAHN. I presume they would be the same as warrant officers in the Navy, carpenters, and so on.

Mr. WALSH. But there are no carpenters provided for in this service.

Mr. KAHN. I know, but the warrant officers in the service would be doing the same class of work as the warrant officers in the Navy.

Mr. WALSH. Would a fireman be a warrant officer?

Mr. KAHN. I do not think so.

Mr. WALSH. Probably warrant officers would not be below the grade of assistant engineers.

Mr. KAHN. No; I do not think so. Probably the warrant officers would be those occupying the positions just below assistant engineers and not above that.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, if I understand the gentleman correctly, it is attempted here to create a new branch of the military service, something that has been desired for some little time.

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. But especially necessary during this present war?

Mr. KAHN. Quite right.

Mr. WALSH. And that in fixing the compensation and the benefits the committee have sought to make it compare with a similar service of the Navy, although this is to be under the jurisdiction of the Chief of the Coast Artillery?

Mr. KAHN. Quite right.

Mr. WALSH. And the committee have sought to put the compensations and benefits upon the same plane with those of men similarly engaged in the Navy?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. And with that end in view this increase in pay has been granted?

Mr. KAHN. Quite right.

Mr. WALSH. That is satisfactory. I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Speaker, may I in the time of the gentleman from Massachusetts ask a question?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. ROBBINS. Why is this service placed under the Army? Does not the Navy maintain a mine-sweeping fleet?

Mr. KAHN. The Navy does not maintain this mine-planting service.

Mr. WALSH. It is connected with the forts.

Mr. KAHN. It has always been under the Coast Artillery. This work is done within or immediately at the entrance of the harbors.

Mr. ROBBINS. It is all done by boats, is it not?

Mr. KAHN. It is all done by Coast Artillery boats. Mine planters, special boats built for that service. It has always been operated by the War Department. It has never been operated by the Navy.

Mr. ROBBINS. Will there not be some conflict between the Navy and the Army about this?

Mr. KAHN. None whatever, because the mine planters are operating now under the War Department.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. ROBBINS. I move to strike out the last two words. I want to find out further what increased expense this proposed new fleet of mine sweepers that the Army is going to operate is going to put upon the Government.

Mr. KAHN. These vessels are mine planters—not mine sweepers. As I understand, it is proposed to pay these men the wages they have been getting; but I explained at the beginning that these employees at the present time are civilians. They can leave at any moment, and they do frequently leave their positions. In war it is necessary to have these men when you need them. That is the purpose of the legislation.

Mr. ROBBINS. I understood that, but I ask now what increase of expense this proposes to entail upon the Government?

Mr. KAHN. As I understand it, there will be no increase of expense.

The SPEAKER. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, there is an amendment I would like to offer, to perfect the bill, in accordance with the present law. On page 3, line 4, after the figures "$30," I move to insert the figures "$33."

This amendment is suggested by the Secretary of War in order to conform to the present law as to the increase in the pay of privates.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DENT: Page 3, line 4, after the figures "$30," insert the figures "$33."

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word just for the purpose of asking to insert in the RECORD a short interview with a very prominent Army officer in regard to desk officers. I do this in order that both sides of this question may have a fair hearing.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD about desk officers. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT].

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. DENT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

REIMBURSEMENT OF EXPENSES OF ENLISTED MEN.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 9163) to provide for reimbursement of actual expenses or flat per diem for enlisted men traveling on duty under competent orders.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama calls up a bill, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. DENT. I ask unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to consider this bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter, under such regulations and within such maximum rates as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War, enlisted men may be reimbursed for actual expenses of travel, including subsistence and lodging, incurred while traveling under competent orders and not embraced in the movement of troops, or they may be paid a flat per diem therefor in lieu of such reimbursement.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, under the present law an enlisted man traveling, for instance, as a guard with a prisoner would get only $1.50 per day, which, of course, is not sufficient to pay the expenses of himself and his prisoner. The object of this bill is simply to pay him his actual expenses. That is all there is to it.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. DENT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

RESERVE OFFICERS' TRAINING CORPS.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 9098) to suspend for the period of the present emergency sections 45, 46, and 56 of "An act for making further and more effectual provisions for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama calls up a bill, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. DENT. I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that this bill will be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 45, 46, and 56 of "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, be, and they hereby are, suspended for and during the period of the present emergency, but for such period only, and that upon the termination of said emergency said suspension shall cease and terminate and said sections shall thereupon be and become reinstated and of the same force and effect as if this suspension had not been made.

SEC. 2. That during the present emergency the President be, and he hereby is, authorized to detail such number of officers of the Army of the United States, either active or retired, not above the grade of colonel, as may be necessary for duty as professors and assistant professors of military science and tactics at institutions where one or more units of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps are maintained; but the total number of active officers so detailed at educational institutions shall not exceed 1,000, and no officer shall be so detailed who has not had at least one year's commissioned service in the Army of the United States. Retired officers below the grade of lieutenant colonel so detailed shall receive the full pay and allowances of their grade, and retired officers above the grade of major so detailed shall receive the same pay and allowances as a retired major would receive under like detail.

SEC. 3. That during the present emergency the President be, and he hereby is, authorized to detail for duty at institutions where one or more units of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps are maintained such number of enlisted men, either active or retired, of the Army of the United States as he may deem necessary, but the active noncommissioned officers so detailed shall have had at least one year's active service, and the total number of such active noncommissioned officers so detailed shall not exceed 3,000, and shall be additional in their respective grades to those otherwise authorized for the Army of the United States. While detailed under the provisions of this section retired noncommissioned officers of the Army of the United States shall receive active pay and allowances.

SEC. 4. That during the present emergency such arms, tentage, and equipment as the Secretary of War shall deem necessary for proper military training shall be supplied by the Government to schools and colleges other than those provided for in section 47 of the national-defense act approved June 3, 1916, having a course of military training prescribed by the Secretary of War and having not less than 100 physically fit male students above the age of 14 years, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe; and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized during the present emergency to detail commissioned and noncommissioned officers of the Army of the United States to said schools and colleges, detailing not less than one such officer or noncommissioned officer to each 500 students under military instruction; but no officer or noncommissioned officer shall be so detailed who has not had at least one year's active service in the Army of the United States.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, let us have some explanation of this bill.

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman from Alabama define very briefly just exactly what is the Reserve Officers' Training Corps?

Mr. DENT. That is the training corps in the schools and colleges, provided by the national-defense act.

Mr. LITTLE. For what purpose, exactly? I know in a general way, but I should like a further explanation.

Mr. DENT. The bill speaks for itself. It is to provide officers to be instructors in schools which maintain one or more units of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps. It is for the training of officers so that they can be called into the service after they are trained. They agree and understand that they will be subject to be called into the service after they get the training. That is under the national-defense act.

Mr. LITTLE. And the Reserve Officers' Training Corps people are liable to be called into the service?

Mr. DENT. Undoubtedly.

Mr. KAHN. I think the gentleman from Alabama misunderstood the question of the gentleman from Kansas. The purpose of this legislation——

Mr. DENT. The gentleman from Kansas was not asking about the purpose of the legislation.

Mr. LITTLE. No; I am satisfied with the purposes of the legislation, but I thought it was a good time to get a little information.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. I will.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand this applies only to the schools and colleges which heretofore have had assignments of Army officers for the purpose of instruction.

Mr. DENT. Yes; and any that may be assigned.

Mr. BUTLER. How about the high schools, the public schools?

Mr. DENT. It depends upon whether the War Department recognizes them. The object of this bill is simply this, in a nutshell: Under the present law only officers of the Regular Establishment can be assigned to schools and colleges. The War Department anticipates that there will be a great many National Guard officers and National Army officers returned from the front injured in such a way that they could not go into the trenches and see active service, but can go to these schools and colleges; and it is simply to extend to the officers of the National Guard and the National Army the right of assignment to these schools and colleges so as to increase the number of available officers.

Mr. BUTLER. And if a high school should ask for a detail the War Department would be authorized to send an officer there?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Provided they have a sufficient number of pupils.

Mr. BUTLER. Yes. I want to say that in my home town we have the only universal military training found in the United States. Noncommissioned officers are drilling these boys—180 in number. I have a letter from the superintendent of the public schools this morning saying that one would scarcely appreciate the improvement in these high-school boys since they began training. It is the only place in the United States where such military training is had.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute the Senate bill on the same subject for the House bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to consider the Senate bill in lieu of the House bill.

Mr. WALSH. May I ask if they are identical?

Mr. DENT. They are except perhaps in a minor particular; the only difference is that in the House bill it refers to the present emergency while in the Senate bill it refers to the present war.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read the bill S. 3528, as follows:

An act (S. 3528) to suspend for the period of the present war sections 45, 46, and 56 of an act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 45, 46, and 56 of an act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, be, and they hereby are, suspended for and during the period of the present war, but for such period only, and that upon the termination of said war said suspension shall cease and terminate and said sections shall thereupon be and become reinstated and of the same force and effect as if this suspension had not been made.

SEC. 2. That during the present war the President be, and he hereby is, authorized to detail such number of officers of the Army of the United States, either active or retired, not above the grade of colonel, as may be necessary for duty as professors and assistant professors of military science and tactics at institutions where one or more units of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps are maintained; but the total number of active officers so detailed at educational institutions shall not exceed 1,000, and no officer shall be so detailed who has not had at least one year's commissioned service in the Army of the United States. Retired officers below the grade of lieutenant colonel so detailed shall receive the full pay and allowances of their grade, and retired officers above the grade of major so detailed shall receive the same pay and allowances as a retired major would receive under like detail.

SEC. 3. That during the present war the President be, and he hereby is, authorized to detail for duty at institutions where one or more units of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps are maintained such number of enlisted men, either active or retired, of the Army of the United States as he may deem necessary, but the active noncommissioned officers so detailed shall have had at least one year's active service, and the total number of such active noncommissioned officers so detailed shall not exceed 3,000, and shall be additional in their respective grades to those otherwise authorized for the Army of the United States. While detailed under the provisions of this section retired noncommissioned officers of the Army of the United States shall receive active pay and allowances.

SEC. 4. That during the present war such arms, tentage, and equipment as the Secretary of War shall deem necessary for proper military training shall be supplied by the Government to schools and colleges other than those provided for in section 47 of the national-defense act approved June 3, 1916, having a course of military training prescribed by the Secretary of War, and having not less than 100 physically fit male students above the age of 14 years, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe; and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized during the present war to detail commissioned and noncommissioned officers of the Army of the United States to said schools and colleges, detailing not less than 1 such officer or noncommissioned officer to each 500 students under military instruction; but no officer or noncommissioned officer shall be so detailed who has not had at least one year's active service in the Army of the United States.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. On page 3, section 4, line 17, it provides that the Secretary of War shall detail an instructor to each 500 students under military instruction. Above that, in the same section, it provides for schools having not less than 100 physically fit male students above the age of 14 years. Now, that seems to be inconsistent, and I think there should be an amendment providing for 1 for every 500 students or fraction thereof.

Mr. WALSH. If the gentleman will yield, the first part of the section only applies to tentage and equipment, and not to instructors.

Mr. DENT. Will the gentleman refer me to the line and section that he wishes to amend?

Mr. ROBBINS. Page 3, section 4, line 17 and line 24. I want to ask if that refers to tentage and equipment, as suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts, or to students?

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is right. The first part refers to tentage and equipment that the Secretary of War is allowed to furnish them for instruction. The latter part refers to the number of instructors. I believe it is entirely in accord with the provisions of the national-defense act. There is one instructor for every 500 students.

Mr. ROBBINS. And must be one for every 100 students at least——

Mr. KAHN. No; there is no school that has fewer than 100 that can get the instruction.

Mr. ROBBINS. That is the smallest number provided for?

Mr. KAHN. Precisely; and they can have one instructor for 100 pupils up to 500, and if they have more than 500 they can get an additional instructor.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DENT, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The House bill (H. R. 9098) was laid on the table.

INDEMNITY FOR DAMAGES CAUSED BY AMERICAN FORCES ABROAD.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 9901) to give indemnity for damages caused by American forces abroad.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That claims of inhabitants of France or of any other European country for damages caused by American military forces may be presented to any officer designated by the President, and when approved by such an officer shall be paid under regulations made by the Secretary of War.

SEC. 2. That claims under this statute shall not be approved unless they would be payable according to the law or practice governing the military forces of the country in which they occur.

SEC. 3. That hereafter appropriations for the incidental expenses of the Quartermaster Corps shall be available for paying the claims herein described.

SEC. 4. That this statute does not supersede other modes of indemnity now in existence and does not diminish responsibility of any member of the military forces to the person injured or to the United States.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FOSTER). The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to consider this bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole House. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN].

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, in the Army appropriation bill there has been for many years a provision for the appropriation of a lump sum to pay the damages caused in this country by our troops in their maneuvers—damages like broken windows, broken fences, tramping down crops, and so on. This simply attempts to do the same thing in foreign lands, where our troops are now operating, or in a country where they may happen to be. The War Department feels that in European countries, where the American troops do damage of any kind, it is very desirable that the inhabitants of these countries be speedily paid the damage that has been incurred.

This bill simply provides for such relief and gives the War Department the right to pay the damages as soon as they are investigated by an Army officer and recommended by him for payment.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. I notice in the letter from the Secretary of War he says that the proposed legislation will not supersede the one hundred and fifth article of war but will facilitate its enforcement. Can the gentleman state, briefly, what that article has to do with this?

Mr. KAHN. I believe that article allows payments of damages for property destroyed. Of course that is only operative in this country, and this will make it operative in a foreign country.

Mr. WALSH. Of course it is not intended that this legislation will permit a person having, for instance, a residence along the battle front, which has been blown up, to recover damages.

Mr. KAHN. Oh, no.

Mr. WALSH. It is only in the movement, operation, and maintenance of troops not engaged in actual battle?

Mr. KAHN. Exactly. It is for damages that occur by reason of the operation of troops in France going to or coming from the front or while in billets and not in action.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman's former statement was a little broader than that, and I thought he did not intend it.

Mr. KAHN. No; the law in this country now on the statute books only allows payment of damages done during maneuvers.

Mr. WALSH. But this provides that damages which are payable by the law of the country in which they are committed could be compensated for under this act; so that if in France certain damages are inflicted which under our law could not be paid for under this act compensation would have to be made.

Mr. KAHN. It is believed by the War Department that on account of the comity that exists between the two nations we ought to be willing to meet these things frankly, fully, and freely. The people of France, of course, cooperating with our troops, would probably look to the United States to pay them for damages which they could secure under their own law if their own soldiers had done the damage. I want to say to the gentleman that I think that in all nations the law is practically identical regarding damages done by troops during maneuvers.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Alabam a question, having in mind what the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] has just said that damages contemplated to be compensated in this way are confined to those of maneuvers, and only to maneuvers.

Mr. KAHN. Maneuvers and movements of troops.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I would include that in maneuvers—movements of troops back and forth. The gentleman intended to include utilization of land for training purposes?

Mr. KAHN. No.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. School purposes?

Mr. KAHN. No.

But assuming that is the import of the bill, there can be no objection to it, but that is not the language of the bill. The language is this:

That claims of inhabitants of France or of any other European country for damages caused by American military forces.

There is nothing to confine that to maneuver, nothing to confine it to anything, but it is as broad and sweeping as any language could possibly be—caused by American military forces.

Mr. DENT. I call the gentleman's attention to the language—

under regulations made by the Secretary of War.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. That extends only to the payment and not to the character of the injury that would justify a claim for damages.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the gentleman's attention to section 2.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Yes; I have read section 2, and that in one sense limits it, but not in the sense I mentioned—

That claims under this statute shall not be approved unless they would be payable according to the law or practice governing the military forces of the country in which they occur.

As they are likely all to occur in France or possibly some in Belgium, whether or not the case constitutes a claim depends upon the local law of France and Belgium, not upon the American law, and nobody here knows what the law of France or Belgium is or what it will be in a week or two weeks from now. That in one sense limits it, but not to the extent the criticism indicated. Let me call the gentleman's attention to this. The cases which may result in a claim are any acts performed by the American military forces, and these claims can be presented to any officer designated by the President; but here is the language—and when approved by such an officer shall be paid under regulations made by the Secretary of War.

The regulations of the Secretary of War extend only to the manner of payment and do not extend to anything else. This officer has no latitude. It does not say they may be paid, but they shall be paid.

Mr. KAHN. Under such regulations as the Secretary of War shall make. And let me call to the attention of the gentleman from Minnesota what the Secretary of War said on this subject.

The proposed law provides for the prompt payment, under such regulations as the Secretary of War may make or may cause to be made, of all claims for injury to persons and damage to property resulting from the presence of United States military sources in Europe. Gen. Pershing informs the War Department that the inability to pay claims for the injury due to and expenses caused by Government motor vehicles and other causes result in much hardship and injustice to French people and seriously injures the reputation of the American Army in France as compared with the reputation of the British forces.

And it is in order to obviate that complaint and to establish a more friendly feeling toward the American soldier in France that the War Department asks for this legislation.

Mr. DENT. As I understand the criticism of the gentleman from Minnesota is to "when approved by such an officer" over there it will be absolutely binding.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Absolutely.

Mr. DENT. Why?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I would like to have the gentleman point out wherein I am incorrect.

Mr. DENT. The language reads:

Damages caused by American military forces may be presented to any officer designated by the President, and when approved by such an officer shall be paid under regulations made by the Secretary of War.

Now, the regulations to be made by the Secretary of War cover the whole case.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I can not agree with the gentleman that assumption is not found in law, and I am sure the gentleman will agree with me——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield? I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be recognized to strike out the last word.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has had five minutes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I have not had any time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understood the gentleman was given recognition for five minutes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Then I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I am not going to vote against this, but I believe it is not quite exact or the correct thing at all, but I recognize the necessity of passing some such bill, and for that reason I am willing to vote for it, but I am not going to let it go by without pointing out wherein it is defective. Now, the gentleman's contention, as I understand it, is that these claims are to be presented under such regulations and rules as the Secretary of War may prescribe. Well, I submit that is not the language of the bill, and that could not be construed as the meaning of the bill for this reason.

Mr. DENT. Now, the gentleman is a good lawyer, and, to expedite matters, how would he improve the language?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I would not use that language at all.

Mr. DENT. I asked the gentleman how to improve it.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. This language says that these claims—

May be presented to any officer designated by the President and when approved by such officer shall be paid.

Now, that should be, "may be paid."

Mr. DENT. I will accept that amendment.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Under rules and regulations under authority of the Secretary of War. The regulations that the Secretary can make relate only to the manner and method of payment and not to adjudication of the claim.

Mr. DENT. I will accept the amendment.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Let me suggest to the gentleman that the amendment ought not to be accepted, and when I can get time I think I will be able to show it.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I only want one more moment and then I will give up the floor. It seems to me that this bill is designed to reach the situation pointed out by the Secretary of War quoted from Gen. Pershing's request and the language of the bill should restrict the operations of the bill to that class of subjects. Why is it necessary to make it so sweeping; why is it necessary to employ such universal language? Why not say, "That claims of inhabitants of France or of any other European country for damages caused by American military sources while engaged in maneuvering or transportation within the boundaries of France?" There you have got the whole thing.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Has the gentleman finished?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I would like to ask the gentleman's opinion of language of that kind.

Mr. DENT. I do not think that would hurt it at all, but I do not think it would accomplish anything.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Let me point out one thing further. Under the articles of war of this Government the commander of an army engaged in actual military operations can commandeer, he can take food for himself and horses and clothing and anything necessary to carry on his campaign. Now, you do not propose these claims be adjudicated in this manner, I am sure, but they would be included——

Mr. WALSH. Is it not included in the 105th article of war?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. This does not supersede that.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman allow me to suggest to the gentleman from Minnesota why this amendment would not meet a certain situation——

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. No; the bill does not say the one hundred and fifth article shall prevail.

Mr. KAHN. And why it may not be desirable to have that language in the bill?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I would like to ask the gentleman why.

Mr. KAHN. Here is my point: An officer is instructed to carry a dispatch to a certain place. He is not engaged in maneuvers. He starts off in an automobile, and going down the road at a fast rate on a dark night he runs over a pig belonging to a French peasant. Ought not that French peasant be paid for that loss?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. There is no question about it at all.

Mr. KAHN. And yet the limitation of the gentleman would preclude his getting pay for it.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. That language of limitations, if it does not cover the classification to which the gentleman refers, should be changed.

Mr. KAHN. Does not the gentleman think it would be better to leave those little details to the judgment of our officers on the other side, who are dealing with the inhabitants day after day?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I am willing to indorse that whole-heartedly, and to accomplish it we should have a language to cover such class of cases as shall be designated by rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of War. Then there can be no objection to it.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. What is the difference between that and what it is now?

Mr. DENT. In line 6——

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I do not care where you put it. The rules and regulations of the Secretary of War should relate back to the presentation and adjudication of the claims.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I think this bill is just exactly in the form it ought to be now, and I believe I can give very good reasons for it. The second section provides—

That claims under this statute shall not be approved unless they would be payable according to the law or practice governing the military forces of the country in which they occur.

That is according to the law and practice of the military forces in France. Now, if the forces in France were operating in this country, we would not want our laws to be abrogated. We would want compensation to be paid in accordance with our law, and that is what the French want, and that is what they ought to have. We could not afford to be otherwise than liberal in these matters. We can not afford to stick on small things when the law of France gives some compensation. We ought to be willing to give the same compensation to the people of that country that their own laws give to them. That limits and prescribes exactly what shall be paid.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman contends that there is no discrimination against our troops in France as against the British troops or the French troops or any other troops?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. None whatever. It is what the other armies are doing. If that is what the British troops are doing, as I understand they are; if that is what the French troops are compelled by their own Government to do, and it follows the custom of our own military forces, then being over in that country and fighting by their side, we ought to be willing to do that ourselves. I do not think the bill needs any change as it stands.

Now, some criticism was made because the bill provided that these claims shall be paid when approved by the proper officer. Why not? When we have had them submitted to some officer, and he has gone over them and examined them, and found that they conform to the French law and custom of the country, and then, after hearing the evidence he finds that they are just, why should they not then be paid? What does "approved" mean? It means found correct and proper.

Mr. KAHN. That is exactly what is done in this country, some particular officer passes upon the bill, and then the bill is paid if damage is done here.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I thank the gentleman for the suggestion.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield in that particular?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. There are numerous cases in tort caused by the actions of our soldiers in this country connected with their military duty, in the way of driving automobile trucks which come in collision with private automobiles, say, whereby the claimants are obliged to come to Congress for recognition of damages. I did not know until the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] just mentioned it, that there was any provision made for that character of claims.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I am not prepared to state——

Mr. KAHN. And if the officer or soldier is performing some military duty and damages property in this country, or, under this law, damages a person, the damage ought to be allowed and paid. In this country it is paid where damages of that kind occur.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman advise the House whether in case of a collision of an Army automobile truck driven on the highway with a privately owned vehicle there is any provision or regulation?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If the gentleman will pardon me——

Mr. STAFFORD. Is there any provision or regulation for the payment of that character of claim through departmental channels?

Mr. KAHN. I believe it can be paid.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am told there are many claims pending before the Committee on Claims of just that character.

Mr. KAHN. I understand where the damage is slight that they are invariably taken up and adjusted by the department out of the lump-sum appropriation that is made for that purpose.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I do not care anything about that. The point I am trying to make is that this provides for compensation in the same manner, and according to the law and custom of the country in which our troops are operating. The same rule applies to British troops and to their own troops, and in fairness and justice we ought to be willing to do the same thing. And even if we should go a little beyond what we would consider proper in this country, it seems to me that we can under no circumstances afford to have any difficulty or bad feeling created. It is of the highest importance that good feeling should exist between the inhabitants of France and other friendly countries where our troops may be operating, and even if we should pay some claim that was somewhat exaggerated, or one for which no liability would arise in our own country, it would be well worth all it cost in sustaining the friendly feeling that now exists between us and those who are our allies in fact if not in name.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, none of the gentlemen have touched what seems to me to be a very loosely drawn portion of this bill. Under this bill, interpreted by any rule of law, you have provided for the claims of the German people. If our Army stays in France, of course, it would only apply to France, but we legislate on the theory that they are going to Berlin. If you run over a pig in Germany, under the laws of that country you would have to pay for it. It says:

Claims of inhabitants of France or any other European country—

Which is Germany—

for damages caused by American military forces.

God knows we hope we will cause them a whole lot. We expect to go there.

Now, "claims under this statute shall not be approved unless they would be payable according to the law or practice governing the military forces of the country in which they occur." They will occur in Germany, and under their law we would be liable; and that is the kind of a law you are making.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. What statute has the German in his country?

Mr. WALSH. Under what theory does the gentleman contend that a law of the United States heretofore made or hereafter made during the continuance of this war includes our enemies?

Mr. LITTLE. Because it says so.

Mr. WALSH. No. The gentleman is entirely wrong.

Mr. DENT. I would like to ask the gentleman this question: If he thinks any commanding officer of the American forces will ever approve a claim against us by Germany?

Mr. LITTLE. That is the answer that I expected. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] suggests that there is no theory under which it can be done. There never was until the committee brought in a bill authorizing it and suggesting it. That is the kind of a bill you have brought in.

A gentleman on the other side asked whether it was possible that anybody who has any sense would approve such a claim under this measure. If you pass this bill, the Congress of the United States will have authorized it. Has not this House got as much sense as you expect the American commanding officer to have? You are depending on the American officers to see to it that the law you pass is not enforced. Thank God, the American officer will have sense enough to see that it is not. But have we not sense enough to pass a law that a boy will not break if he does his duty?

Mr. DENT. Let me remind the gentleman that we have forces in England, in training in England, and we may send some forces into Italy.

Mr. LITTLE. Yes; and we are going to have some in Germany pretty soon, I hope.

Mr. DENT. I hope so. This bill was drawn by the War Department.

Mr. LITTLE. That does not improve things any. I suspected that.

Of course, gentlemen, I realize that no American officer is going to enforce this particular feature that I suggest might be enforced, but that is no answer to my criticism. It is the duty of this House to draw its statutes so that they will not be open to misconstruction. We must not leave it to the officers. This House must have as good judgment as the officer is expected to have. When you are about it, why not frame it so as to meet the situation? The bill should read, "The claims of the inhabitants of France or any other European country except the enemies of this country," or some little phrase like that. Then you will not have made yourselves ridiculous for all time.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. Would an officer or any other American citizen be guilty of giving aid and comfort to the enemy by doing the very thing you suggest, or would he not?

Mr. LITTLE. You are going to vote for a bill to do it.

Mr. GORDON. Certainly not. You could not do the thing you suggest without being guilty of treason.

Mr. LITTLE. What are we doing, then? We are simply depending upon the officer to safeguard the place you have left open. You authorize him to commit treason and rely on him not to. To think that the boy has sense enough to see that this is not done is not a good reason why we should not guard against it. When you draw your legislation, gentlemen, you should draw it so that it says what we mean and means what we say, so that such criticisms would not arise.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. ROBBINS. Does not the gentleman think that an amendment, right after the word "country," reading something like this, "with whom we are at war," would do what is desired?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes; that is what I said.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. What would you do in the case of Turkey?

Mr. ROBBINS. Yes; and what would you do in the case of Spain?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. We are really at war with Turkey, but technically at peace. Spain is a neutral country. If we saw the Turkish troops alongside of German troops, we would kill the Turks as well as the Germans, would we not?

Mr. LITTLE. Of course; and this applies to Bulgaria and Turkey and Switzerland and Holland.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the bill first, and then the amendment.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9901) to give indemnity for damages caused by American forces abroad.

Be it enacted, etc., That claims of inhabitants of France or of any other European country for damages caused by American military forces may be presented to any officer designated by the President, and when approved by such an officer shall be paid under regulations made by the Secretary of War.

SEC. 2. That claims under this statute shall not be approved unless they would be payable according to the law or practice governing the military forces of the country in which they occur.

SEC. 3. That hereafter appropriations for the incidental expenses of the Quartermaster Corps shall be available for paying the claims herein described.

SEC. 4. That this statute does not supersede other modes of indemnity now in existence and does not diminish responsibility of any member of the military forces to the person injured or to the United States.

Amendment offered by Mr. ROBBINS: Page 1, line 4, after the word "country," insert "with whom we are at war."

Mr. DENT. Well, Mr. Speaker, in order that gentlemen may write the bill to suit themselves, I hope that amendment will be adopted. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts object to it?

Mr. WALSH. Surely.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Speaker, the amendment is only intended to clarify what the law seeks to accomplish. The purposes of the bill are perfectly proper. It simply means to pay damages where damages are allowed in the countries where the American Expeditionary Forces may be operating and commit those damages. But if those damages are committed in a country like Spain, a neutral country, so far as we are concerned, or in a country like Turkey, with which we are not at war, but with which we are hostile, to all intents and purposes, we ought not to pay damages in a case of that kind, should such damage occur to Turkey; not only in the countries of our allies or neutrals, but also in countries with which we are at war may damages arise which would be covered by this bill as it now is.

Now, we shall invade Germany, no doubt, and there will be damages that will be committed by the movement of troops or by the transmission of supplies, and matters of that kind. This bill ought to be clear as to the character of damages we are to pay under its provisions and the persons who are entitled to claim under its terms.

Now, to illustrate by referring to something with which I am familiar, in the National Guard of Pennsylvania every year when we were in camp we damaged private property, such as passing over cultivated fields in the maneuvers and breaking down fences in the march, more or less. Those damages are all examined into and paid by the quartermaster's department, who settles and pays them immediately after the damages occur.

I suggest that in this bill provision should be made for some officer to conduct the investigation and ascertain the facts, and then pay the damages as the evidence would show it should be paid. We ought to define in this statute the countries and citizens that are entitled to make such claims.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBBINS. Yes.

Mr. REAVIS. The damages done by the National Guard are done in our own country. How is our Army to get into a neutral country?

Mr. KAHN. By violating the neutrality of that country.

Mr. ROBBINS. They could get in by a movement, either in advance or otherwise, as military strategy may require at the time.

Mr. REAVIS. Not without violating the neutrality of that country. It would be tantamount to a declaration of war if we did get in, so that there can be no damages in a neutral country.

Mr. ROBBINS. This law ought to be so clear that it should not be necessary to come to Congress to amend it in the near future when any emergency would arise.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. If we violate the neutrality of a country we would be at war with it, and consequently this act would not apply.

Mr. ROBBINS. That would not be war. We could invade a country and commit damage and not be at war, or even cause war.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Germany went into Belgium and violated her neutrality. Was not that considered an act of war and resented as such?

Mr. ROBBINS. Because she did not get the right to go in. She invaded by force, which is an act of war.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. It was the going in which constituted the act of war.

Mr. ROBBINS. But the kind of case which is considered here is one where our Army would go in without any hostile intention. Suppose we sent an army through Canada, or if our port of entry was temporarily interrupted in France and we would move through Spain. It would not be war unless we forcibly entered; yet we might cause damage, and such should be paid under this bill.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. That is exactly what Belgium was asked to do—to let the German Army go through Belgium for the purpose of attacking France.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, while it is not likely to happen, and no such thing is contemplated, and I sincerely hope no such circumstances will arise as to compel our troops ever to seek refuge either in Spain or in Switzerland, it is conceivable that they might do so. In the Franco-Prussian war of 1870 large bodies of troops went into Switzerland to avoid capture.

Mr. ROBBINS. These troops went across the boundary not for war but safety. Such damage should be paid.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Now, they might have done damage there, and naturally the Government of France would be responsible for it and pay for it.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Would the gentleman suggest that this Congress is now in a mood to prepare against the possible defeat and flight of our Army?

Mr. SLAYDEN. No.

Mr. ROBBINS. No; that is not the thought at all. We are here endeavoring to prepare an act of Congress and not speculating about our Army. It will not be defeated. It will never retreat.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I distinctly stated in the beginning that it was unlikely to happen, and that it contemplated no such thing, but it is conceivable that they might go into Switzerland.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. It is not conceivable to me.

Mr. KAHN. The words "the claims of inhabitants of France or of any other European country" would take care of Switzerland and Spain.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I am not objecting——

Mr. ROBBINS. It should be clarified by inserting the words "with which we are not at war," which is the amendment I propose, after the word "country."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ROBBINS]. While we are at war with Germany and her allies, I do not think any act we pass can be susceptible of conferring any benefit upon the inhabitants of Germany. It seems to me that is the height of absurdity. We are at war with Germany, and we are at war with her allies, and any law that we have heretofore passed, or that we may pass now or in the future, can not confer any benefit upon our enemies. By every rule of interpretation and by every rule of international law the legislation that we pass can be interpreted only as conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon our own people, or upon people who are associated with us in fighting the common enemy. Of course, we can not include Germany in this act, and if anybody sought to advocate or further a claim for damages inflicted upon property in Germany or in Austria, or owned by Germans or Austrians in any other land, by the American Expeditionary Forces, it would be seeking certainly not to assist our own troops, but would be indirectly aiding the troops or the cause of Germany. We have already passed an act taking care of alien property within our own borders, or within our own jurisdiction.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Of course, this is an improbable contingency, but is it not a fact that the bill as it stands might be construed as providing that we would be liable for damages if our troops destroyed any property in Turkey or Bulgaria?

Mr. WALSH. No; I believe not.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Why not?

Mr. WALSH. Because, although we have not declared war against Turkey or Bulgaria, we are at war with Germany and with nations associated with Germany in this war; and while we have not specifically declared war against Turkey or Bulgaria, they are in such a situation, under the declaration of war, and under the contest which is now being waged, that we could not confer any benefit by legislation upon Turkey or Bulgaria.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Congress has definitely decided, as I believe wrongly, not to declare war against Turkey or Bulgaria at present, and therefore under this law we would be liable in damages for any injuries committed by our troops against the property of those countries.

Mr. WALSH. Congress has decided not to declare war specifically against Turkey or Bulgaria, but the military authorities are not precluded thereby from blowing up Turkish property or destroying a Turkish force if they get in our way; and if the military authorities do that it is war, and this law would not give Turkey or any of its inhabitants any right to claim damages.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Who decides that it is an act of war? Under this bill we are liable in damages.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I do not think it requires any legislation to lay down the principle that no country which is opposing the forces of the United States in this present emergency needs to be explicitly exempted or taken out of legislation which is passed to confer rights and privileges upon other people.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WALSH. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Assuming that the American troops in an offensive movement cross over and move upon German territory and destroy civilian property in the course of the operation. Does the gentleman mean to say that Congress could not, if it desired, pass a law that would give compensation to private citizens of Germany for the loss of such property?

Mr. WALSH. I suppose Congress could go through the form of putting such legislation on the statute books, but I have grave doubts as to whether any such legislation as that could properly be enforced.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Why could it not be enforced?

Mr. WALSH. And also I have serious doubts as to whether or not that legislation would be consistent with the action of this country in prosecuting the struggle under its declaration of war.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The gentleman and I are not at all far apart on that particular point, but I am directing this to the gentleman's opinion as a lawyer. Has Congress the power, and is it competent to pass a law that would be binding upon the people of the United States, to compensate civilians in Germany for private property necessarily destroyed in the course of the military operations performed by our troops on the soil of Germany?

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman mean during this war?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. During this or any other war.

Mr. WALSH. I do not think Congress can do so, in view of its declaration of war.

Mr. SLAYDEN. It would not, anyway.

Mr. CRAGO. Let me call the gentleman's attention to the fact that this is not a bill making any new claims against the Government. It is only a bill providing how bills can be paid at once, in order that they may not accumulate and come in as omnibus claims in the future.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; and to put our troops upon the same footing as French troops and the other troops of our allies.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. DENT. I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to the final passage.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Will the gentleman withhold that motion?

Mr. ROBBINS. The bill has not been read yet.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I have an amendment that I want to offer.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is not the bill being read under the five-minute rule?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill is being read for amendment.

Mr. ROBBINS. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROBBINS. Is it not the proper thing to dispose of my amendment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore Yes; after the previous question is ordered.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I make the point of order that the motion of the gentleman from Alabama is not in order, because we are reading the bill under the five-minute rule and the bill has not been completed.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, the motion of the gentleman from Alabama is in order. When the bill is under consideration under the five-minute rule that is not the first reading. He can move the previous question and cut off any further reading or debate of the bill under the five-minute rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia has stated the rule correctly. The question is on ordering the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Is that motion to the entire bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The entire bill.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. But the entire bill has not been read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order is overruled, and the question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama for the previous question.

The question was taken, and the motion for the previous question was rejected.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this bill and amendments thereto be closed in 10 minutes, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] to have 5 minutes and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DEWALT] 5 minutes.

Mr. REAVIS. Reserving the right to object, I would like five minutes.

Mr. DENT. I will make it 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that all debate on this bill shall close in 15 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ROBBINS].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 4, after the word "country," insert "not an enemy or ally of an enemy."

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I have listened with careful attention to the arguments that have been made here in regard to the proposed amendment by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and I am clearly of the opinion as a lawyer that there is considerable force in the suggestion that the bill should be amended in order to clarify it. While it may be true as a matter of law, both in our country and as international law, that you can not enforce a claim against the United States for any damage done in a belligerent nation, to wit, a belligerent nation against the United States, nevertheless this bill proclaims to the inhabitants of France or any other European country that damage caused by American military forces may be personally adjudicated by those officers. Now, the phraseology of the bill is very wide, to wit, "the inhabitants of France or any other European country," which of itself would include Turkey and include every other nation which is now a belligerent nation, although not at war with us actually, but an ally of Germany. Turkey is an ally of Germany; Roumania is now an ally of Germany; Russia, if you please, by reason of the revolution, is also ipso facto an ally of Germany; and, for the life of me, I can not see the justice of this proposition, if these European nations, although we are not actually at war with them, if they suffer damage by the passage of our troops over their territory we should be obliged to pay for it. Therefore I propose to insert the words "not an enemy or an ally of an enemy," and I think that is a substantial amendment.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEWALT. I will.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman concludes that it is necessary to instruct the military officers to be careful and not approve claims of people who are fighting us?

Mr. DEWALT. I would reply to the gentleman in this way, that I believe no man is harmed much by careful instructions unless he is a man who thinks he knows it all.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEWALT. I will.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I think the gentleman's amendment is a proper one. At present we are simply concerned with France, and would it not be sufficient and serve all purposes if we struck out the word "any other European country"?

Mr. DEWALT. I think not; I think the phraseology in my amendment meets the question concisely, that we shall not pay any damages to an enemy country or the ally of an enemy country, and that clears up the whole situation, in my judgment.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEWALT. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I want to commend the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I had prepared an amendment, but I think the gentleman's is better than mine. His covers the allies of the enemy, so the objection that we have not declared war against some countries will not lie against his amendment. While I think the amendment is not necessary, still I believe that acts of Congress ought to be clear and explicit, and the gentleman's amendment makes it so.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the attention of the gentleman from Alabama, and as he is not at this moment present I will address myself to the other members of the Military Affairs Committee. The objection which has been discussed of late is whether or not the terms of this act are broad enough to confer benefits upon citizens of a nation with whom we are at war. That is but one of the features that I think open to criticism, as far as the language in the first paragraph is concerned.

In addition to that this language is so comprehensive that it covers all classes of claims that may be comprehended between paragraph 1 and paragraph 2. Now I notice some gentlemen on the Military Affairs Committee are constantly asserting that the design of this is to do so and so. That suggestion is not troubling any of us. We are all agreed that it is properly the design, but the question is, Does it not only do that, but do a lot more? Seriously, I think it does; and too much more to make it safe and sane legislation. I want to suggest to the chairman of the committee [Mr. DENT] and to the other members of the committee that instead of the language in paragraph 1 we use language like this, and I am not captious about it; I am not going to argue it for an hour or a minute, but I am merely going to suggest it and leave it, but I do think it improves the bill very materially. Instead of the language in the bill, insert the following:

"That such classes of claims as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War of inhabitants of France or of any other European country for damages caused by American military forces may, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of War may prescribe, be presented to and adjudicated by any officer designated by the President, and when approved by such officer may be paid in such manner as the Secretary of War may direct."

That obviates two or three defects in the bill. In the first place, it enables the Secretary to confine the operation of the bill to that class of cases which have been enumerated, and, in the second place, it enables the officer to adjudicate the claims. The language of the bill does not permit adjudication. The language of the bill says that when the claim is presented, if it is a valid claim, it shall be paid.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. Does the gentleman claim that there is anything in this bill that precludes the Secretary of War from prescribing regulations as to the manner in which these claims shall be allowed and paid?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Most certainly.

Mr. GORDON. The gentleman is entirely mistaken about that.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I am not. If the gentleman can understand the English language and will read the first paragraph, he will come to a different conclusion.

Mr. GORDON. The method of adjudication is not prescribed in the bill. The regulations are authorized and prescribed there.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The gentleman has not read the bill.

Mr. GORDON. Oh, yes; I have.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. As usual, he is talking without having knowledge of the facts before him. We thrashed that out an hour ago, and it was clearly demonstrated that the rules and regulations that the Secretary may prescribe were confined to the payment and not to the presentation.

Mr. GORDON. Does not the method of payment include the presentation and adjudication?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. It never has yet.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FOSTER). The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DEWALT].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I have in my hands a circular that is being very generally circulated throughout the Middle West. I think this is about the tenth that has been sent to me from my district. It is a matter so appalling in its consequences that I think public attention should be called to it. It is apparent to all of us that a crisis has been reached in the world's affairs. I grow somewhat apprehensive at times as to whether or not the forces of the allied powers without the aid of America will be able to defeat the German Military Establishment. It seems to me that victory for the allies is largely dependent upon the contributions made by this Nation both in the way of supplies and in the way of soldiers. With civilization utterly dependent upon us any discouragement is almost treasonable. This circular is gotten out by one who signs herself Jessica Henderson, recording secretary of the National Antivivisection Federation (Inc.). It is being circulated, as I understand it, in the homes of the Middle West. It is causing the gravest dread and anxiety among the parents of the Nation, and I think is a matter to which the attention of the country should be directed, and especially the attention of the Department of Justice.

I am not conscious that I have uttered a partisan word in this body in the last year or that I have cast a partisan vote. There was a time last fall when I addressed myself briefly to the situation at Camp Funston, but my statement was to call attention to an existing evil and to suggest a remedy. I am glad to say that the conditions that then existed have been removed. But here is a circular going out into the homes of the Middle West, and I shall not take the time to read it now, to the effect that thousands and thousands of our soldiers are being killed by the treatment they receive in the cantonments. It contains such sentences as the following:

> The thousands of deaths deliberately inflicted upon our soldiers and sailors has passed the scandal line. It has become a tragedy.

Mark that phrase—

> The thousands of deaths deliberately inflicted.

Of course, no one could inflict these deaths but the Nation. It contains the most extravagant and absolutely untruthful statements that it is possible to put on paper. I have personally investigated some of the camps adjacent to Washington and some of the camps far removed from Washington. I know that never a time since the morning stars first sang together has any soldier been guarded as tenderly and as carefully as the American soldier is to-day. [Applause.] This cruel and false statement is going into the homes of the Nation and creating anxiety almost indescribable. The mothers and fathers of Nebraska——

Mr. COX. Is it going through the mail?

Mr. REAVIS. I do not know how it is going. This one was sent to me through the mail by one of the most patriotic and responsible men in my State.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is this one of these antivaccination circulars?

Mr. REAVIS. Yes; that is what it is reputed to be—that by reason of innoculation the Government is deliberately killing thousands of soldiers in the cantonments. The circular contains such statements as this:

> According to the recent statement of a lieutenant from Massachusetts his regiment received six innoculations in one day, and the men fell like dead men on the floor as they were trying to get to their beds. Not a few of them but many became dead men. On one train coming east from Kansas a man reported eight dead soldiers. These were husky Kansas farmers—before innoculation.

It is filled with extravagant statements of that kind and is exciting great apprehension on the part of the fathers and mothers who have sons in these camps. Nothing could be further from the truth. I was reading just yesterday of the treatment given our boys over in France, of their recreation camps located in the most beautiful section of that most beautiful country; far removed from the excitements and temptations of great cities; under the charge directly of the Young Men's Christian Association, so that no painted women, no whited sepulchers, are permitted within miles of the place.

The finest sort of recreation and intellectual entertainment is given to the boys. American women of the best type are their associates. I have seen them in Washington, and Washington is merely typical of the other cities where the civil population is giving all of its time and attention in order that proper and moral recreation and entertainments shall be given to the boys. I think the attention of the Department of Justice ought to be drawn to such circulars as these. It is absolutely unpatriotic. If the lady who signed this is not in the employ of those who are responsible for the German propaganda and the spy system that has been rife in this country she ought to be, because she is doing more to discourage those who remain at home by such stuff as this than anything that has been called to my attention. Personally, I intend to see that this document gets into the hands of the department, to give it an opportunity to investigate this so-called association and stop it, as it ought to be stopped, at once. I am very glad indeed, inasmuch as I occupied this floor last fall for a moment in calling attention to the conditions that then existed at Camp Funston, to say that that condition has been removed. I do not know of a single cantonment in the United States to-day where the boys are not given the most careful, the most tender, the most solicitous care, and statements of this kind, untrue as they are, at this particular time, when we are calling for an additional draft, are absolutely unpatriotic and almost treasonable in their effect.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman permit?

Mr. REAVIS. Gladly.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. As I understand it, this woman refers to thousands of deaths taking place in our cantonments.

Mr. REAVIS. Let me read the exact statement.

The thousands of deaths deliberately inflicted upon our soldiers and sailors has passed the scandal line—it has become a tragedy.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. And the facts are that the total mortality of the camps from all causes does not reach into the thousands.

Mr. REAVIS. Of course they do not, but what sort of effect can statements of this kind have going to homes where the facts are not known. [Applause.]

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DENT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid upon the table.

AMENDING ACT FOR THE NATIONAL DEFENSE.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill S. 2917.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 2917) to amend section 15 of the act approved June 3, 1916, entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," as amended by the act approved May 12, 1917, entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes."

Be it enacted, etc., That section 15 of the act approved June 3, 1916, entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," as amended by the act approved May 12, 1917, entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes," be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 15. Chaplains.—The President is authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, chaplains in the Army at the rate of not to exceed, including chaplains now in the service, 1 for each 1,200 officers and men in all branches of the Military Establishment, with rank, pay, and allowances as now authorized by law: Provided, That there shall be assigned at least one chaplain for each regiment of Cavalry, Infantry, Field Artillery, and Engineers."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CRAGO], a member of the committee, desires to be recognized on the bill.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Speaker, in explanation briefly of the purposes of the bill I want to submit a few observations on the position of Army chaplain. The origin of the office of capellanus, or chaplain, is traced to the appointment of persons to watch sacred objects. In times of war in older days many of the sacred emblems belonging to the country were carried by the army into the field and were guarded by the chaplain. The functions of that office have been extended until they now include in practically all of the armies of the civilized world the moral and spiritual care of the men who compose the army. Because of the fact that many persons seemingly are not aware of the vast field of endeavor which opens itself to the Army chaplain, and because we are now asking to increase the number of chaplains, I thought it might be proper to say a few words regarding the great work that these men are doing and the necessity for an increase in their number. I agree thoroughly with the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS] in his statement that never in the history of the world have soldiers been so carefully guarded in their living conditions as the men who compose our present Army. Heretofore we have had one chaplain for approximately every 1,000 men in the Army. Now, under our increase we have but one chaplain for approximately each 3,000 men in the Army. It is not necessary to make an increase in exact accordance with the increase of the Army, but it should be an approximate increase. My limited military experience has always been in an infantry regiment, but I think practically the same condition obtains and will be found in all organizations of the Army. Other than the adjutant of the regiment I know of no officer whose duties are more important or more varied in their character than the duties and the opportunities of a real busy Army chaplain. Contrary to the general opinion he is not in any respect a superfluous officer, carried on the roll for mere formality, but his work is far-reaching and can be productive of very, very much good in maintaining the morale of the Army. If by chance some one has accepted a commission as chaplain with the mistaken idea that he has secured a soft berth, if he is a real man and finds himself in that position, in touch with young men who have left home and loved ones to battle for their country, he will soon awaken to a realization of the fact that the possibilities of his work are almost without limit, and if the right man is filling that place he can gain the confidence of the men in matters which they will not reveal to other officers. The chaplain has it in his power to be a great help to the Army, and the knowledge that these men are in touch with the boys who have been parted from home ties and restraints is very comforting to the parents of our soldiers and helps console them in their separation. I believe we should have a major chaplain for each regiment and an assistant for each battalion, as our regiments are divided into three battalions.

These battalions now consist of about the same number of men as in former years composed a regiment. In many instances I have found young men in the Army camps and in the cantonments who are preparing themselves for the ministry or for Young Men's Christian Association work, serving in the ranks as privates or as noncommissioned officers, and who are rendering valuable help to the chaplains. They gain the confidence of the men, cheer them in their work, help them over the rough places, and I would suggest that many of these men from the ranks who have done this proficient work should be the men who would be commissioned in these new positions as Army chaplains. They would supplement the work of the present chaplains to a nicety.

Referring again to the derivation of the word "chaplain," may we not say that we as a Nation are sending into battle our most precious possessions, and that we should throw every safeguard around the morals of these brave men who go out to fight our battles? We have done well so far in providing for these things. They have been given entertainment; the Young Men's Christian Association has done wonderful work, but sooner or later these soldiers now in camps will go to the front, and when they meet the shock of battle, when the test of wounds and disease comes, these chaplains will be with them and will be the ones who will minister to these men in a mental way, just as our doctors aid them in a physical way; and it will be a great consolation to know that when a young man falls on the field of battle, gives up his life, or makes the supreme sacrifice, as he breathes his last in the hospital, that there at his side will be the loyal chaplain of the regiment ready to convey his last words to the folks at home. I think we are only doing our duty when we increase this corps of men who are doing such wonderful work. [Applause.]

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, is the bill ready for amendment now?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is ready to be read.

Mr. ANTHONY. I would like to offer an amendment to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 2917) to amend section 15 of the act approved June 3, 1916, entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," as amended by the act approved May 12, 1917, entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes."

Be it enacted, etc., That section 15 of the act approved June 3, 1916, entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," as amended by the act approved May 12, 1917, entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes," be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 15. Chaplains: The President is authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, chaplains in the Army at the rate of not to exceed, including chaplains now in the service, one for each 1,200 officers and men in all branches of the Military Establishment, with rank, pay, and allowances as now authorized by law: Provided, That there shall be assigned at least one chaplain for each regiment of Cavalry, Infantry, Field Artillery, and Engineers."

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ANTHONY: Insert after the word "Engineers," in line 13, page 2, the following:

"And provided further, That the persons appointed under this act shall be duly accredited by some religious denomination or organization and of good standing therein."

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the amendment is to broaden the law now on the statute books permitting the appointment of chaplains in the Army. The language of the present law, as I remember it, confines the appointment of the chaplains to members of certain recognized religious denominations, and to men having certain qualifications in regard to being regularly ordained ministers. The purpose of the amendment is to make possible the appointment of chaplains from such beliefs as do not ordain their ministers, for instance, members of the Christian Science organization. A number of very worthy men are ready to undertake service in the Army as chaplains belonging to worthy organizations such as this, and would be made eligible to appointment if this amendment was adopted. It simply puts the matter up to the appointing power as to the men it shall recognize. There is no question but what certain members of the Christian Science faith are well qualified to be chaplains in the Army, and would do as great good and as efficient work as members of other sects and denominations. And I offer the amendment in the hope that the House will broaden the scope of the present law.

Mr. GORDON. Would your amendment be broad enough to include Mohammedans?

Mr. ANTHONY. If the President would find a good one he could certainly exercise his discretion even to do that.

Mr. GORDON. Or a Buddhist or all other heathen denominations?

Mr. ANTHONY. In this country we are very liberal in the construction of religious matters, and, for instance, if we recruited a regiment of Filipino Moros a Mohammedan chaplain might be thought of.

Mr. LOBECK. Would it also include men accredited to the Salvation Army, or would the old law do that?

Mr. ANTHONY. I will ask the chairman of the committee in regard to that.

Mr. DENT. The requirements are, as I recall, to the effect that they must be regularly ordained ministers of some well-recognized religious denomination.

Mr. ANTHONY. The duties of the present-day chaplain go beyond the preaching of sermons by regularly ordained ministers. We want men who, beside their religion, have big hearts in their breasts to help the men solve the human problems that come to them.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. I will.

Mr. KAHN. I think it is advisable to inform the House how chaplains have been appointed heretofore. The Catholic Church has a representative here in this city who speaks for the church in the appointment of Catholic chaplains. He is Father O'Hern, of the Catholic University. The Protestant denominations have a representative here in Washington, and he makes all suggestions regarding the appointment of Protestant chaplains in the Army. The department had invariably consulted these two men about the appointment of chaplains before we got into the war. Since then, of course——

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. I just want to make this explanation. I simply want to inform the committee what the practice was before we got into the war. But now, of course, the Army has expanded enormously. There are enough soldiers of other religious denominations in the various branches of the service to warrant the appointment of some chaplains other than Protestants or Catholics. I believe one or two Jewish chaplains have already been appointed, and it is very desirable to allow, as my colleague on the committee [Mr. ANTHONY] stated, a number of Christian Scientists to be appointed. There is no doubting the fact that that denomination has grown enormously in this country in recent years. Their readers are men who can offer religious consolation just as well as the chaplain of any other denomination. But as my colleague from Kansas explained, the duty of a chaplain in a modern Army is not alone the offering of religious consolation. The boys in the field go to the chaplain and confide in him their personal difficulties, very probably troubles at home. The chaplains also take part with the soldiers in the games that the soldiers play. They umpire baseball games and referee football matches, and things of that kind.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague may have five minutes more in which to answer that question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California is speaking in the time of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY]. The gentleman from California is recognized.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I may be misinformed, but I had understood that the various Protestant churches had, instead of one person, a board which was composed of representatives of the different churches.

Mr. KAHN. I believe that is true, but that board in turn delegate their authority to the one man. The board passes upon the qualifications of the man, but the one minister of the Protestant faith finally presents the matter to the War Department. That is my understanding.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman state what organizations or denominations, or whatever they may be described, would be eligible for appointment as chaplains, as representatives, provided the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas is agreed to?

Mr. KAHN. Well, I want to say that under the law existing before we got into this war the War Department apportioned the chaplains according to the strength of the religious denominations in this country.

Mr. GORDON. In the Army?

Mr. KAHN. No; not in the Army, but in the country at large; so many per thousand population in the country. I presume that in working out the number that ought to be apportioned under this law they would probably follow that practice. It is almost impossible, in fact it is inadvisable, to ask any man in the Army of the United States what religion he professes or to what denomination he belongs. We are entirely free from that in this country. As best they were able to gauge the proportions of the various denominations in this country they divided the chaplaincies heretofore.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. I would like to ask my colleague a question in reference to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY]. In case his amendment is adopted, can a Christian Scientist make his application, for instance, to be chaplain in the Army? His application will have to be examined and all the facts looked into and the recommendation made by this board, or any other board, that is here in Washington supervising the recommending of chaplains? Is that true?

Mr. KAHN. I think that is true.

Mr. McKENZIE. Then, if that is true, there would be no chance for a man who did not come up to the standard of morality or efficiency being appointed?

Mr. KAHN. I think that is absolutely true. The character and qualifications of the chaplains that are being appointed in the Army are thoroughly investigated before the recommendations are made.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman recognizes, of course, that this will be a substantial change in the existing law if we should agree to that amendment; because, as I understand it, ordained ministers are not in the Christian Science Church?

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman is quite right; and that is true, also, as I understand it, in one or two other sects of the Christian church. They have no ordained ministers.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. There are certain sects, I understand, whose members not only refuse to fight but refuse to do any work connected with the war. Would it be possible to appoint any of those under this provision?

Mr. KAHN. I do not think so. I want to say to my friend from Ohio that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] spoke of the fact a little earlier in the proceedings that in his home city 180 boys are receiving military training under a compulsory law passed by the local governing board of that city. My friend from Pennsylvania, as the gentleman is aware, is a Quaker, and the principles of the Quaker Church are against war. But the communicants of that church, the members of that faith, have adopted a special decree permitting Quakers in this country to join the armies in this war and fight for the country. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I want to call the attention of the House to the importance of this legislation and to the fact that it ought to have been enacted some time ago. I ask the Clerk to read a cablegram from Gen. Pershing in reference to this bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

[Cablegram received at the War Department from H. A. E. F.]

To THE ADJUTANT GENERAL,
Washington, for the Secretary of War:

1. In the fulfillment of its duty to the Nation much is expected of our Army, and nothing should be left undone that will help in keeping it in the highest state of efficiency. I believe the personnel of the Army has never been equaled, and the conduct has been excellent; but to overcome entirely the conditions found here requires fortitude born of great courage and lofty spiritual ideas. Counting myself responsible for the welfare of our men in every respect, it is my desire to surround them with the best influence possible. In the fulfillment of this solemn trust it seems wise to request the aid of churchmen from home.

2. To this end it is recommended that the number of chaplains in the Army be increased for the war to an average of three per regiment, with assimilated rank of major and captain in due proportion, and that a number be assigned in order to be available for such detached duty as may be required. Men selected should be of the highest character, with reputations well established as sensible, practical, active ministers or workers accustomed to dealing with young men. They should be in vigorous health, as their services will be needed under most trying circumstances. Appointees should, of course, be subject to discharges for inefficiency, like other officers of the National Army.

3. It is my purpose to give the Chaplain Corps through these forces a definite and responsible status and to outline, direct, and enlarge their work into cooperative and useful aid to the troops.

(Signed) PERSHING.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the chairman of the committee a question?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. DYER. As I understand the bill, it provides only for the rank that has existed heretofore; captain is the highest.

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. DYER. Does the present law provide for majors?

Mr. DENT. Yes. This does not change the law in any respect, except to increase the number.

Mr. DYER. It increases the number?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. They can not be made majors until they have had a certain number of years' experience in the Army.

Mr. DYER. Yes.

Mr. DENT. I will state to the gentleman that the national-defense act provided for one chaplain for each regiment. At the time the national-defense act became a law a regiment, in peace times, was composed of about 1,200 men. Under the new organization a regiment now is composed of something like 3,600 men, and they are asking the same proportion of chaplains that were provided for under the national-defense act.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, closely related to this bill, and of great importance to the successful carrying on of the present war, is the bill H. R. 9563, which will authorize promotions to higher grades in the Medical Corps and the Medical Reserve Corps. This legislation is urgently desired by the Surgeon General of the Army and leaders in the profession throughout the entire country. On March 9 I presented a statement as to the effect the bill would have if enacted into law, and also gave comparisons between the Medical Department of the Army of the United States and that of England, France, and Italy. The only objection to this legislation comes from the General Staff. Why the General Staff has set its judgment against that of Surg. Gen. Gorgas, of the Army; Surg. Gen. Braisted, of the Navy; and the greatest surgeons and physicians in and out of the Army and Navy is more than I am able to understand. I do not think that the Committees on Military Affairs of the Senate and the House, or the Members of Congress generally, should act upon the advice of the General Staff in preference to Gen. Gorgas and the men who are directly connected with the work of caring for the wounded and sick of our Army.

The President recently wrote a letter indorsing this legislation. His letter was addressed to Dr. Franklin Martin, member of the advisory commission of the Council of National Defense, and is as follows:

MY DEAR DR. MARTIN: I read very carefully your memorandum of February 27 about the rank accorded members of the Medical Corps of the Army, and have taken pleasure in writing letters to the chairmen of the Military Committees of the House and Senate, expressing the hope that the bill and resolution may be passed.

Cordially and sincerely, yours,

WOODROW WILSON.

The Assistant Secretary of War recently took a position against this legislation in a telegram to Dr. Harvey G. Mudd, of St. Louis, Mo. This telegram was no doubt sent after consultation with the General Staff. The telegram is as follows:

Your telegram with reference to Owen-Dyer bill received. Your statement that the provisions of the bill are absolutely essential for the conservation of the health and life of our soldiers is entirely erroneous. The bill does not increase either the number of officers or men in the Medical Department, but it does make three and one-half times as many major generals in the Medical Corps as there are in the entire Regular Army—a force much larger. It also authorizes a larger number of brigadier generals than there are in the entire Regular Army. The provisions of the bill are indefinable and the War Department is absolutely opposed to its passage.

BENEDICT CROWELL,
Acting Secretary of War.

I called the attention of Dr. Franklin Martin to the telegram and received from him the following letter:

ADVISORY COMMISSION, COUNCIL OF NATIONAL DEFENSE,
March 27, 1918.

From Dr. Franklin Martin, member of advisory commission.
To Hon. L. C. DYER, House Office Building, Washington, D. C.
Subject: Owen-Dyer bill.

1. In reply to your letter of March 26, in which you inclosed a letter from Benedict Crowell, Acting Secretary of War, to Harvey G. Mudd, of St. Louis, it is apparent that Mr. Crowell failed to take into consideration one of two important things when he wrote that letter. He says the provisions of the Owen-Dyer bill are indefinable, and the War Department is absolutely opposed to its passage. The Owen-Dyer bill, in my opinion, is not only definable but extremely definite, inasmuch as it provides percentage of officers based on the number of men in active service. The percentage thus provided for higher officers is not as great as that provided for the French, English, Italian, German, and Japanese Armies for their medical departments.

2. He states that your bill provides for three and one-half times as many major generals in the Medical Corps as there are in the entire Regular Army. It also authorizes a larger number of brigadier generals than there are in the entire Regular Army. This statement is liable to be misinterpreted, as it refers to the Regular Army and not to the contemplated National Army that we are preparing with which to fight the war. The old Regular Army, as you know, was not more than 65,000 men. It was afterwards authorized, I believe, to 295,000 men.

3. In referring to the officers in the Regular Army, he speaks of the number of officers of that force, and not the officers that would be required for our large Army. To illustrate: When we have an Army in the field of 2,000,000 men, according to the provisions of your bill, the Medical Department would have 70 general officers divided equally among major generals and brigadier generals. The Army as a whole would have 333 general officers. In addition, we must always remember that the Medical Department, by the provisions of your bill, will not provide for general officers only to the extent that medical men are required for actual service, and therefore will depend entirely upon the size of the Army in the field. In other words, we must not forget that we are providing the reserve corps not only for the Regular Army but for the National Army.

4. Gen. Gorgas, Dr. Mayo, Senator OWEN, and the rest of us are standing definitely behind the Owen-Dyer bill. We insist upon the bill retaining the present names, because we have advertised the bill to the civilians of the country. We also insist upon the percentage basis for officers because we want officers proportioned to the number of men we have in service. With those two provisions we, of course, would be willing to accept minor amendments.

5. Inasmuch as the President has expressed to the chairmen of the two military committees his approval of this bill, get prompt action from those committees and get in on the floor of the House and Senate as soon as possible, because there we can expect large support.

FRANKLIN MARTIN,
Member of the Advisory Commission.

The above shows very plainly that the General Staff and the Assistant Secretary of War had not given careful consideration to what the legislation would accomplish.

As stated above, there is a universal demand for legislation to bring about what the bill I have introduced would accomplish. I call attention also to three comments from the press, as follows:

[From the Journal of the American Medical Association, Chicago, Ill., Mar. 30, 1918.]

LEGISLATION FOR INCREASED RANK FOR MEDICAL OFFICERS.

On several occasions the Journal has emphasized the importance of legislation for increased rank and authority for officers of the Medical Reserve Corps. Specifically it has urged enactment of the recently introduced Owen-Dyer bill. It has been suggested that modification of this bill would be necessary to secure its passage, but that such modification need not be serious. In any event, some such legislation is not only desirable but also vitally necessary if common justice is to be rendered to the Medical Reserve Corps and if the best results are to be achieved by the Medical Department. Apparently the only active opposition thus far has come from the General Staff and the Secretary of War. If the newspapers of the country mirror public opinion, certainly the public is in favor of this legislation.

As the Brooklyn Eagle says: "The logic of this proposition appeals to every mother whose son is in a home camp or in the country's service abroad. It is inexorable logic. All that the Owen bill, now pending, does is to give Army surgeons the ranks corresponding to those the Navy grants. It is not a radical, not a revolutionary measure, but it will put an end to conditions greatly injurious to the health protection of American soldiers." The Buffalo News thinks that "inasmuch as the measure is calculated to facilitate the work of the Army Medical Corps and benefit the troops by precluding dangerous delays in medical relief, etc., its passage will be welcomed and approved of by everyone"; and the New York Globe states that "the request of the officers of the Medical Reserve Corps to be placed on the same footing as the Regular Army medical officers seems to be a perfectly reasonable one. * * * The call of the Army to the medical profession has been enthusiastically responded to. * * * Remediable legislation ought to be enacted without delay, and the doctors of the country should help the volunteering members of their profession to win the recognition to which they are entitled by urging their Representatives and Senators to support the Owen-Dyer bill." The Chicago Herald presents the case for both sides, and states that "lives can be saved and the strength of the Army kept up, medical men think, more easily if greater power commensurate with responsibility were in the hands of the doctors and sanitarians. A decision should be reached without prejudice, and unless it can be lucidly shown that higher ranks for medical officers can have definite disadvantages, Gen. Gorgas's bills should be enacted." The Boston Herald notes that the cream of the medical profession of the United States is now included in the Medical Reserve Corps. "They labor under a serious handicap by reason of their inferior rank. * * * Titles ought to correspond to responsibilities. * * * When we realize that in all our wars disease has been responsible for more than 70 per cent of the mortality, we can get some realization of the importance of the service which we call on the Medical Reserve Corps of the Army to render." The Philadelphia Record doubts whether Secretary of War Baker is "seriously against" the legislation. "From an unprejudiced point of view," it says, "there would seem to be no good reason why physicians and surgeons who are rendering invaluable service in saving lives and protecting the health of the soldiers should not be raised to a rank commensurate with the importance of their work, especially if that is the case in other armies than our own. The opposition to this apparently simple act of justice betrays the same spirit which fought against the idea that enlisted men in the Army and Navy should be given every opportunity to rise to the highest honors."

In fact, the press is practically unanimous in favoring this legislation. With this encouragement the physicians of the country should redouble their efforts to let Congress know that the medical profession wishes an early and favorable consideration of legislation for fair treatment of their confrères in military service.

[From the Outlook, New York, Apr. 3, 1918.]

RAISE THE RANK OF MEDICAL OFFICERS.

As Representative DYER asserted the other day, of late years Congress has not been giving the necessary consideration to the Surgeon General's office. Mr. DYER was speaking concerning the bill in the House of Representatives which he had introduced, the same bill having been introduced by Senator OWEN, of Oklahoma, in the Senate, to raise the rank of officers of the Medical Reserve Corps. According to the present law, ranks for officers in the Medical Reserve Corps are lieutenant, captain, and major. The pending legislation provides for ranks in addition of lieutenant colonel, colonel, brigadier general, and major general.

Such a law should be passed. It would give to our medical men working abroad not only a parity of rank with other medical men working there, but it would give them a position of much-needed authority. Recommendation given by a medical officer to a line officer of superior rank has not hitherto carried the necessary weight, and this experience is responsible for the demand for advanced rank. As Surg. Gen. Gorgas recently said, as quoted by the New York Times:

"Line officers have had no hesitation in ignoring the sanitary recommendations of medical officers of lower rank. The men of the Medical Corps should get higher rank—rank commensurate with the importance of the positions they hold. Some of them are administering great hospitals, yet they hold subordinate rank."

The same paper quotes the following from Dr. Simon Baruch:

"Dr. C., a professor of gynecology (therefore expert in abdominal surgery) in one of our great medical schools, has been one of the original founders of the Medical Reserve Corps, rivaling in prevision of present medical actualities the wonderful prevision of Leonard Wood of present military actualities. He served in the humble capacity of lieutenant in the Medical Reserve Corps for many years, was actively on duty in the camp of reunited veterans at Gettysburg in 1913, has worked with might and main to make the Medical Reserve Corps a veritable military force, served in its enlargement required by the expansion of our military force, and is now in active service in Europe with the rank of major. He has recently been superseded in authority by a former student of his, who, having entered the Regular Army, has now attained a rank superior to Dr. C."

The number in the regular Medical Corps now on active duty is 775, and volunteer physicians in the Medical Officers' Reserve Corps to the number of 12,855 are also on active duty. The well-known surgeon, Dr. William J. Mayo, speaking of the great sacrifices financially and professionally which members of the Medical Reserve Corps have made, says that the only condition the men ask is that during the time they are in service they shall have working conditions which justify the sacrifices. With or without the increased rank, as Dr. Mayo adds, the medical profession will bear its burdens. But it looks to Congress to uphold the dignity of the medical profession.

We do also.

[From the Weekly Bulletin of the St. Louis Medical Society, Mar. 21, 1918.]

OWEN-DYER BILL.

Mr. L. C. DYER, in advocating the passage of the Owen-Dyer bill before the House of Representatives, emphasized the fact that physicians of the highest standing in the profession are now in the military service with only the rank of major, thereby losing the benefit of their experience and knowledge by the lack of power to enforce their recommendations. As stated by him, the bill has received the unqualified indorsement of Dr. Franklin Martin, member of the Advisory Commission of the Council of National Defense; Dr. William J. Mayo, and other members of equally high standing in the profession. He also quoted from the report of Lord Esher, of Great Britain, who was chairman of the committee which reorganized the English War Office in 1904 and then opposed what the medical profession deemed adequate authority and rank. But 13 years later, on February 3, 1917, he wrote as follows: "How much of the suffering undergone by our soldiers since the war began has been due to the shortsightedness of my committee, and notably tant general's branch over the royal army medical corps was and is responsible not only for the early failure to grip the medical factors of the war, but they hampered conditions under which the surgeon general has worked. His triumphs and those of the royal army medical corps have been achieved in spite of obstacles that the subordination of science to ignorance and of elasticity to military discipline explains, but can of myself, will never be known. Certainly, the control of the adjunot justify."

Congressman DYER also related the experience of the medical officers during the Spanish-American War, especially at Chickamauga, where a line officer refused to consider the recommendations of the chief medical officer and brought on the awful catastrophe which is still fresh in the minds of the medical men of the country. Mr. DYER further stated that the recommendation for the increased rank is asked in order to increase the efficiency of the Medical Reserve Corps. It will be of great value to the health and welfare of the soldiers, and health is necessary to efficiency. Recommendations given by a medical officer in order to carry weight necessary for such important recommendations should not be made to a line officer of superior rank. Advanced rank carries with it this power.

The following telegram was sent to Hon. ROBERT L. OWEN, Hon. L. C. DYER, and to the Secretary of War by the Missouri State Committee Medical Section, Council of National Defense, in reply to an article which appeared in the Globe-Democrat Sunday, March 17, 1918, as follows:

"Associated Press dispatches state to-day that the War Department has interfered with the free expression of his opinion by the Surgeon General on the Owen-Dyer bill granting adequate rank and authority to medical officers. In view of the published approval of this measure by the President, we confidently hope that this morning's report is erroneous.

"The opposition of the Owen-Dyer bill has seriously hampered the efforts of the Government to secure an adequate number of physicians for our rapidly growing National Army. The passage of this bill will place our own medical officers on a basis equivalent with that of the medical officers of Great Britain, France, Italy, Japan, our own Navy, and the forces of the enemy.

"These provisions are absolutely essential for the conservation of the life and health of our soldiers.

"HARVEY G. MUDD, M. D.,
"Chairman."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I make a pro forma amendment for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Kansas, or the chairman of the committee, or the gentleman from California, a question. If the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas is adopted, would that let in religious people belonging to organizations whose ministers are not ordained—the Christian Scientists, for example? Would it let in Universalists and Unitarians?

Mr. ANTHONY. I will say to the gentleman that I believe it would. The chairman of the committee has just suggested that the amendment should not be adopted without the proviso, "under such regulations as the department may prescribe."

Mr. DENT. "Prescribed by the Secretary of War."

Mr. ANTHONY. So that that would put it up to the War Department, surrounding it with proper safeguards.

Mr. CANNON. Then there is no doubt but that they would be eligible even if the ministers were not ordained?

Mr. ANTHONY. If the appointing power so decided.

Mr. CANNON. I want to ask another question. What is the age—40 years?

Mr. ROBBINS. Forty is the maximum.

Mr. DENT. Yes; 40 is the maximum age.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman think it wise to fix an age limit?

Mr. DENT. It has been suggested, and personally I can not see any objection to it.

Mr. CANNON. I know of my own personal knowledge one or more, two or more, very upright men; one is a Catholic, another a Protestant, a member of the Methodist Church. They are both over 40. I do not know in all my acquaintance two men who would be better qualified than they from every standpoint. Is it by regulation or by statute that 40 is the prescribed limit?

Mr. DENT. By statute.

Mr. CANNON. Would the gentleman offer an amendment raising the age limit to 45?

Mr. DENT. I have no objection to that.

Mr. CANNON. It seems to me it ought to be done. Will the gentleman offer the amendment? He is familiar with the bill.

Mr. DENT. I will offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Alabama desire to offer an amendment to the amendment?

Mr. CANNON. To the Anthony amendment.

Mr. DENT. I will wait until that is disposed of. I suggest to the gentleman from Kansas, my colleague on the committee, that he will modify his amendment so as to provide that these appointments shall be made under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my amendment be further modified to comply with the gentleman's suggestion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas asks that his amendment be so modified.

Mr. CANNON. Let us have a vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the chairman of the committee please state the amendment which he proposes?

Mr. DENT. To amend the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] by adding the words "under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment as modified: Insert after the word "therein" the words "under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War," so that the amendment will read: "And provided further, That the persons appointed under this act shall be duly accredited by some religious denomination or organization, and of good standing therein, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] as modified.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Alabama offer the amendment that we spoke of, raising the age limit to 45?

Mr. DENT. In line 13, on page 2, after the word "engineers," strike out the period and insert a colon and add the following:

Provided, That the maximum age limit of chaplains in the Army shall be 45 years.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman from Alabama want to talk on that amendment?

Mr. DENT. No; I do not.

Mr. CANNON. Does my colleague [Mr. McKENZIE] oppose the amendment?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes; I am opposed to it.

Mr. CANNON. I should like to know what the gentleman thinks. I will try to get recognition to speak after he speaks, because he may convince me.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. DENT offers the following amendment, to follow the amendment just adopted: Strike out the period and insert a colon and add the following: "Provided, That the maximum age limit of chaplains in the Army shall be 45 years."

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I dislike very much to differ from my distinguished colleague [Mr. CANNON] on a matter of this character; but I want to say to the members of the committee that this matter was not considered or discussed in the Committee on Military Affairs while we were considering the bill that is now under discussion. At the time of the enactment of the national defense act, with all the information from the War Department, the age limit for chaplains was fixed at 40 years, after full consideration of all the facts. One of the reasons for it is that if you commission a man at 40 years, before he arrives at the age of retirement the Government can get at least 22 or 24 years' service from him. It is not good policy to commission old men in the Army of the United States in any branch of the service. I would not say a word against the character or the usefulness of ministers above the age of 40 years, for I know many of them who are exemplary gentlemen in the communities in which they reside, and some of them no doubt would make excellent chaplains in the Army.

Mr. FLOOD. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. FLOOD. Would these chaplains be permanent officers of the Army, or would they remain only during the war?

Mr. McKENZIE. I presume that is the purpose of it. They would be officers in the Reserve Corps.

Mr. FLOOD. Then would it make so much difference?

Mr. McKENZIE. This amendment ought to go to another section of the law. It is offered in the wrong place, but we can discuss it here. Of course, the House has a right to put it on here if it sees fit to do so, but I simply want to call the attention of the Members to the letter just read a few minutes ago from Gen. Pershing, admonishing us to send to France only young men. I am not criticizing men because they are old, for I have seen quite a number of years myself; but I do realize, as every man here must realize, that a man who accepts a commission as a chaplain in the Army of the United States at this time ought to be prepared to go across the water, where the boys will need his services more perhaps than they will need them in this country; and any man who has passed the age of 40 years, with perhaps an exception here and there, is not physically qualified to meet the exposure and the trials with which he will have to contend there, if he goes onto the field of battle where the boys are, and the place where he ought to be in order to render the services which are expected of a chaplain in a regiment. I will not go into the matter further, but I think it will be a mistake to raise the age limit.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. Would it not obviate every objection that the gentleman has stated so well if all the provisions of this act were limited to the period of the present emergency?

Mr. McKENZIE. No; it would not, for I know that we have plenty of young, virile men in the ministry in this country who are ready and willing to go and make the sacrifice in France, and you and I know that we have all got friends in the ministry who are over 40 years of age. Many of them have appealed to us to have them commissioned in the Army of the United States. They are patriotic gentlemen. They want to serve our country, and we have said to them, "The law bars you. Forty years is the limit. We are looking for younger men." Now, when the storm of battle is just coming on, when the moment has arrived when we want the strongest men in the country, are we going to let down the bars and say that men can go into this service on the battle field who can not get into any other branch of the service? Gentlemen of this House, vote in this amendment, if you will, out of respect to my good old colleague from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]; but, looking at it from the standpoint of one who has given some little thought to the military affairs of this country, I feel that it would be a mistake.

Mr. BUTLER. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Does the gentleman mean to say that a man 45 years of age is incapable of preaching? We are not going to take them to fight.

Mr. McKENZIE. I mean for a chaplain in the Army, who can go out among the boys.

Mr. BUTLER. I know, and they do go out.

Mr. McKENZIE. Out into the field and into the storm.

Mr. BUTLER. There are men in the ranks carrying guns who are 45 years of age.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. But they have been in the ranks all the time. They are not men who have stepped down out of a pulpit.

Mr. BUTLER. I know, but they can enlist up to 40, and the older a man is the better he preaches.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. But they have not got activity enough to get out into the trenches and take the dying confessions of the men, and so forth.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I know how old a man is when he is 45 years of age; and a man in good health, who would be received at all, would, I think, at 45 years of age, be quite as useful as a chaplain as a young man of 25 or 30 or 35. Why, let me ask my friend how old are you?

Mr. McKENZIE. I am 58.

Mr. CANNON. Fifty-eight and just married. [Laughter.] Why, if my friend and colleague whom I respect and almost love——

Mr. McKENZIE. If the gentleman will permit me, I am one of those who has conserved his strength in his youth. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. Yes; and if a man has lived to the age of 45 and has no disease, if he has a good constitution, if he is healthy, if he can pass the examination of the surgeons, if he has had the religious experience, I think he is quite as useful as the man of 25 or 35 or even 40. I have had two applications that I spoke of from men whom I know, one very zealous Catholic priest. I think he could outrun me even if I could go back to the age of 45; he is a perfect specimen of manhood, and perfectly loyal. Another one was from a Methodist preacher. I have not had a great many applications, but my attention has been called to it as it has been called to other candidates for chaplain who are not ordained ministers. But that is within the power of the President to cure because he makes the nominations, and I am content with the amendment which has been offered by the gentleman from Kansas upon that point. But I think that we can trust the Secretary of War and trust the board of ministers that are consulted, and trust the examining surgeons. I will say to you now that if I was called upon to die immediately and wanted religious consolation I would not take any 30-year-old chaplain. [Laughter.] I would get one of mature years that had had greater experience for that consolation. I trust, with all due respect to my colleague, that the committee will adopt the amendment.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Is not the military age from 18 to 45 for enlisted men?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. DENT. I beg the gentleman's pardon; it used to be 18 to 45, but it is now 18 to 40 by the draft act.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Prior to this a man could enlist as a private and go into the ranks at the age of 45.

Mr. CANNON. Yes; I had forgotten about the change.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I think none of us need preface our remarks on the floor with a reservation of respect for our venerable colleague who has stated the spiritual, religious, and the fellowship side of his case admirably, as he always does. We all cherish that regard for him always. But, in spite of his view, there has come a change in the spirit of the functions and responsibilities of chaplains in the Army. It began to manifest itself before war and has been heightened, deepened, and intensified by the awful experience in this world-run-mad war across the seas. No longer do men estimate the value of a chaplain by the skill or grace of his spiritual endowment alone, or his capacity to unfold the mysteries of theology, but he begins his career, and perhaps it may be said that he sums up his career, in his physical and mental capacity to live with and be a part of the night-and-day life of the young soldiers between the ages of 21 and 31 in the trench and on the battle field, in hospitals, in bivouacs, or in the billet. He must be a companion, he must be a fellow with them; his mind must not be so old and confirmed in impressions of his own experience or in the certainties of his own theology that he can not be all things to all men, but he must live and be with these men and must partake of all the essentials and demands of their daily life. I know, and we all know, that at the age of 45 we do not take the same interest in the same pleasures that the youths of 21 do. It would be something of a monkish task, religious as we might be, to sacrifice the cowl and habit and get down in a most reciprocal mood with the young man in a pastime of that character.

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Yes.

Mr. SLOAN. Is it not a fact that one of the functions of a chaplain, at least some of them, is to give advice? And is it not a fact that a young soldier would be more liable to accept advice on the problems that beset him of a man of mature years and experience than he would of a man who has not had that age and experience? Recollect this, that it is not making all of these chaplains men of mature years, but only that they may have some of mature years in a chaplaincy rank.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. It would do all that, let me say to my friend from Nebraska, if the man of mature years and experience and all the record of saintliness had legs that were 21 years old so that he could go where the young man was dying. He has got to hasten to administer the last sacrament, or perhaps take the last dying wish as a message to the loved ones at home, and he must accept hardships not less than the man who gives his life in this great sacrifice.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. I appreciate the force of the gentleman's statement, but would not all that be cured by a physical examination?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. A man may be able to pass a standard physical examination and doctors may find his lungs, heart, and internal organs responding to the test, but he does not have that resiliency of youth which would support him when he comes to be exposed, and he may in five days be down with pneumonia and not have that youthful body to sustain him that he would have if he was a younger man.

That is the point involved in youth and years in active army service. As to having the old man for counsel and the young man for action, when Uncle Sam has a chaplain in the service, he wants to be able to determine that the first chaplain on the list can go anywhere he is called upon to go. He does not want chaplains, any more than soldiers, who have to be selected for particular service, who may have it said of them that this man is to be used for this service and this man on another service; that the other man is not strong enough for this, and so on. He wants such a man that the first called upon can move to the sphere of activity and perform the service required. He can not divided them into classes, and the chaplains must be just as young as the men they are trying to serve.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, the age of 40 is merely arbitrary, and the idea that one who is 41 is unfit to do the work that one who is 40 is fit to do is not to be accepted as a general rule. If we should go upon the basis that has been here announced, the former chaplain of the One hundred and tenth Pennsylvania Regiment, who is an honored Member of this body, and who would be very much desired by the men of that regiment as a chaplain now—and I refer to our colleague, Dr. TEMPLE—could not be accepted. He would be too old. It seems to me the argument that because you want to increase the age would necessitate selecting men who are unfit because if they are older than a certain age they would be unfit does not have any strength to it.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Has the gentleman observed from his own experience and observations of others whether it is any easier or more certain for a man to recover from illness when he is 45 than it used to be when he was 25?

Mr. FESS. I am not sure that statement is true, except where you have reached the age of debility. I do not think senility is reached at the age of 40. I know that a very distinguished physician said that those who reached 40 would never learn any more. I do not believe that is true. Goethe wrote Faust when he had reached the age of 80, and our distinguished ex-Speaker never was more effective than at the age of 82.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. True; but those were mental labors, not those that require the absolute control of a youthful body that could withstand all of the shocks of hell and come out alive.

Mr. FESS. I do not think that because a man has gone beyond the age of 40 he has ceased to be efficient. I do not think that rule would hold at all, and therefore I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. BUTLER. Did I understand the gentleman from Vermont to say that our very highly respected ex-Speaker can not sit up all night if he wants to?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I did not make any such observation, and I hope the time will never come when he can not.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT].

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DENT, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

WAR MEDALS FOR AMERICANS.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, to those members of the committee to whom I have given a list of the bills to be called up I desire to say that the next bill is one to provide medals of honor, and I ask that it be laid aside temporarily; and the bill following that, to permit Americans to wear foreign medals, the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs has asked me to postpone the consideration of.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then those bills will be passed over temporarily.

COMMUTATION TO COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I next call up the bill (S. 3863) to provide quarters or commutation thereof to commissioned officers in certain cases.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama calls up a bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I believe this bill involves an expenditure of some $33,000,000 by the National Government. I think it is too important a bill to be considered in that way. I object.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 3863) to provide quarters or commutation thereof to commissioned officers in certain cases.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 3863, with Mr. CRISP in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3863) to provide quarters or commutation thereof to commissioned officers in certain cases.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chairs hears none.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from California, a member of the committee reporting the bill, to take the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from California.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, before we get down to that stage I would ask the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs whether we can not get an agreement as to general debate and would suggest not more than one hour. The committee has a very few additional bills, and it is desirable to finish those this afternoon, if we can. I suggest to the chairman that the committee rise for a moment and agree to a time for general debate on this bill.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise for that purpose.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. FOSTER having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. CRISP, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill S. 3863, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill S. 3863, and pending that, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this bill be limited to one hour. Has the gentleman from California any suggestion as to how that time is to be divided?

Mr. KAHN. I suggest that the chairman of the committee divide the time——

Mr. DENT. I know of no opposition over here to the bill.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, will my colleague yield? If there is no extended debate desired, why would not half an hour be sufficient?

Mr. KAHN. Well, I understand there will be some extended debate on the bill. I do not know but if debate finishes before an hour is over I imagine the committee can take up the bill under the five-minute rule. I should suggest not exceeding one hour.

Mr. DENT. I will ask that general debate be not exceeding three-quarters of an hour, and that the gentleman from California control the time.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, if there is to be some opposition to the bill, ought not the party or parties who oppose the bill to have some part of that time?

Mr. DENT. I am trying to find out who the party or parties are who are opposing the bill.

Mr. KAHN. I will say frankly to the gentleman from Massachusetts——

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman from California indicated——

Mr. KAHN. That I will yield time to those who are opposed to the bill.

Mr. WALSH. I am not opposed to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill S. 3863, and pending that he asks unanimous consent that general debate be limited to 45 minutes, to be controlled by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN]. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The question was taken and the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill S. 3863, with Mr. CRISP in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill S. 3863, and under the order of the House general debate is limited to 45 minutes, to be controlled by the gentleman from California. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN].

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, prior to the outbreak of the war an Army officer who did not occupy quarters at a military post or at some camp was given commutation of quarters. That is, he was paid a certain amount of money to enable him to procure lodgings for himself and his family. When the war broke out, the Military Establishment was increased very largely, and a decision was rendered by the Comptroller of the Currency. That decision said, in effect, that where an officer was present with troops in the field, and occupied a tent, that constituted quarters so far as that officer was concerned. In other words, the Government was furnishing him quarters, and he was not entitled, therefore, to commutation of quarters or an allowance of rent for lodgings for himself and his family. The effect of that decision was practically a reduction of the salary of the Army officer, because officers were promptly ordered to various commands and were assigned to the various Army camps of this country. Their families occupied rented quarters and the officer had to pay for those quarters out of his own pocket. I take it that the Government never intended to do anything of that kind.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. KAHN. I do.

Mr. FESS. Did that apply only to an officer who had a family or apply also to an officer who had not a family?

Mr. KAHN. It applied to every officer who rented quarters and lived in them.

Mr. FESS. Whether he had a family or not?

Mr. KAHN. Whether he had a family or not, and I may add that this allowance was given him in accordance with the grade he had attained in the Army. In other words, a second lieutenant only got an allowance for two rooms; and as he advanced in the Army and finally became a colonel or a general he got many more rooms. Where the Government could not furnish rooms or a building to house him the Government gave him an allowance to take care of that. Now, the purpose of this bill——

Mr. HELM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. In a moment. The purpose of this bill is to allow those officers who have families or dependents to get an allowance during this war. Now I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. HELM. How will this bill affect those officers who are at the different cantonments of the United States?

Mr. KAHN. Well, if a cantonment is at a military post and there are buildings at the post which the officer can occupy with his family, the Government would furnish him a home where he and his family could live. But in the case of a cantonment where there are no quarters for officers and he simply gets a tent that he lives in or a rough shack which is put up for him, he is not given commutation of quarters. The decision of the comptroller was that he is getting quarters when he is in the field, and was therefore not entitled to the allowance.

Mr. HELM. Would an officer at one of the cantonments with officers' quarters be entitled to commutation?

Mr. KAHN. Yes; if he has a family or if the quarters are such that he can have his family with him, I take it, he would not get the commutation, but would get the quarters. But in cases where he would simply have a room for himself, I take it that he would get the commutation if we pass this law.

Mr. HELM. Is this bill intended to affect officers in the United States and officers in France?

Mr. KAHN. I so take it; yes. Because the gentleman can well conceive of this kind of a condition in France: An officer who is not immediately at the front, but who is performing staff duty, say, in Paris, and has got to have some place in which to live, ought not to be called upon to go down into his own pocket to furnish those quarters.

Mr. HELM. Now, the officers are in France. Are the families of these officers there?

Mr. KAHN. No; but the family is generally occupying rented quarters here. Therefore under this proposed legislation he is given the commutation in order to pay the rental of those quarters for his family.

Mr. HELM. Now, let us see just a moment. There have been thousands of officers added to the Army since the war broke out. A very large percentage of those officers came from civilian life. They had their homes; they owned them; and their families are now occupying the homes that the officer occupied with his family before he was commissioned as an officer. He is now at an Army post. His family is at home, we will say, in the house that he owns and in the house that the officer calls home. Would that officer be entitled to commutation?

Mr. KAHN. He would. Let me show the gentleman the other side of the picture.

Mr. HELM. In other words, he would be entitled to rent on his own home, would he?

Mr. KAHN. He would be entitled to commutation. Here is the situation: The officer who has a home and who is not in the field gets his commutation anyhow. He is getting it now, in cases such as the gentleman cites, if the man happens to be with the staff somewhere. But you have in the Army, in addition to the class of men mentioned, many a man who has not anything but ability, patriotism, and courage. He is willing to give his services to the Government of the United States. Why should he be penalized, why should these places be held open only for men who have homes in some city, who own their own homes? Why should not the poor man have a chance to go into the Army and, if possible, go as an officer? You can not pass any law that will work equitably in every case. We have to take the general average.

Mr. MAPES and Mr. BANKHEAD rose.

Mr. KAHN. I yield first to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES].

Mr. MAPES. I would like to ask the gentleman if this law makes any distinction between the men of the Regular Army and the National Army?

Mr. KAHN. No.

Mr. MAPES. The officers of the National Army and the National Guard would be entitled to the same commutation of quarters as the others?

Mr. KAHN. Yes. It says "every commissioned officer of the Army of the United States on duty in the field," and that includes the Regular Army, the National Guard, and the National Army.

Mr. MAPES. I am very much in favor of the bill, and I wanted to have that point clear.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Are all of these staff officers who are now on duty in the city of Washington, an almost innumerable number, entitled to this commutation of quarters?

Mr. KAHN. They get it now.

Mr. BANKHEAD. And the officers in the field who are serving with the soldiers are deprived of it?

Mr. KAHN. Exactly. Every one of those staff officers is entitled under the law to get his commutation now, and they do get it, I suppose. But the man who is away from his family, the man who is out in the field fighting, does not get the allowance. He has to pay for the rent of the quarters for his family out of his regular salary.

Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. Then, unless this bill is passed, as I understand it, the man actually in the field is penalized under the construction of the Comptroller of the Treasury?

Mr. KAHN. Quite so.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Is this construction of the comptroller a new construction of the law, different from what it has been before?

Mr. KAHN. I take it the matter had not been passed upon prior to this decision. It was always allowed without question, there was no question raised by any comptroller previously, but since we got into the war the question was raised, and that decision was rendered. This law is intended to correct this palpably very serious hardship on the officers of the Army.

Mr. ELSTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

Mr. ELSTON. Apropos of what the gentleman is saying, I happened to get a letter to-day from a captain, who, when at home, resides in my district, but who is now stationed in France. He wrote to a friend, who sent me what he says. In the letter he states:

> We have been held in very expensive places awaiting orders all along the line, when the daily expense is not less than $5 per day.

Every dollar of this would come out of his own pocket. Is that a characteristic situation of a great many officers on duty in France to-day?

Mr. KAHN. I understand it is.

Mr. ELSTON. That would be at the rate of $150 a month.

Mr. KAHN. I understand it is that situation that brings about the necessity for this legislation.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

Mr. FESS. I am still in doubt on the matter of unmarried commissioned officers. Is the unmarried commissioned officer here in the Capital——

Mr. KAHN. He is getting his, but under this law he will get it only if he maintains a home.

Mr. FESS. That is what I am trying to get at.

Mr. HELM Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. HELM. Is the gentleman in position to inform the House what was the total amount of commutation charges prior to the declaration of war?

Mr. KAHN. I do not recall, but I think we allowed in every Army appropriation bill something like $1,000,000 a year. I am not quite sure about that, but I think that is about the amount.

Mr. HELM. What is the estimated cost under this bill?

Mr. KAHN. Thirty-three million five hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. HELM. The total, then, would be thirty-five millions?

Mr. KAHN. No; the total would be $33,500,000.

Mr. ALMON. Mr Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr KAHN. Yes.

Mr. ALMON. You understand from this bill that an officer engaged in foreign service would be entitled to commutation, regardless of whether his family remained here or went abroad?

Mr. KAHN. The State Department is not allowing the families of officers to go abroad. They are not issuing passports to them. They have refused to issue passports.

Mr. ALMON. Then, according to the gentleman's statement, the probabilities are that their families would all remain here?

Mr. KAHN. The very purpose of the bill is to give them commutation for their families over here.

Mr. ALMON. Then it is immaterial as to where the families were located at the time they were engaged in the service?

Mr. KAHN. Yes. The State Department, as I understand it, has issued an order that the families of officers or men can not accompany them to the other side.

Mr. OLNEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

Mr. OLNEY. For the benefit of the House I would like to point out an instance of the wife of a lieutenant colonel, the lieutenant colonel being in the field, with no expenses allowed for commutation, yet this young woman, with a small family, is obliged to accept a clerkship at $70 or $80 a month, she not having the benefit of commutation.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the occasion of the expenses of a lieutenant colonel so that he can not allot some of his salary for the maintenance of his wife?

Mr. OLNEY. No particular occasion, except that expenses in a city like Washington have been enhanced to a considerable extent, rents have gone up, and the cost of living has risen. There is a small family of three or four children attached to this family, and in order to live commensurately with their state of living in the past this lady accepted a position here to help out.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the officer were assigned here in Washington, I understand he would be allowed commutation.

Mr. OLNEY. But he is in the field.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then, what is there to prevent this lieutenant colonel from paying a portion of his large salary to his wife, so that she may not be obliged to accept a position in one of the departments here in Washington?

Mr. ELSTON. I understand she had to take this position in order to add to the allotment sufficiently to support her family.

Mr. STAFFORD. Here is the point I make, if the gentleman will permit: The fact that the lieutenant colonel, with a salary of several thousand dollars, is in a position to support his wife if he wishes, and what are the expenses of that lieutenant colonel whereby he does not allot sufficient amount for the support of his wife and children?

Mr. KAHN. If the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. OLNEY] will permit, I will try to answer the question of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD]. The base pay of a lieutenant colonel, I believe, is $3,600. Of course, he gets increases for every five years of his service.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for just a question?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

Mr. DAVIS. I notice from the reading of the first section of the bill that it speaks of "during the present emergency for every commissioned officer of the Army of the United States." Does that apply to Marine officers?

Mr. KAHN. No. That is part of the Navy of the United States. This applies to Army officers. The three armies—the National Army, the National Guard Army, and the Regular Army—are referred to in legislation since the war began as "the Army of the United States."

Mr. DAVIS. Is there any law allowing for a Marine officer in the foreign service?

Mr. KAHN. I am not familiar with the law as it applies to the Navy officers. I am only informed as to the law applying to Army officers.

Mr. ALMON. Do they not get 20 per cent additional for foreign service—the Army officers?

Mr. KAHN. The enlisted men get 20 per cent additional and the officer 10 per cent.

Now, I want to answer the question of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], which he propounded to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. OLNEY]. The Army officers have found it difficult in these days of the high cost of living to get along with the pay that has been given under the provisions of law fixing the salaries for Army officers. I dare say that the family of a lieutenant colonel has been living up to that salary, and has not been able to save a dollar. I believe that is especially true where there are a number of children. A man has to live up to his position. You can not expect a lieutenant colonel of the Army to live in cheap quarters in a large city. You can not expect him to allow his children to go around with clothing unbecoming the children of an officer of the United States Government. Everybody knows that the cost of everything has gone up enormously in recent years. I dare say that the lieutenant colonel whose case was cited by the gentleman from Massachusetts is only one of hundreds. They live up to the salary that they get. Their position requires it, and they have not saved a dollar for a rainy day.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Take, for instance, the lieutenant colonel in the foreign service in the field. What are his expenses that will prevent him from allotting a portion of this $3,600, plus 10 per cent additional for foreign service, for the maintenance of his wife and children at home, so that she will not be obliged to work, as in the case put by the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. KAHN. I presume he makes a large allotment. But, in addition to all his ordinary expenses, he is also put to extraordinary expenses. In the first place, he is serving with the officers of the English Army; he is serving with the officers of the French Army. They entertain him. He has to return the compliment and entertain them. The cost is very high when you consider that phase of army life.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. HELM. The gentleman has just spoken about the American officer having to move in the same circle with the British officers, the French officers, and the Italian officers. How do their salaries compare with the salaries of like officers of the United States?

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman misunderstood me. I said that the American officer who has a family in this country has to live up to his station. Now, in Europe the European officer does not get as much pay as the American officer.

Mr. HELM. What does a lieutenant colonel, for instance, in the English Army get?

Mr. KAHN. I am not prepared to tell the gentleman. I do not know. I am frank about that. I did know, because I looked up those things in the past; but it has gone from my memory. But I do know that——

Mr. HELM. Which officer is the higher paid?

Mr. KAHN. The American officer.

Mr. HELM. By what percentage?

Mr. KAHN. I think the American officer gets at least 33⅓ per cent more than the others.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. ELSTON. At that point I have an extract from the same officer whose letter I quoted a little while ago. He says that the English Army has recently raised the pay of officers to the same rate as ours and feeds them besides. I do not know whether that is a fact or not, but that is his information.

Mr. KAHN. I am willing to take that statement of my colleague. But let me call the gentleman from Kentucky's attention to this fact: The Government does not feed the Army officer. He has to furnish his own food, both in this country and abroad. The Government does not clothe the Army officer. He has to furnish his own uniforms—dress uniforms, fatigue uniforms, and regular uniforms. So his personal expenses are considerable every month, aside from the allowance that he makes to his family; and I take it that no officer of the United States Army is paid too much for the service he is giving his country.

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. SLOAN. Is it not a fact that the officers of Great Britain and France and Italy are more usually from the wealthy families, and are supported from home more than are the American officers?

Mr. KAHN. That is quite true. Many of the officers in the armies of those countries are the sons of noblemen, and many others are the sons of very wealthy merchants.

Mr. HELM. To be a nobleman does not necessarily mean to be a rich man.

Mr. KAHN. Not necessarily; no.

Mr. SLOAN. Usually, though.

Mr. CARAWAY. The gentleman does not mean to say that is true of the French officers, that they come from rich families?

Mr. KAHN. No; I do not. At least not all of them.

Mr. CARAWAY. That was a part of the question.

Mr. KAHN. Neither is it true altogether of the English officers.

Mr. CARAWAY. Of course it is not. They come very largely from people who are well bred, but not rich. They are the poorer sons.

Mr. KAHN. But according to the statements I have read many of the officers in the foreign armies come from wealthy families.

Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. Is it not a fact that when an officer of our Army is ordered to France his equipment, including clothing, weapons, field glasses, and so forth, costs nearly $1,000?

Mr. KAHN. That is true, and it has become a scandal and a disgrace, the way they are charging these officers for uniforms and equipment. [Applause.]

Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. Is it not a further fact that these officers can not go to France unless they carry the equipment that the Government says they must carry?

Mr. KAHN. Yes; they must carry the entire equipment with them.

Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. No matter what they have to pay for it, they have to get it?

Mr. KAHN. Yes; they have to take the equipment which the Government prescribes.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has used 30 minutes. He has 15 minutes remaining.

Mr. KAHN. I shall reserve the remainder of my time, because two or three gentlemen have asked me for time.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield for just one question?

Mr. KAHN. For one question.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. Is the Military Committee likely soon to report a bill for the relief of Army officers, to give them better pay?

Mr. KAHN. I do not know of any such proposed legislation.

Mr. STERLING of Illinois. I think it is the duty of the committee at least to put that proposition up to the House.

Mr. KAHN. The War Department has not suggested it to the committee, and the committee have been so occupied with necessary legislation for winning this war that we have not had time to go outside to try to find business for the committee.

I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman controls the entire time. He has 15 minutes remaining and he yields 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, on Saturday, on page 5121 of the RECORD, appears a statement made by me in relation to the Post Office order cutting off parcel-post packages to soldiers abroad. I stated that that order was issued on March 29, and went into effect on April 1, but that its actual operation has been postponed until April 15. Having made that statement on Saturday, I desire to correct it, as I find to-day that the order is in actual operation. The reason I made the statement was that I was quoting from the Official Bulletin, issued, as Members know, by the Committee on Public Information, in which, under date of March 29, appears the order of the Postmaster General, with the heading "Order issued restricting shipments of mail parcels to United States soldiers in France." and then another heading asking that wide publicity be given to the order.

Under date of April 2, in the same publication, the Official Bulletin, appears an official order from The Adjutant General directing attention to the order issued under authority of the Secretary of War, signed F. W. Lewis, Adjutant General, postponing the operation of the order of the Post Office Department from April 1 to April 15. He asks that the same be published in the Official Bulletin, which it was under date of April 2. It reads as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
THE ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, March 29, 1918.

From: The Adjutant General of the Army.
To: Gen. Frank McIntyre, Chief Bureau of Insular Affairs.
Subject: Reported increase in weight and bulk of parcel-post matter for soldiers.

Referring to letter from this office dated March 26, 1918 (311.16 OD, A. G. O.), in which it was requested that the War Department bulletin relative to articles being shipped by parcel post, express, or freight companies to be published in the Official Bulletin, you are informed that the date of action on this matter has been postponed from April 1 to April 15, 1918.

By order of the Secretary of War:

F. W. LEWIS,
Adjutant General.

My attention has been called to-day to the fact that parcel-post matter addressed to soldiers abroad is being refused at post offices. I made inquiry of the Post Office Department about 20 minutes ago in relation to this matter and was informed that the order of March 29 from the Postmaster General restricting the parcel-post shipments, and putting it in operation April 1, had never been changed. But the War Department issued a supplementary order postponing its operation until April 15. In other words, here is the situation: The Post Office Department makes one order, at the request of the War Department, prohibiting the shipment of parcel-post matter to soldiers after April 1, and the War Department countermands that order evidently, by stating that such parcels can be shipped until April 15, but the War Department seems to have no way of enforcing its order. I never saw wires crossed worse in my life, and the sufferers are our soldier boys abroad; because the Postmaster General asks that wide publicity be given to his order, in effect April 1, dated March 29, and every post office in the country where there is a father or mother of a soldier abroad knows that these packages can not be shipped, although the War Department was willing that these shipments should be continued until April 15. Now, it seems to me when such an important order as that is issued somebody ought to know what the authority actually is, and whether our boys can receive those desired packages from home or not. The whole thing is a mass of confusion. In my opinion the order never ought to have been issued. There is nothing that appeals to these boys more than to receive these packages, and certainly the two departments ought not to be in direct conflict as to the date when the order goes into effect. Having made the statement I did on Saturday, that parcels could be sent until April 15, I desire now to correct it, because the Post Office Department seems to have more authority than the War Department has in the premises.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. SANDERS].

Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, I received on Saturday evening three telegrams from my home city that were sent to me early Saturday morning relating the progress of the third liberty loan in my city. I ask that they be read at the desk in my time.

The Clerk read as follows:

BOGALUSA, LA., April 6, 1918.

Hon. J. Y. SANDERS, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

Your home city had the proud distinction of subscribing the entire allotment for the parish in three minutes after the time set for taking subscriptions. We are now over the hundred thousand mark.

E. R. CASSIDY,
City Chairman Third Liberty Loan.

[Applause.]

BOGALUSA, LA., April 6, 1918.

Hon. J. Y. SANDERS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Washington Parish, population 30,000, of which 16,000 reside in city of Bogalusa, went over the top at 8.03 central time this morning. Most of the business men of the city were up all night stirring up enthusiasm for loan and asking people to meet at the city building at 8 o'clock this morning ready to make their subscriptions. Entire $80,000 allotted to this parish was quickly subscribed. Applications being handled by 15 clerks working at four tables. Last subscription, which took Bogalusa and Washington Parish over the top, was signed at 8.03. The total subscriptions will be considerably in excess of this amount as campaign progresses. Bogalusa is the largest sawmill city in the world, and has distinction of having more men in proportion to population enlisted in the Army and Navy than any other city we know of in the United States.

W. H. SULLIVAN.

[Applause.]

BOGALUSA, LA., April 6, 1918.

Hon. J. Y. SANDERS, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.:

Bogalusa went over the top. Double amount of the allotment, third liberty loan, at 8.03 central time this morning. You may tell Congress we have finished the third and are now awaiting their order to start fourth.

A. N. DOBBS,
Secretary Washington Parish Committee.

[Applause.]

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS].

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, if I understand this bill, it is an attempt to put the officers in the field on an equality, as far as their pay is concerned, with the officers who are not assigned to duty with troops but are quartered in other places. In that I, of course, concur. It occurs to me, however, that the bill has been worded so as to discriminate rather, even yet, against the officers assigned to duty, and I ask the attention of the gentleman from California to this fact. Under the law now, as I understand it, officers get commutation for quarters, heat, and light, whether they have any family dependent upon them or not. But they do not get it if they are with the troops in the field. They get it in Washington and other places, but if ordered away they do not get it. This provides that those who may be ordered away into the field service with the troops can get pay, provided they have dependents in their families to take care of.

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman is quite right.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. It occurs to me that that distinction should not be made. Take a captain in Washington who has no family; he gets commutation for four rooms, heat, and light. Now, under this bill the captain who is with the troops gets commutation for four rooms, provided he has a dependent, but he still gets no commutation for heat and night.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. As I understand, the officer who is with the troops, if the Government gives him quarters, he gets no commutation, but the ruling has been made that if he is quartered in a tent he is entitled to commutation.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Provided he has dependents—wife or child or dependent parents—but if he is unmarried and lives in Washington City or New York, or wherever he may be detailed, he gets commutation, although he has no family to support.

Mr. KAHN. If the gentleman will permit me, if he has no family and is living in Washington or New York, he is getting the commutation now, and he gets it under this bill just the same.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I understand he does.

Mr. BURNETT. But the fellow living in Paris would not get any, although his expenses would be greater.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. The man on the battle line does not get it unless he has a dependent at home, and then he only gets commutation for quarters, whereas the officer in Washington, without reference to whether he has a family or not, gets commutation for quarters and commutation for heat and light. It occurs to me that that is not right. The purpose that Congress has in mind, as I understand it, is to take care of the family of the officer. Now, instead of prescribing that the officer shall have commutation for two rooms if he has a certain number of dependents, or eight rooms if he has another number, the law says that a second lieutenant shall have two rooms, a captain four rooms, and a major six or eight rooms, or whatever it is; a colonel such a number. Now, the captain may have 10 children and the colonel none, but that makes no difference. We provide that the colonel shall have so many rooms and the captain less. It occurs to me that the words "on duty in the field or on active duty without the territorial jurisdiction of the United States" should be stricken out, so that the bill will read:

That during the present emergency every commissioned officer of the Army of the United States who maintains a place of abode for a wife, child, or dependent parent, shall be furnished—

And so forth.

I think he ought to have commutation wherever he lives if the others are to get it.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. VESTAL].

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Chairman, I am interested in what the gentleman from Mississippi has been saying in reference to this bill. It was the thing I wanted to ask the chairman of the committee about. I understand that the law as it is now, the act of 1907, provides commutation for officers and gives them heat and light allowances. It is my understanding that the purpose of this bill is to place the officers when they are in the war on the same footing as they have been when we were at peace. That is practically what they have proposed to do.

But it does seem to me that the bill proposed by this committee ought to be amended to include the heat and light allowance. It seems to me it is no more than fair. I may be wrong, but here is an officer who leaves this country and goes across the ocean to fight. His wife and children can not go there. Both the officer and his family are put to enormous expense. There is no question about that. The officers are not receiving any higher salary than they were before. In other words, as the law stands to-day, the officer on active duty is practically penalized from $50 to $150 a month for fighting for this country. That is exactly what it means. It seems to me that the families of these officers ought to be allowed quarters or the officers be allowed commutation not only for quarters but for heat and light as well. It seems to me it is no more than just. I know that at the last session of Congress I introduced a bill for this same purpose, and the bills are practically alike, except that in the bill I introduced I provided that in addition to the commutation for quarters they should have commutation for heat and light as well. I believe that ought to be added to this bill.

Mr. ELSTON. Are those two allowances—for heat and light and for quarters—provided for by different statutes entirely or are they both included in this same statute of 1907 referred to in this bill?

Mr. VESTAL. I think there is but one statute covering the matter. I would say to the gentleman that when I prepared my bill I had a talk with a number of officers about it—that is, as to whether, unless specifically mentioned, the bill would carry heat and light allowances. I discussed the proposition, and the officers I talked to said that unless heat and light allowances were added it would probably not be included.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VESTAL. Yes.

Mr. HELM. I notice on page 3 of the report that the present cost in peace times of commutation of quarters amounts to $737,500. If I understand the drift of the gentleman's argument, it is that he wants to do equal and exact justice between all officers, both as to commutation of quarters and heat and light?

Mr. VESTAL. Yes.

Mr. HELM. And at the same time conserve the resources of the United States. Could not that be done by repeating this measly sum of $737,500 and saving that sum, and then the $33,000,000 that this is going to cost the Government could be utilized and expended in maintaining our end of the war and in assisting our allies by loaning them money and prosecuting this war more effectively. In other words, does the gentleman think it is necessary to appropriate $33,000,000 annually in order to equalize the present number of officers in the Army with the obviously comparatively few number of officers in the Army who are receiving only $737,500?

Mr. VESTAL. I can not yield for a speech. What I mean to say is this: That, in my judgment, the officers of our Army in time of war and their families ought to have the same treatment at least that they have in time of peace, and that is what this bill is proposing to do, outside of the commutation for heat and light. I hope that this bill will be amended so as to make it sure that it carries commutation for heat and light as well as for quarters.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired. All time has expired under the order of the House. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That during the present emergency every commissioned officer of the Army of the United States on duty in the field, or on active duty without the territorial jurisdiction of the United States, who maintains a place of abode for a wife, child, or dependent parent, shall be furnished at the place where he maintains such place of abode, without regard to personal quarters furnished him elsewhere, the number of rooms prescribed by the act of March 2, 1907 (34 Stats., p. 1169), to be occupied by, and only so long as occupied by, said wife, child, or dependent parent; and in case such quarters are not available, every such commissioned officer shall be paid commutation thereof at the rate authorized by law in cases where public quarters are not available; but nothing in this act shall be so construed as to reduce the allowances now authorized by law for any person in the Army.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add, after the word "Army," at the end of line 7, page 2, the following: "except that in all cases where civilians have been commissioned in any branch of the military service, such officers shall only be entitled to quarters or commutation for quarters when required to change their place of residence in compliance with orders from the War Department."

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have not a word of criticism against the men in the Staff Corps of our Army who are detailed here in Washington or elsewhere. I understand these men are here because they are under orders to render service here in Washington. I did not object to the law giving to those men the commutation that is provided by statute, but this bill is intended to give to the men in a small way that recognition and justice to which they are entitled who are serving our country in the field. In other words, it is an attempt in part to put the man who is with troops in the field on the same footing as the officer in our Army who, while rendering patriotic and efficient duty, remains, perhaps, in the safe seclusion of this great Capital City of ours or in some other secure place in our country. This is an effort to give to the men who are officers in the line, in the field, and in France the same recognition they would receive if they were in Washington. But the purpose of my amendment, which you have just heard read, is not to take from any officer in the Regular Establishment the commutation to which he is now entitled, nor is it in any way to do an injustice to the man in the field; but I can not help but feel that we ought, even if in a small way, to take into consideration the fact that the taxpayers of this country will have to meet these bills, and where it is not necessary to make the payments, in my judgment, we ought to cut them out. Now, what does my amendment do? It simply means this, that if a young man, or an old man, for that matter, has been working in one of the Government departments or has been in business in this city and has been receiving $1,400 or $1,500 or $1,600 a year, and he has been going to his work every morning in civilian clothes, wakes up some morning and finds that he is an officer in the Army of the United States, and he goes down and buys a uniform and leather leggings and goes back to work at a salary of $2,000, perhaps, or $2,400 a year, and goes back to his habitation at night, does not even change the bed in which he has been sleeping for years, has no greater expense to pay—it simply provides that in those cases, whether in the city of Washington or in the central division of our Army at Chicago, or elsewhere, that such officer shall not be entitled to reach into the Treasury of the United States and take therefrom commutation for quarters; that he is getting better pay from his Government, perhaps, in most instances than he received before, and he shall not be entitled to it until he removes from his place of abode or his residence and goes into the field or to some other place of activity away from his home.

To my mind it is simple justice, it is only fair play, and to say that a man who lives here in this city—and it is no reflection on a man to live in the city of Washington—that because he has been commissioned in the Army of the United States at a higher salary perhaps than he ever received in his life, that it is incumbent upon this Government to still add to his pay commutation for rooms, and perhaps heat and light, as one gentleman said, because he has been commissioned in the Army of the United States, is unreasonable. I simply ask you gentlemen in the interest of justice, in the interest of respect if nothing more to the uniform of the man who is an actual soldier, that you adopt this amendment. I have no personal interest in it whatever, but I do believe that the time has come when there ought to be at least some bar put up to prevent this kind of thing going on here or elsewhere.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKENZIE. I will.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I want to ask the gentleman how his amendment would affect the case of a man who is in the Regular Army for a number of years and on temporary duty here in Washington?

Mr. McKENZIE. It would not touch him. I am for that fellow because he has dedicated his life to the Army of the United States and is entitled to some consideration.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It only applies to those recently appointed?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McKENZIE. I ask for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KING. I would like to ask the distinguished gentleman from Illinois, a member of the committee, since we are punishing these individuals, if we did not bring these boys to this city and whose fault is it?

Mr. McKENZIE. I will say to the gentleman I am not trying to punish them or criticize them.

Mr. KING. Whose fault is it if a man is grabbed up during his dreams or during his sleep and put into a major's uniform? He can not do it himself.

Mr. McKENZIE. Of course if he is built of the right material he will not get up in very much of a fright; but if he happens to be a little gun shy, of course it will be disturbing to him.

Mr. KING. But it is seeking to punish a good military officer.

Mr. McKENZIE. That is not my purpose; I am simply trying to do what I think is just.

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKENZIE. I will.

Mr. MAPES. The gentleman says he wants to have this apply to the real soldier. If I understand the amendment of the gentleman correctly, he would give this commutation of quarters when they come here from other cities and who are not any more soldiers than the man who happens to live in the District. Am I correct?

Mr. McKENZIE. This bill is founded on the basis that the extra cost of living to the soldier is such that he ought to have it. I am willing to go that far when he is put to the additional expense. I am after the man who has not been called upon to make the sacrifice.

Mr. MAPES. The gentleman's amendment only applies to those living in Washington and who continue to live here, or continue to live in some other city and might be doing some military work.

Mr. McKENZIE. Where they were not required to be put to that added expense.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is a member of the Military Affairs Committee, and I want to ask him if the War Department and the committee have not been able to work out any plan by which they can check, if not stop, this infamous profiteering on the uniforms of the officers? Is there not some way by which those outlaws and robbers can be stopped or punished for that kind of profiteering? I understand the salary of these officers is taken for a month or two in paying for the uniforms that are furnished to them. Is there no way to stop that?

Mr. McKENZIE. I understand that is being handled by regulations in the War Department now.

Mr. KAHN. And has been stopped.

Mr. McKENZIE. And has been stopped.

Mr. ELSTON. Does the gentleman know anything in the history of the Signal Corps which compels an officer to pay $45 a pair for boots of a peculiar make, and which are not of what you might call a usable nature, being more ornamental than anything else, and have attached to them a pair of spurs which have no practical use, and no use whatever except by way of ornament?

Mr. McKENZIE. If a man asked me why a man who rode a bucking broncho should need spurs, I could answer him, but I can not answer the other question.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. This is the history of that case: In the origin of the service the Signal Corps men were mounted men, but there has been no change in the custom or practice in the service as to the matter referred to, although the service itself has been through many changes.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. Let me call my colleague's attention to some facts. There are many men called to Washington in the Ordnance Department. They are graduates of universities and they have special knowledge of chemistry. Their services are essential to the country in this crisis.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. You did not take it that I was making any criticism of the men?

Mr. KAHN. Oh, no. I am not saying you are criticizing, but I want to show why these men ought to get this commutation; that is all. These men were probably earning $1,500 or $1,600 in their vocations. They are young men, but they are skilled. They are skilled in their profession and their services are of great value to the country. They are commissioned as second lieutenants to begin with; at least most of them are. They get a salary of $1,700 a year. They all have their family in the town from which they come.

Mr. McKENZIE. I would not cut that gentleman out—a man who comes from some other section of the country and has a home to maintain.

Mr. KAHN. Well, suppose here in Washington there are men who are peculiarly fitted for the duties they are called upon to perform and who can give the country valuable service in this hour of emergency, would the gentleman penalize them for going into the service of the United States? That is what his amendment would do. They would not be getting this commutation of quarters at all, and yet their expenses are enormously increased the moment they put on their uniform. They have to equip themselves with a full set of uniforms. They have to buy all the accessories, and I am told that these cost now about $600 for the average man who goes into the Army as an officer—the various uniforms and the equipment that he requires.

Take men in the Quartermaster Corps. That corps has to have specialists. They have lots of them, men who are familiar with cotton canvas, for instance. Every foot of it the Government buys has to be inspected and can only be inspected by experts. And the same is true with woolen cloth, with leather which is used for harness, with leather that is used for shoes. These men are experts, and many of them come from this city of Washington. Would you cut them out of these allowances? Many of them were getting when they entered the service more salary than the Government now pays them.

Mr. GORDON. The observation which the gentleman has made is unquestionably true, but they are not directed to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE]. His proposition, if I understood it, is that where these officers who are commissioned are not detailed away from their homes and do not change their place of residence they shall not receive allowances in lieu of quarters.

Mr. KAHN. That is what I am speaking about.

Mr. GORDON. So far as quarters are concerned, the cost of living is not increased at all.

Mr. KAHN. I am not claiming that it is.

Mr. GORDON. Then, why should they have an allowance in lieu of it?

Mr. KAHN. I am claiming that in many cases they do not get as much salary as they were getting before they went into the Army, and great expenses have been put upon them by reason of the fact that they have gone into the Army.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. And if a man goes into the Army, as the gentleman [Mr. GORDON], who is on the committee, knows, he generally goes as a second lieutenant, at $1,700 a year, and yet he may have been occupying in some business house a position in which he was getting $2,400 or $3,000 a year. Would you penalize a man because he is patriotic enough to give his services to his country?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Does the gentleman know of any expert in the purchase of cloth or rubber or any of these things that he speaks of who has been commissioned in the Quartermaster Department as a second lieutenant?

Mr. KAHN. I understand that there are such men. I understand, too, that in the Ordnance Department there has been quite a number.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. As second lieutenants?

Mr. KAHN. I think so, but I am not certain as to that.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Just one question more. Two or three thousand of these young men went to the training camp and got commissions. They were then assigned to the Quartermaster's camp, after being commissioned second lieutenants. They then went to Jacksonville and served three months in that school in the Quartermaster's camp, and nearly every one of them is a second lieutenant to-day, whereas quite a number of young gentlemen who did not go to the training camp, and did not go to Jacksonville, are commissioned as first lieutenants and as captains.

Mr. KAHN. Yes; and some of them as majors.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Those commissioned as majors are, as a rule, men who are expert along the line the gentleman has suggested. These boys who went in as second lieutenants after six months' training——

Mr. KAHN. Three months' training.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Six months' training; three months in the training camp and then they were commissioned, and then served three months in training in the Quartermaster's camp, so as to become expert; and at least nine out of ten of them are still second lieutenants; and it is not infrequently the case that young men are put in over them as first lieutenants and captains—men who can hardly be called experts.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. First, I want to answer the remarks of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS]. Of course the moment we got into this war and our armies were enormously expanded the War Department began to commission men in various lines of endeavor so as to get the benefit of the experience of those men. I dare say if we had had a very large Quartermaster Corps it would not have been necessary to commission men in the higher grades, but it was necessary at the beginning of this war, and that is how some of these higher-grade commissions were issued. But after all, in an emergency like this, you can not expect to have equal justice done in every individual case. You are lucky if you do not have glaring inconsistencies throughout the service.

Mr. LITTLE. Now, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. LITTLE. May I ask the gentleman this question: Do the young men from this District who have commissions here as majors or lieutenants receive allowances?

Mr. KAHN. They do.

Mr. LITTLE. A man could live at home, where he has been living all his life, and get allowances for quarters, while the fellow in Europe does not?

Mr. KAHN. If he goes abroad with the Army he does not.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman base his contention on the argument that these skilled men are doing that or on the fact that they have been commissioned?

Mr. KAHN. Naturally, upon both. The fact that they are doing this skilled work for the Government is one consideration. They may have been occupying positions right here in Washington, receiving $3,000 or even $4,000 a year as experts. The Government reaches out and says, "We need your services. We can give you a commission, but we can only commission you as a second lieutenant."

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. What has the gentleman to say, then, about these young men who possess this technical knowledge, and who have been drafted, and who are receiving the pay of privates, and have been put on this technical work of inspecting cloth, for instance, as privates in the Army at the pay of privates? They get none of this extra pay or commutation for the work they are doing.

Mr. KAHN. Yes; but the private is in line for a commission when vacancies occur, and the privates are frequently commissioned.

Mr. WALSH. Vacancies are rather infrequent in the case of a private.

Mr. KAHN. The present reserve officers' training camp is made up entirely of private soldiers.

Mr. WALSH. But the privates are still doing inspection work.

Mr. KAHN. That is an incident of their service. They are put in the Quartermaster Corps to do that work of inspection because of their skill, and that is an incident of service in every army throughout the world.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. ELSTON. I notice a communication from the Secretary of War which is printed in the report accompanying the bill, and I notice the statement is made that these allowances have always been considered a part of the compensation of the officers; that is, by tradition and custom it has come to be practically an addition to their salary. That is in the nature of an allotment of a wage.

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. ELSTON. A colleague has just suggested that it is included in the income tax as a part of the wage.

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes; I yield to my colleague.

Mr. McKENZIE. I know that there are injustices here and there, and we are unable to prevent that. I quite agree with my colleague on that point, but I want to ask my colleague if he does not believe that when an injustice is apparent, as in this case, it is our duty to cure it?

Mr. KAHN. Oh, I think that every man in the country ought to make sacrifices for his country, especially when his country is in war. But because many men have to make these sacrifices a great country like this ought not to punish its faithful citizens because they want to serve it in an honorable way.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I only want to call attention to one phase of this thing which does not seem to have been very much developed. As was suggested by the gentleman from California [Mr. ELSTON], ever since these allowances for commutation of heat, light, and quarters have been in the law, the money so paid has been considered a part of the pay and allowances of the officer. In other words, it has been swept up into his compensation. It does not make any difference whether he is a married man or whether he is an unmarried man. When he gets into a certain grade he has a certain allowance, as the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] has indicated to you, a certain allowance for rooms, according to his grade, and then the allowance for heat and light that goes with them. Now, that has gone on for all these years as a part of the compensation of the officer. What is incidental to it? Just exactly the same experience that men have in civil life. Two men are engaged in any occupation, one may be married and one unmarried, and yet it is only fair that the compensation for the character of service performed by them should not be affected at all, in the one case or in the other case, because one man is married and one man is not married. It is the value of the service that is being rendered, and not the domestic status of the man who renders the service, for which the reward is paid.

Now, if you pass this bill exactly as it is, you are going to have two scales of compensation for officers of the same grade in the United States Army, no matter what grade they are in. Part of them, if they are married, will get one kind of pay, and if they are unmarried they will get another kind of pay. You will have two different kinds of allowances for each grade, depending upon the domestic status of the men, something you would not think of tolerating in civil life at all.

And there is another proposition involved in the amendment moved by my colleague from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE]. It is true that there is an apparent superficial injustice in the fact that certain men living in a city for the time being are put to no extra expense by performing military duty in that city, and it may be that there is some color to the suggestion that they ought not to have been commissioned in the Army in the first place. Yet the fault is not in the men, but it is in the executive that put the law to the uses to which it has been put, by which the War Department is permitted to commission such men in that way. Are we to punish the men who are serving in other capacities in the Army, whose appointments and whose duties may not be related to these so-called "safety-first" soldiers at all? Is it fair to punish them because they are swept up into the same kind of a law by this amendment that you make for everybody?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. But the gentleman understands that this bill, just as it is, discriminates against the soldier who is sent out into the field to fight.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Exactly.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. It does not give him the commutation unless he has a family.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. That is exactly what I undertook to indicate.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. While if he stays in Washington he gets commutation anyhow, whether he is married or unmarried.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. If we were to get right down to good, common sense in the consideration of this legislation, and to apply the same rules that govern us in civil affairs, we would make commutation of heat, light, and quarters for all officers of the Army or for none.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. That is right.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. There ought to be no distinction. It is the pay for the service performed. It is not in recognition of the domestic status of the man who happens to be earning that pay.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ROBBINS. Can not the amendment be again reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will again be reported.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. KAHN) there were 29 ayes and 29 noes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I demand tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin demands tellers.

The question of ordering tellers was taken.

The CHAIRMAN. Nineteen Members have arisen, not a sufficient number.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 3, after the word "thereof," insert the words "and commutation of heat and light."

Mr. STAFFORD. I reserve a point of order to the amendment.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. What is the point of order?

Mr. STAFFORD. That it is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, the bill before the committee seeks to amend the act of March 2, 1907, Thirty-fourth Statutes at Large, which in its place is an amendment of the act providing for commutation of quarters found in the Twentieth Statutes at Large, page 151. The last-named act which is the first provision found in the law as to the allowance for commutation of quarters is in language as follows:

SEC. 9. That at all posts and stations where there are public quarters belonging to the United States, officers may be furnished with quarters in kind in such public quarters, and not elsewhere, by the Quartermaster's Department, assigning to the officers of each grade, respectively, such number of rooms as is now allowed to such grade by the rules and regulations of the Army: Provided, That at places where there are no public quarters, commutation therefor may be paid by the Pay Department to the officer entitled to the same at a rate not exceeding $10 per room per month, and the commutation for quarters allowed to the general shall be at the rate of $125 per month, and to the lieutenant general at the rate of $70 per month.

I now call attention to the act which is referred to in this bill, and to which the matter directly relates—page 1169 of the Thirty-fourth Statutes at Large:

Barracks and quarters: For barracks and quarters for troops other than Seacoast Artillery, storehouses for the safekeeping of military stores, for offices, recruiting stations, to provide such furniture for the public rooms of officers' messes and such heavy permanent furniture for officers' quarters at military posts as may be approved by the Secretary of War, and for the hire of buildings and grounds for summer cantonments and for temporary buildings at frontier stations, for the construction of temporary buildings and stables and for repairing public buildings at established posts, including the extra-duty pay of enlisted men employed on the same: Provided, That no part of the moneys so appropriated shall be paid for commutation of fuel or for quarters to officers or enlisted men: Provided further, That section 9 of an act approved June 17, 1878 (20 Stat. L., p. 151), be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows: "That at all posts and stations where there are public quarters belonging to the United States, officers may be furnished with quarters in kind in such public quarters, and not elsewhere, by the Quartermaster's Department, assigning to the officers of each grade, respectively, such number of rooms as is stated in the following table, namely: Second lieutenants, 2 rooms; first lieutenants, 3 rooms; captains, 4 rooms; majors, 5 rooms; lieutenant colonels, 6 rooms; colonels, 7 rooms; brigadier generals, 8 rooms; major generals, 9 rooms; lieutenant general, 10 rooms: Provided further, That at places where there are no public quarters commutation therefor may be paid by the pay department to the officer entitled to the same at a rate not exceeding $12 per month per room:" Provided further, That the number of and total sum paid for civilian employees in the Quartermaster's Department, including those paid from the funds appropriated for regular supplies, incidental expenses, barracks and quarters, Army transportation, clothing, camp and garrison equipage, shall be limited to the actual requirements of the service, and that no employee paid therefrom shall receive a salary of more than $150 per month, except upon the approval of the Secretary of War, $3,750,000.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the Chair will readily see the bill is amendatory of one provision of the statutes and that provision is limited to one subject matter, namely, commutation of quarters. Nothing in the bill or in the statute sought to be amended refers to commutation for heat and light.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman a question. Is the provision of law providing for commutation for heat and light in a separate or distinct section of the act from the one providing for commutation for quarters?

Mr. STAFFORD. I can only answer the Chairman to this effect: That the section I have read is limited exclusively to commutation for quarters, and if there is any such provision for heat and light it is in some other section. I have furnished the Chair with the entire quotation of the statutes so that the Chair may be fully advised. If there is such provision of law as to commutation for heat and light, it must be in some other section. It is not in this section; and this bill is amendatory of this one section which relates entirely to commutation of quarters.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, as to the law in the matter, I may be mistaken; but my information is that this section, which the gentleman just read, providing quarters is the only statute, and that under that commutation for heat and light has been allowed to officers, but it requires an appropriation to do it. I am further advised that it is the opinion of those who will be called upon to construe this law, perhaps, that this section as it stands now in the bill will give to these officers commutation for heat and light. It was simply to make that certain that I offered this. I take it that there can not be anything to the gentleman's point, for if we furnish quarters we surely have the right to make them comfortable. The statute which he read, as I understand it, is the only statute on the subject. I may be mistaken about that, but I am advised that it is the opinion of the Judge Advocate General of the Army that under this bill as proposed these officers would be entitled to commutation for heat and light, but in the appropriation bills we always provide that. I just want to make that certain which I was afraid might not be certain. For that reason I offered the amendment.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. There is no statute for the commutation of heat and light?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I will not say that. I would say I have not been able to find one myself.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I wanted to be informed how in practice they apportion this commutation for heat and light.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. So much a room. A second lieutenant gets commutation for two rooms at $12 each plus about $8 for heat and light.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. It is estimated it will take about so much to heat and light them?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes; a captain gets four rooms and so on up. A general perhaps gets 10 or 12 rooms, and he gets the $12 apiece commutation for 10 rooms and commutation for heat and light is proportionately greater.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. That the gentleman thinks is a matter of practice and is not covered by any statute?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I can only say that, in the limited investigation I gave the matter, I could not find the statute; and I have been advised that the Judge Advocate of the Army—he did not tell me this—is of opinion that this bill, if enacted into law, would comprehend commutation of light and heat. I remember this, that when we brought the National Guard officers here during the past 10 or 12 years in the Medical Corps to take this course that we authorized them to take, they were provided commutation of quarters, and they were paid commutation for heat and light, and in the course of time the Comptroller of the Treasury held they were not entitled to commutation for heat and light, and they had to pay that back into the Treasury. I tried to get an authorization for it, but I was unsuccessful; and that made me fearful that although the Judge Advocate General might think that this included heat and light the Comptroller of the Treasury might rule otherwise.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. The amount involved in the gentleman's proposition, after all, is of such a negligible character in the great expense of this war that the officers have not asked for that legislation.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Well, the officers that I know of would like to be put on an equality at least in the matter of pay with the officers who stay here in the city of Washington, and, as far as I am concerned, I would like to put them at least upon an equality, and when we propose to pay these officers in Washington commutation of light and heat, I think, as a matter of simple justice, we ought to pay it to the men who are with the troops.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I will.

Mr. GARNER. I was going to ask the gentleman—it is now half past 5 o'clock, and unless the gentleman wants to make a speech probably the Chair was ready to rule, and unless he desired to discuss the point of order——

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Is that an inquiry?

Mr. GARNER. I did not know whether the gentleman wanted to discuss the point of order any further; otherwise I would call for the regular order.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I was directing my remarks to those whose sympathies are with the soldiers, who are sent to war even in preference to those who remain at home. I do not know whether my remarks were addressed to the gentleman from Texas or not. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question for the Chair to decide depends to a very large extent, practically entirely, upon the question of fact as to whether the commutation for light and heat is embodied in the law for commutation of quarters.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the Chairman will permit me, I will answer more definitely the query the Chairman directed to me—whether there was a separate statute for commutation of light and heat. I have in my hand a letter from the Auditor for the Navy Department, of whom I made direct inquiry as to this subject but not this immediate question, in which he cited my attention to the acts which I have directed to the Chairman's attention as being the only acts which relate to commutation of quarters. Those acts I have read in full to the Chair and the committee, and nowhere is there any reference in those acts to any commutation for light and heat.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair stated——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, in connection with the point of order, suppose an officer went from here to Chicago and we were simply to give him commutation of light, what good would it do him without his having quarters? Commutation of heat is nothing unless he has a house in which to put the heat, and it strikes me "commutation of quarters" ought to be construed to include commutation of light and heat.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was proceeding to state that the question was one very largely to be controlled by facts as to whether the provision for heat and light was in the same law with the provision for commutation for quarters. The Chair is frank to say he is not familiar with all the laws governing the Military Establishment. The Chair, however, has privately asked the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs since this point of order was made if the provision for the commutation of heat and light was in a separate statute. The chairman stated he was of the opinion that the provision of law for the commutation of quarters carries with it commutation for heat and light, and that the provision for heat and light had been allowed by the auditors as incidents necessary and a part of the commutation of quarters. Accepting that as law, the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi simply carries out what the law for commutation already authorizes, and therefore the Chair overrules the point of order.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the ayes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. STAFFORD) there were—ayes 30, noes 14.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do it for the purpose of asking the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] a question about the statement that he made a few moments ago, referring to regulations of the Army about supplying officers from the Quartermaster's Department with equipment, including clothing, and so forth. I was going to say I do not believe enough publicity has been given to it that I would ask him to make a statement in reference to this order.

Mr. KAHN. The Senate passed a bill to allow the Government to furnish Army officers with uniforms at cost. While that bill was pending in the House Committee on Military Affairs the War Department issued an Army regulation allowing officers to buy their uniforms from the Quartermaster's Department at cost.

Mr. HASTINGS. And that extends to all officers?

Mr. KAHN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HASTINGS. That is all.

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 1, line 6, after the words "United States," strike out the words "who maintains a place of abode for a wife, child, or dependent parent," and after the word "furnished," in line 7, strike out the words "at the place where he maintains such a place of abode, without regard to personal quarters furnished him elsewhere," and after the word "sixty-nine," in line 12 on page 1, strike out the words "to be occupied by, and only so long as occupied by said wife, child, or dependent parent."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. HASKELL] a question. I understand from the letter of the Acting Quartermaster General that under existing practice the maximum amount of allowance for quarters is $737,500. His estimate is, if we pass this bill as reported by the committee——

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. Chairman, I can not yield for a statement. I want to discuss the amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I thought the gentleman was going to yield the floor.

Mr. HASKELL. I would like to discuss the amendment.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I feel, as the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE] stated here a little while ago, that we can not establish two systems of pay for Army officers or for Federal employees anywhere, any more than we should establish two schedules of pay for Members of Congress—one for those who happen to be married and another for those who happen to be single.

I personally know a great many men who went into the training camps, and who to-day are in the Officers' Reserve Corps. Their expense for uniforms has been large. Besides they pay for their own mess. It has been said here to-day that the equipment which they need preparatory to going abroad will amount to $1,000. That may not be the exact amount, but, be that as it may, the claim for quarters or commutation thereof is a worthy one with reference to the officer in the Army, whether he is married or not. The expense which he has incurred and the sacrifice made by him in entering the service entitle him to it.

The pay of Army officers was fixed about 10 years ago. Since then, at a modest estimate, the cost of living has increased 50 per cent. Proof of this fact can be found by comparing the cost of the ration of 10 years ago with its cost to-day.

And I challenge the statement made here to-day that the men who accepted commissions in the Army are receiving a higher grade of pay than they were in civil life. I dare say that instead of receiving a higher rate of pay, if the figures were calculated they would show that the men who have commissions to-day in the Officers' Reserve Corps are receiving on an average less than 50 per cent of the pay which they received in civil life.

I know it to be a fact in reviewing the applications for admission to the training camps and in the consideration of applications for commissions in the Army in the War Department that the rate of pay, the earnings of the men per annum in civil life, has been one of the strong determining elements in the situation, because their earnings and success in private life would seem to be an excellent guide, if physically and morally fit, as to their prospective usefulness in the military service, and especially so when the Government has been able to obtain these men at 50 per cent and more less than their earnings before entering the military service.

The spirit of service and sacrifice, and not profit, has controlled these men who have accepted commissions. It has not been a matter of dollars and cents with them at any time as to whether they would serve in this war; but having commenced that service, something that was allowed and paid in the past should not be taken away, as has been the case with the allowance of commutation for quarters.

They have had their obligations at home; some have families, some of them have other dependents, and all of them have incurred large and unusual expense since entering the service.

It does not seem to me sound legislation that we, as the Congress of the United States, should grade the pay of officers on the proposition as to whether a man is married or single, whether he has a dependent, or otherwise, because then you would have to go further and consider how many dependents each officer has or how many children he has, and should he be married and have 12 children, you would have to give him a higher, larger, and more adequate compensation, and the difficulties and work involved would make the plan prohibitive.

So I think, gentlemen, we ought to establish one plan of pay, and give it to the single men, to the officers, whoever they may be, wherever they may be serving, and make them all alike and not give any advantage to the swivel-chair officer, as we have been doing. Give it to the man, preferably, in the field; but, as that does not seem practicable, treat them all the same irrespective of whether they be married or single, and I submit that this, the only fair and uniform, the only proper way to proceed in this matter, will be accomplished if the amendment proposed by myself is adopted.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HASKELL. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Do I understand correctly when I understand the gentleman to say that 50 per cent of the men who have been commissioned are receiving less now than they did in civil life?

Mr. HASKELL. I have not the figures, but from the applications I have seen, and from men that I know, and applications I have seen submitted, I can say as to them, in every case where they were commissioned, that they are receiving not more than 50 per cent of the earnings which they were receiving prior to entering the service as commissioned officers.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HASKELL].

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman from California if he is not willing to accept this amendment?

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, may I say that I am willing to accept it?

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the chairman of the committee inform the members of the committee as to how much additional money will be required in case that is adopted? The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] once stated that the commutation of quarters for these officers under existing practice ran up to $7,000,000; but as I read the letter of the Acting Quartermaster General, Gen. George W. Goethals, the maximum amount, as he estimates, under existing practice, is $737,500. Am I right in that particular?

Mr. DENT. I was under the impression that the figures were different from that.

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask the gentleman's attention to the third paragraph of Gen. Gothals's letter, found on page 3, in which he says that the total amount will be $737,500, and he estimates that if this bill is passed as reported it would cost $33,850,000.

Mr. DENT. Passed in its present form, I recoilect.

Mr. STAFFORD. How much additional will it cost to the Government if the amendment of the gentleman from New York is adopted?

Mr. DENT. It has been variously estimated at from $50,000,000 to $75,000,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. And the gentleman is willing to accept that amendment?

Mr. DENT. Yes. I will state frankly to the gentleman why I am willing to accept the amendment. It will put the bill into conference, and there, I hope, we can work out something that will be fair and equitable.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does not the gentleman think we should have a quorum present when we are determining a question that will involve an expenditure of $50,000,000 or $75,000,000 additional on the part of the Government?

Mr. DENT. That may be; but I would not look at it in that way. That is my feeling about it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Of course, the gentleman from Alabama may not have any feeling for the amount that is involved. I can say to him that I have some feeling for the Treasury when the amendment involves $75,000,000, and I think there are some here who believe there should be a quorum present when such an amendment is adopted.

Mr. DENT. Well, I have never been close enough to the Treasury to have any feeling like that. [Laughter.]

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, if this amendment is going to be accepted, I do not care to say anything; but I want to call attention to this fact: The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] speaks about having some feeling for the Treasury. This amendment simply proposes to pay the officers who are sent to France to fight the battles of this war the same as we pay to officers who stay at home. [Applause.] That is all.

I hope that this House will have as much feeling for the men who go out on the battle field to die for the Republic as they have for the Treasury of the United States, which would not be worth a baubee if these men did not go out and sacrifice themselves for the perpetuity of this Government. I hope the amendment will be agreed to. [Applause.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me a moment before he takes his seat?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It also means that we will pay the men in the various camps away from home now as much as we pay those detailed at the seat of Government?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. It means that we pay them all the same salary, wherever they may be. It puts them on an equality. It makes no discrimination against any of them. As the bill now stands it discriminates against the man who is sent away from home and put into the trenches. That can not be justified. I hope this House will vote for the amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for five minutes in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me the Members of the House to-day have no regard whatever for the taxpayers of the country, and that their only regard is for swelling the salaries, not of the enlisted men who are fighting our cause on foreign battle fields, but for the officers, that least deserve an increase in salary.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. And they base their argument for that increase, or raid on the Treasury of the United States, involving perhaps an amount of $100,000,000, upon an existing practice, localized in only a small portion of this country, which covers an expenditure of about $700,000.

The committee addressed an inquiry to the Quartermaster General as to what would be the saving if the present practice were abandoned, so as to place all on an equality, and he stated that the present policy costs only $737,000.

Many of the Members having received letters, very probably, from interested officers of the Army, and not satisfied with the extent to which the committee has gone by providing an increase of salaries to the officers aggregating $33,000,000, now wish to have an amendment passed that will carry an additional $50,000,000 to $75,000,000 to be imposed upon the Treasury, without a quorum present.

Why, gentlemen, we are just launching upon the third liberty loan, and everywhere the people are responding generously to the call, and that call will be met. But there is going to be a limit to this policy of $100,000,000 of appropriations to a certain favored class. There are many married enlisted men who are receiving the allowances allowed them by the war-insurance act.

This House took decisive action when that bill was under consideration, that under the compensation feature of the war-insurance act the widows of officers should receive no more than the widows of enlisted men, and now you are singling out officers, those of a special class, who are receiving high salaries as it is.

An instance has been cited as warrant for this raid of $33,000,000, and now this additional raid of $50,000,000 to $75,000,000 more, of a lieutenant colonel who receives a salary of $3,600 and who, because he is obliged to entertain abroad, is not able to send any allotment to his wife at home, and she is obliged to go to work for the small pittance of $80 a month. That man ought to be ashamed of himself for allowing his salary of $3,600 to be dissipated abroad and permitting his wife to work here for her and her children's support. If they can not present a better justification for this outrageous raid on the Treasury, this amendment should be defeated.

I am surprised at the gentleman from New York suggesting an amendment that involves an addition of $50,000,000 to $75,000,000, which in all will raise the fund to more than $200,000,000.

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield.

Mr. PLATT. Does the gentleman think it is exactly fair, when a man is ordered into the field, when he risks his life, to cut down his pay?

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, the officers with the true mettle in them are not thinking of their mere pay while they are fighting this war. They are not concerned about their pay. True, they will accept it if we vote it, but the officers generally are satisfied with conditions and are willing to accept those conditions as they are. But you are singling out the officers. You are not considering married enlisted men. Their wives are limited to the pittance of $25 a month, or $35 perhaps if they have children, but here are second lieutenants receiving $1,700 a year, many of whom were not receiving as much as that in civil life.

Mr. PLATT. And many of them were receiving much more.

Mr. STAFFORD. And you are justifying your position entirely by the fact that there is an existing practice that costs the Government $700,000 a year at the utmost and using that as an excuse to increase the appropriation more than a hundred times. This is extravagance run wild.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HASKELL].

The question being taken, the Chairman announced that he was in doubt.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 30, noes 25.

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask for tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were refused, 12 Members—not a sufficient number—rising in support of the demand.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CRISP, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (S. 3863) to provide quarters or commutation thereof to commissioned officers in certain cases, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HASKELL].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] demands a separate vote on the Haskell amendment. The Chair will put the other amendments first.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to submit a request for unanimous consent. I have only one other bill on the list.

The SPEAKER. Had we not better get through with this one first?

Mr. DENT. I was going to submit a request in regard to it, and state the reason why. I have only one other bill on the list to-day and that is the bill which amends the draft act, excepting from the draft citizens of neutral countries who have declared their intention to become citizens of the United States. The bill is recommended by the President, by the War Department, and by the Secretary of State. Under the rule, if this bill should go over I could not get it up. So I ask unanimous consent that immediately after the reading of the Journal to-morrow the vote be taken on S. 3863, providing for commutation of officers' quarters, and that it then be in order to call up H. R. 9932, in regard to citizens of neutral countries.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the pending bill go over until to-morrow, in the status in which it is, and that the first thing after the reading of the Journal and the clearing up of the usual business on the Speaker's table this bill be voted on, and that H. R. 9932 shall be in order immediately after this bill is disposed of. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 2316. An act to promote export trade, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 4102. An act granting the consent of Congress to the county commissioners of Bonner County, Idaho, to construct a bridge across the Clark Fork River in Bonner County, Idaho.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 56 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, April 9, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a deficiency estimate of appropriation, payable from the postal revenues, required by the Post Office Department for expenses of mail bags and equipment, fiscal year 1918 (H. Doc. No. 1018); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of War, submitting certain changes desired in estimates for the Yellowstone National Park for the fiscal year 1919 (H. Doc. No. 1019); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. GALLIVAN: Resolution of the Alabama State Highway Conference, asking for more and better road building by the National Government; to the Committee on Roads.

By Mr. OSBORNE: Petition of Mrs. Margaret Nelson, Los Angeles, Cal., for relief from excessive, exorbitant, and unjust policy assessments; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, memorial of Stanton Post, No. 55, of California and Nevada, Grand Army of the Republic, located at Los Angeles, Cal., requesting Congress to unite the suggested memorial holiday proposed for May 9 with the present national Memorial Day, May 30, to the end that the heroic service of our comrades who preserved the Union may not be lost to history; to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. RAKER: Petitions of Everwear Manufacturing Co., Makins Produce Co., the Elkus Co., Hooper & Jennings, and Coffin, Redington Co., in vigorous support of Senate bill 3962; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, resolution of the executive committee of the Authors' League of America, in opposition to the zone system as applied to second-class mail matter; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of the Mendota (Ill.) Woman's Club, protesting against the zone system and asking for its immediate repeal; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of H. Tillman and 35 others, of Jenny Lind, Cal., favoring war prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Langley & Michaels Co., San Francisco, Cal., relative to Senate bill 3962, providing for monthly installments for payments of income and excess-profits taxes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of Pacific Electric Railway Co., relative to provision made in war-finance bill for financing public utilities having maturities coming due; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of citizens of Frazee, Minn., against House bill 128, relative to interference with religious liberties, etc.; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, memorial of citizens of Fergus Falls, Minn., favoring compulsory military training; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WOODYARD: Petition of the Rotary Club of Huntington, W. Va., favoring the enactment of a law changing the time of payment of income and excess-profits taxes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, April 9, 1918.

(Legislative day of Saturday, April 6, 1918.)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Vice President being absent, the President pro tempore assumed the chair.

PUNISHMENT OF SEDITIOUS ACTS AND UTTERANCES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8753) to amend section 3, title 1, of the act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 15, 1917.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the pending amendment of the committee as amended.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, after line 17, insert the following:

and whoever, when the United States is at war, shall willfully utter, print, write, or publish any disloyal, profane, scurrilous, contemptuous, or abusive language about the form of government of the United States, or the Constitution of the United States, or the soldiers or sailors of the United States, or the flag of the United States, or the uniform of the Army or Navy of the United States, or any language intended to bring the form of government of the United States, or the Constitution of the United States, or the soldiers or sailors of the United States, or the flag of the United States, or the uniform of the Army or Navy of the United States into contempt, scorn, contumely, or disrepute, or shall willfully utter, print, write, or publish any language calculated to incite or inflame resistance to any duly constituted Federal or State authority in connection with the prosecution of the war, or shall willfully display the flag of any foreign enemy, or shall by utterance, writing, printing, publication, or language spoken, urge, incite, or advocate any curtailment of production in this country of any thing or things, product or products, necessary or essential to the prosecution of the war in which the United States may be engaged, with intent by such curtailment to cripple or hinder the United States in the prosecution of the war, and whoever shall willfully advocate, favor, teach, defend, or suggest the doing of any of the acts or things in this section enumerated, and whoever shall by word or act support or favor the cause of the German Empire or its allies in the present war or by word or act oppose the cause of the United States therein.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 8764. An act to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the admission of the State of Illinois into the Union, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore announced his signature to the enrolled bill (H. R. 9314) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, which had previously been signed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3528) to suspend for the period of the present war sections 45, 46, and 56 of an act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2917) to amend section 15 of the act approved June 3, 1916, entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," as amended by the act approved May 12, 1917, entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes," with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3803) authorizing the President during the existing emergency to sell supplies, materials, equipment, or other property heretofore or hereafter purchased, acquired, or manufactured by the United States in connection with or incidental to the prosecution of the war, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3980) to prevent interference with the use of homing pigeons by the United States, to provide a penalty for such interference, and for other purposes, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 9898. An act to establish in the Coast Artillery Corps of the Regular Army an Army mine-planter service;

H. R. 9901. An act to give indemnity for damages caused by American forces abroad;

H. R. 9902. An act to amend section 8 of an act entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May 18, 1917;

H. R. 9570. An act to amend articles 52 and 53 of section 1342 of the Revised Statutes as amended by an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes," approved August 29, 1916, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 9163. An act to provide for reimbursement of actual expenses or flat per diem for enlisted men traveling on duty under competent orders.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

S. 4102. An act granting the consent of Congress to the county commissioners of Bonner County, Idaho, to construct a bridge across the Clark Fork River in Bonner County, Idaho; and

H. R. 2316. An act to promote export trade, and for other purposes.

PETITIONS.

Mr. NELSON. I have a large number of petitions of numerous citizens of Minnesota asking that the so-called spy bill be amended in order to preserve the peace and protect our soldiers against an enemy in the rear. I ask that the petitions may lie on the table, as the bill is pending.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petitions will lie on the table.

Mr. KELLOGG. I wish to present several petitions from citizens of Minnesota, one of which, without the names, I ask be incorporated in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the petition referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMBOY, MINN., March 18, 1918.

Senator FRANK B. KELLOGG.
Washington, D. C.

HONORED SIR: We, the undersigned, do hereby most respectfully and earnestly petition that you use your best and continuous efforts to secure the closing of all places in which alcoholic beverages are sold or otherwise disposed of during the war. By so stopping this traffic we believe that a great and practically criminal waste of the materials out of which these beverages are made will be stopped and the best interests of the United States and its associates in this great contest for liberty will be conserved.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. MARTIN. From the Committee on Appropriations I report back with amendments the bill (H. R. 10358) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 362) thereon. I give notice that at the earliest reasonable opportunity I shall ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY.

Mr. OWEN, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 3895) to regulate the allowance of overdrafts by national banking associations, and to provide penalties for its violation (Rept. No. 363);

A bill (S. 3898) to require cashiers and other officers of a national banking association handling its funds to give bond and to prevent its officers and employees from making erasures on the books of the association (Rept. No. 364); and

A bill (S. 3899) to repeal the sixth section of an act approved July 12, 1882, entitled "An act to enable national banking associations to extend their corporate existence, and for other purposes" (Rept. No. 365).

He also, from the same committee, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each with an amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 3902) to provide a penalty for obtaining loans or credit from a national banking association based on false statements (Rept. No. 366); and

A bill (H. R. 10691) to amend section 5200 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (Rept. No. 367).

He also, from the same committee, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally with amendments and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 3893) to amend and reenact section 5239, Revised Statutes of the United States (Rept. No. 368);

A bill (S. 3894) to amend and reenact section 5147, Revised Statutes of the United States (Rept. No. 369);

A bill (S. 3896) to amend and reenact section 691a of chapter 18, subchapter 7, of the Code of Laws of the District of Columbia (Rept. No. 370);

A bill (S. 3897) to amend and reenact section 713 of chapter 18, subchapter 10, of the Code of Laws of the District of Columbia (Rept. No. 371);

A bill (S. 3900) to amend and reenact section 5172 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (Rept. No. 372);

A bill (S. 3901) to authorize national banking associations to establish and maintain branches (Rept. No. 373);

A bill (S. 3903) to amend and reenact section 5137, Revised Statutes of the United States (Rept. No. 374);

A bill (S. 3905) to amend and reenact section 5209 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (Rept. No. 375);

A bill (S. 3910) to prevent usury, provide penalties for its violation, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 376);

A bill (H. R. 10205) to provide for the consolidation of national banking associations (Rept. No. 377); and

A bill (S. 3904) to amend and reenact sections 5222 and 5230, Revised Statutes of the United States (Rept. No. 378).

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. PITTMAN:

A bill (S. 4292) to conserve the gold supply of the United States; to permit the settlement in silver of trade balances adverse to the United States; to provide silver for subsidiary coinage and for commercial use; to assist foreign governments at war with the enemies of the United States; and for the above purposes to stabilize the price and encourage the production of silver; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. HARDING:

A bill (S. 4293) for the relief of Lucinda Reveal; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 4294) granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Adams; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PHELAN:

A bill (S. 4295) to restore to the public domain certain lands heretofore reserved for a bird reservation in Siskiyou and Modoc Counties, Cal., and Klamath County, Oreg., and for other purposes (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Public Lands.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

H. R. 9898. An act to establish in the Coast Artillery Corps of the Regular Army an Army mine-planter service;

H. R. 9901. An act to give indemnity for damages caused by American forces abroad;

H. R. 9902. An act to amend section 8 of an act entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May 18, 1917;

H. R. 9570. An act to amend articles 52 and 53 of section 1342 of the Revised Statutes as amended by an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes," approved August 29, 1916, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 9163. An act to provide for reimbursement of actual expenses or flat per diem for enlisted men traveling on duty under competent orders.

PUNISHMENT OF SEDITIOUS ACTS AND UTTERANCES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8753) to amend section 3, title 1, of the act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 15, 1917.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hardwick	Myers	Sherman
Beckham	Henderson	Nelson	Smith, Ga.
Chamberlain	Hitchcock	Nugent	Smith, Md.
Colt	Johnson, Cal.	Overman	Smoot
Culberson	Jones, Wash.	Page	Swanson
Dillingham	Kellogg	Pittman	Tillman
France	Lodge	Saulsbury	Underwood
Gallinger	McNary	Shafroth	Vardaman
Hale	Martin	Sheppard	Wolcott

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] is necessarily absent in connection with the liberty-loan campaign.

I also make the same announcement in reference to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON].

Mr. ROBINSON. I desire to announce that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] is detained on important public business.

Mr. GERRY. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] and the senior Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] are detained on official business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Thirty-six Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of the absent Senators.

The Secretary called the names of the absentees, and Mr. STERLING, Mr. THOMAS, Mr. WADSWORTH, and Mr. WEEKS answered to their names when called.

Mr. KING, Mr. ROBINSON, Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. SHIELDS, Mr. GERRY, Mr. KIRBY, Mr. POINDEXTER, Mr. NEW, Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, Mr. REED, Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. THOMPSON, Mr. HARDING, Mr. MCCUMBER, Mr. BORAH, Mr. PENROSE, Mr. KNOX, Mr. FLETCHER, Mr. SMITH of South Carolina, Mr. HOLLIS, and Mr. TRAMMELL entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-one Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is still as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. MCKELLAR. I offer an amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. Now that a quorum has been developed I wish to present a proposed unanimous-consent agreement. I will state that I do not want to encumber the RECORD with the telegrams I have received as manager of the bill, but the sentiment of this country has been very much aroused against the Senate for delaying the bill. I ask the Secretary to read a telegram I received this morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF UNITED STATES ATTORNEY,
EASTERN DISTRICT OF NORTH CAROLINA,
Wilmington, N. C., April 8, 1918.

Senator LEE S. OVERMAN,
Chairman Senate Judiciary Committee, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I hope you will be able to press the espionage bill amendment through to a prompt termination.

We have the largest percentage of Germans in this town of any place in the State, and many of our people are getting restless. Candidly, I fear violence, and it is only necessary for something to start.

People are beginning to have small meetings, and there is talk of mass meetings to stop pro-German talk. It is reported to me that a small meeting in discussing this matter last night said: "To hell with the United States attorney's office. The Federal laws passed since the war only justify arrest for disorderly conduct, and we can handle the situation if necessary," or words to that effect. I have cautioned the people about violating the law until I feel that there is a general impression here that my office is impotent to check pro-German propaganda.

Respectfully,

J. O. CARR,
United States Attorney.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am in receipt of letters from district attorneys all over the country, from California to Maine, on this subject. The people are very much aroused. If we want mob law, just go on and delay this bill. If we want to have law and order in this country, we should pass the bill without delay. I therefore propose the following unanimous-consent agreement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will say to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] that the amendment offered by him is not now in order, the amendment of the committee having been adopted. The only method of getting action upon the amendment as in Committee of the Whole would be to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. MCKELLAR. What was the amendment just adopted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The committee amendment as amended.

Mr. MCKELLAR. May I ask how that affects this particular amendment?

Mr. OVERMAN. I suggest that the Senator present his amendment in the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be in order in the Senate.

Mr. MCKELLAR. I offered the amendment and had it printed several days ago, and I do not understand just why it should not be in order in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. OVERMAN. No advantage will be taken of the Senator. I should like to get the question of a unanimous-consent agreement settled.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Of course, it will be necessary for the Senator to call up his amendment in the Senate. It will not be taken up automatically.

Mr. MCKELLAR. I am still at a loss to know in what particular it is not in order to amend the committee amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment has just been adopted in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Then I give notice that I shall offer the amendment in the Senate.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am inclined to accept the Senator's amendment when it comes up in the Senate.

Mr. MCKELLAR. That is entirely satisfactory.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed unanimous-consent agrement sent to the desk by the Senator from North Carolina will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT.

It is agreed by unanimous consent that at not later than 5 o'clock p. m. on the calendar day of Tuesday, April 9, 1918, the Senate will proceed to vote, without further debate, upon any amendment that may be pending, any amendment that may be offered, and upon the bill H. R. 8753, a bill to amend section 3, title 1, of the act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with foreign relations," etc., through the regular parliamentary stages to its final disposition; and that after the hour of 2 o'clock p. m. on said calendar day no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 30 minutes upon the bill, or more than once or longer than 20 minutes upon any amendment offered thereto.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair presumes that the proposed agreement was submitted in advance of a roll call to develop if there was any opposition to it.

Mr. OVERMAN. A quorum has just been developed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate has done business since the call.

Mr. BORAH. I did not understand the agreement. Are we to begin voting at 2 o'clock to-day?

Mr. OVERMAN. At 5 o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. At 5 o'clock.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I rose to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. FRANCE. When was the committee amendment as amended adopted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Immediately subsequent to the call for a quorum.

Mr. FRANCE. I was here and paying attention to the proceedings and did not hear the announcement. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Maryland will be in order in the Senate.

Mr. FRANCE. I desire to reserve the right to offer it in the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will have that right.

Mr. CUMMINS. There is one amendment which I think ought to be adopted to the amendment that has been under discussion for a day or two. I did not get here in time to offer it before the adoption of the amendment. I assume it will be in order when the bill reaches the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa can offer the amendment in the Senate. The Senator from North Carolina proposes a unanimous-consent agreement, which requires a call of the roll. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hitchcock	Nugent	Sterling
Beckham	Johnson, Cal.	Overman	Swanson
Borah	Kellogg	Page	Thomas
Colt	King	Penrose	Thompson
Culberson	Kirby	Poindexter	Tillman
Cummins	Knox	Ransdell	Trammell
Fletcher	McCumber	Reed	Wadsworth
France	McKellar	Robinson	Williams
Gerry	McNary	Saulsbury	Wolcott
Harding	Myers	Sheppard
Hardwick	Nelson	Shields
Henderson	New	Smith, S. C.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is not present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. CURTIS, Mr. HOLLIS, Mr. JONES of Washington, Mr. SHAFROTH, Mr. SIMMONS, Mr. SMOOT, and Mr. SMITH of Georgia answered to their names when called.

Mr. PITTMAN, Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. UNDERWOOD, Mr. DILLINGHAM, Mr. VARDAMAN, Mr. LODGE, Mr. SMITH of Arizona, Mr. WALSH, and Mr. CALDER entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I wish to announce the absence of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] on account of official business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-one Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the committee amendment was adopted as in Committee of the Whole be reconsidered, because I think a number of Senators here did not understand the amendment that was being adopted, and quite a number of Senators, I believe, have amendments which they desire to offer. I would suggest that we have another vote on the amendment as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. OVERMAN. If I can obtain a unanimous-consent agreement for a final vote I shall agree to that proposition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question before the Senate is the unanimous-consent agreement, for which a quorum has just been developed. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent agreement? The Chair will recognize the Senator from Maryland immediately after the disposition of the question.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Let the unanimous-consent agreement be read, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the proposed unanimous-consent agreement.

The Secretary read as follows:

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT.

It is agreed by unanimous consent that at not later than 5 o'clock p. m. on the calendar day of Tuesday, April 9, 1918, the Senate will proceed to vote, without further debate, upon any amendment that may be pending, any amendment that may be offered, and upon the bill H. R. 8753, a bill to amend section 3, title 1, of the act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with foreign relations," etc., through the regular parliamentary stages to its final disposition; and that after the hour of 2 o'clock p. m. on said calendar day no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 30 minutes upon the bill, or more than once or longer than 20 minutes upon any amendment offered thereto.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the proposed unanimous-consent agreement?

Mr. REED. I appeal again to the Senator from North Carolina not to insist upon that unanimous-consent agreement. If we had stuck to the text of our work on yesterday, instead of going into by-paths, we should have been far along with this bill.

My sole objection to making an agreement of this kind is this: Frequently it happens that amendments of the most important character are offered and are inadequately understood, because there is no time given for a proper statement of the questions involved. There is no necessity, in my opinion, for a unanimous-consent agreement as to this bill. I believe if the Senator from North Carolina will simply stay here by his bill we shall get through the bill in a very short time. I want to see it passed in some form just as much as does the Senator from North Carolina, though I think there are some modifications of it which might properly be made. I hope the Senator will merely allow us to go on with the bill. We have met here this morning at 11 o'clock, and I think the debate can be very readily proceeded with.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I want to suggest that, if unanimous consent can not be obtained to close the debate at 5 o'clock, could we not at least obtain unanimous consent limiting debate to 10 and 5 minutes after 2 o'clock? That would give an opportunity on every amendment to meet the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri. That is long enough to discuss amendments anyway.

Mr. REED. I confess, Mr. President, that I do not see any reason why this unanimous consent should be asked. There seems to be a sort of theory in the Senate that a vote can not be obtained on a bill unless we have unanimous consent. That is born of the fact that we used to have some very long debates here that were without use. I am not going to object if the proposition is modified, because I do not want to stand here as the only Senator in the Senate protesting against this sort of action; but it is not the right way to pass bills, and especially bills that involve great constitutional and fundamental questions. There has been no disposition evinced here to delay this bill. The greatest delay which has occurred has been between Senators who have been overanxious, I think, to evince their own patriotism by denouncing that of others.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the proposed unanimous-consent agreement?

Mr. REED. I object to it in its present form. If the Senator from North Carolina will modify it as suggested by the Senator from Georgia—that is, by taking off the time limit and letting it stand with a 20-minute limitation as to amendments—I shall not object.

Mr. OVERMAN. There has been five days' debate on one amendment. I have stayed by the bill here, trying to get it through; and I think I have been very lenient. I want to push the bill to a conclusion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made. The bill is still before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I think in justice to Senators who were not present early this morning and could not be here, that I ought to ask to reconsider the vote by which the committee amendment was adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That motion has been made by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE], and the Chair stated that he would recognize the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand that the Senator from Maryland asks unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted so that the Senator may offer his amendment. I hope that will be done, for I do not want to take any advantage of any Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE]? The Chair hears none, and the vote by which the committee amendment as amended was agreed to is reconsidered.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, I now offer the amendment of which I spoke a few moments ago.

Mr. BORAH. Will the Senator permit me to offer an amendment to harmonize with the amendment which was adopted last night before he proceeds to the consideration of his amendment?

Mr. MCKELLAR. I think the amendment which I intend to offer will be accepted by the chairman of the committee and agreed to; but if there is any question about it, I shall be glad to yield to the request of the Senator from Idaho.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment to the committee amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR].

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 22, of the committee amendment, it is proposed to strike out the words "soldiers or sailors" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "military or naval forces," so that it will read:

or the Constitution of the United States or the military or naval forces of the United States.

Mr. OVERMAN. So far as I am concerned, I accept that amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. It is also proposed by Mr. MCKELLAR, on page 3, line 1, to strike out the words "soldiers or sailors" and insert in lieu thereof "military or naval forces."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I offer the amendment, notice of which I have heretofore given, to the amendment of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland offers an amendment to the amendment, which the Secretary will state.

The SECRETARY. At the end of section 3 it is proposed to add the following proviso:

Provided, however, That nothing in this act shall be construed as limiting the liberty or impairing the right of any individual to publish or speak what is true, with good motives and for justifiable ends.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, there is no necessity for that amendment. If it were adopted, I think it would be difficult for any jury in the world to convict a guilty man. Under this bill every person charged with an offense has a jury trial. The question under this bill is not whether a man has spoken words which are true or false; but the whole basis of the bill is disloyalty; it is all founded on that. I see no reason for the adoption of the amendment and hope it will be defeated.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I do not desire at this time to discuss the amendment. I think it speaks for itself, but I should like to have the yeas and nays on the amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask that the amendment to the amendment be read again, and that it be read not quite so rapidly?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will again state the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was again stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. FRANCE. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask that the amendment to the amendment be stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will again state the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was again stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland on which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. VARDAMAN (when Mr. BANKHEAD'S name was called). I desire again to announce the absence of the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] on account of official business.

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). My pair, the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN], is necessarily absent, but I am released from my pair with him on the amendments to this bill. Therefore I am at liberty to vote, and vote "nay."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] and vote "nay."

Mr. WALSH (when his name was called). I inquire if the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He has not voted.

Mr. WALSH. I have a general pair with that Senator, and in his absence withhold my vote.

Mr. WOLCOTT (when his name was called). I inquire if the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He has not.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I have a general pair with that Senator, and in his absence withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. FERNALD (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire if the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He has not.

Mr. FERNALD. I have a pair with the junior Senator from South Dakota, which I transfer to the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. REED (after having voted in the affirmative). I neglected to announce the transfer of my pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to my colleague, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE]. I make that transfer and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. OVERMAN (after having voted in the negative). I wish to announce that I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], which I transfer to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. GOFF] on account of illness.

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]; and

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES].

The result was announced—yeas 31, nays 33, as follows:

YEAS—31.

Borah	Harding	Lodge	Reed
Calder	Hardwick	McCumber	Sherman
Chamberlain	Hitchcock	McNary	Smith, Ga.
Cummins	Johnson, Cal.	Nelson	Smoot

Frelinghuysen	Kendrick	Smith, Md	Wolcott
Goff	Kenyon	Smith, Mich.

So Mr. FRANCE'S amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I desire to offer the following amendment:

No person who has committed any of the offenses described in this act shall be eligible for office, and if such person is now holding office under the United States he shall be discharged therefrom upon his guilt being declared by the head of the department in which he is employed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CUMMINS. Let it be stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Pennsylvania proposes the following amendment:

No person who has committed any of the offenses described in this act shall be eligible for office, and if such person is now holding office under the United States he shall be discharged therefrom upon his guilt being declared by the head of the department in which he is employed.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania a question with reference to the noneligibility? There is no provision in his amendment to determine how the guilt or innocence of the party shall be determined. The only provision along that line in the amendment is with regard to a man who is now in office.

Mr. PENROSE. I agree with the Senator. I think that ought to be passed on—where there has not been a conviction in a court—by the head of the department. He ought to consider carefully whether the applicant for office has been guilty of these offenses in the past.

Mr. BORAH. I assume that the Senator, in drawing the amendment perhaps hurriedly, intended to incorporate in the clause with reference to noneligibility the same provision as to determining the guilt or innocence that he has proposed with reference to the person who is now in office.

Mr. PENROSE. Yes; I think so.

Mr. BORAH. I suggest, then, that the amendment be changed in that respect.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I should like to ask a question of the Senator from Pennsylvania. Does he intend his amendment to apply to elective offices as well as to appointive offices?

Mr. PENROSE. I do not see why it should not; but I had in mind appointive offices, having in mind the fact that the departments here in Washington contain a very large number of appointees who have had very strong pro-German leanings, and have written scurrilous reflections and treasonable articles on the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. CUMMINS. I see no objection at all to the amendment in principle, but who would discharge an officer of the United States elected by the people?

Mr. PENROSE. I am willing to modify the amendment so as to apply only to appointive officers. I drew it hastily.

Mr. CUMMINS. I should like to see it extended to elective officers as well. I think it would have a great operation; and yet I hardly believe it is possible to discharge an elective officer, for there is no one to pass upon his qualifications except those who elected him to the body to which he may come.

Mr. PENROSE. I suppose quo warranto proceedings would lie against an elective officer, based on the charge that he had been guilty of these offenses, but I do not see why we should permit men like Mr. Creel, for instance, whose scurrilous and defamatory utterances on the Constitution of the United States were read in this body the other day, to be holding an office and publishing a publicity chronicle when he is smeared all over with treason.

Mr. CUMMINS. There is no reason for excepting any such man; but I believe the Senator would have a more practical amendment if he were to limit it to appointive officers.

Mr. PENROSE. I will ask the Secretary to put in "appointive officers."

Mr. FLETCHER and Mr. KNOX addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes; I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. Would it carry out the Senator's idea to provide that no person who has been convicted by a court of competent jurisdiction should be eligible for any office?

Mr. PENROSE. No; my amendment goes much further than that. The purpose of the amendment is to cover those cases where there has been no conviction, and where, in the opinion of the head of the department, the applicant for the office has been guilty of these treasonable utterances.

Mr. OVERMAN. Does the Senator think his amendment would refer to a man who uttered sedition four or five years ago?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes, sir; I do.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. I think the suggestion made by the Senator from Florida would be the only workable proposition which it would be fair to put into this kind of a bill. If a person has been convicted or has come under the terms of this bill, and it has been established, of course, he ought to be discharged from office; but certainly a person ought to have a chance before he is discharged from office to be heard, and under this bill he can only be heard in a court.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, this provision does not contemplate a penalty of imprisonment or fine. It simply refers to the qualifications for holding office; and it certainly seems to me that the head of the department can be fairly asked to pass upon a charge of treasonable utterance made five years ago, perchance, as he would any other charge or statement affecting the qualifications of the applicant.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes.

Mr. STONE. The Senator mentioned Mr. Creel.

Mr. PENROSE. Yes.

Mr. STONE. Mr. Creel is an appointive officer, is he not?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes.

Mr. STONE. He is a part of the Government, and at this time, so far as the influence of his activities goes, a rather important part of the Government. It may be, Mr. President, that the remark the Senator made a moment ago, in which he said in substance, if not in exact terms, that Mr. Creel was branded all over with marks of treason——

Mr. PENROSE. Treason under this bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator let me interrupt him?

Mr. STONE. Just wait until I have finished, please.

Mr. OVERMAN. Before this debate goes on, I want to say to the Senator from Pennsylvania that his amendment is not now in order. Perhaps he would be willing to take it and reform it as he wants to, probably, and introduce it later, because the pending amendment now is the committee amendment. The committee amendments have to be considered before other amendments. The Senator's amendment is not in order at this time.

Mr. PENROSE. I am willing to withdraw the amendment.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, if I may be permitted to complete my inquiry, if this bill becomes a law, and if the Senator's amendment should be made a part of it, would a Senator be in any sense responsible for such an utterance as my distinguished friend made a moment ago about Mr. Creel, even on the floor of the Senate, so as to bring him under its provisions? I mean as it has been offered, including elective officers as well as others. I think the Senator now proposes to modify it so as to apply only to appointive officers.

Mr. PENROSE. Yes.

Mr. STONE. But I ask the distinguished Senator, if his amendment went into the bill, and he, outside of the Senate, on the stump or in conversation, charged that Mr. Creel, or the head of any other bureau or department of the Government, was guilty of treason, and thus brought him into disrepute before the people, whether, in his opinion, he would not be liable to arrest for that act?

Mr. PENROSE. Well, Mr. President, I can see grave peril in anyone, Senator or other person, declaring his real sentiments about Mr. Creel outside of this body. Anyone who would criticize the editor of the court chronicle in a licentious spirit would be doubtless brought into court. I would take my chance, however.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to his colleague?

Mr. PENROSE. I do.

Mr. KNOX. I desire to ask my colleague how the question of guilt is to be determined? As I understood the amendment as it was read, the guilty party is to be not only removed from office, but rendered ineligible for office thereafter. Now, who is going to determine the question of guilt?

Mr. PENROSE. It is not exactly a question of guilt, Mr. President, in the sense that penalties of imprisonment or fine follow. It is more a question of qualifications. Under the amendment my purpose is to have the head of the department pass on the qualifications of the applicant.

Mr. KNOX. But there is no more severe penalty than disqualifying a man from holding office.

Mr. PENROSE. Well, it is a severe penalty to many.

Mr. KNOX. I would be heartily in favor of an amendment such as this, which it struck me might be in the mind of my colleague, that upon conviction of any of the offenses described in this bill the party convicted should be removed from office and rendered thereafter ineligible, and, in case of an elective office, that the office should be declared vacant. I do not see how you are giving the head of a department, really, any more power than he has to-day. There is not any doubt in the world that the head of any department could dismiss a man for disloyalty, although, of course, he could not disqualify him from holding office in the future; but I should like to see a workable amendment here. I doubt that this is a practical way of dealing with it.

Mr. PENROSE. I am willing to concede, Mr. President, that any head of a department could exercise this power, just as he could look into the qualifications of the applicant for office from the point of view of his integrity, or his industry, or any other qualification; but my observation leads me to the conclusion that this particular defect is not looked into by the heads of the departments, and I offer the amendment to impress on the executive heads of the Government the fact that this is one of the phases of the qualifications of an applicant that ought to be considered.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator's amendment, if embodied in a law, would give moral strength to the head of the department, too; would it not?

Mr. PENROSE. I should think so; and it would also cause a considerable breach in the ranks of the officeholders.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir. I will direct the Senator's attention to the National Conference of American Lecturers, which began a session in Washington yesterday at Continental Memorial Hall. These are a number of distinguished gentlemen who are engaged in governing the country from various angles. My favorite official, Mr. Creel, censor of all the pitiless publicity now in our country, used the following language, which I think would come within this amendment:

> I will be proud to my dying day that my country was inadequately prepared when it entered the conflict.

I do not know whether this has been referred to before to-day or not, as I have been attending a committee meeting and have not been in the deliberations of the Senate up to this time. What does the Senator think of an officer of the Government who makes th t kind of a declaration?

Mr. PENROSE. Well, Mr. President, I think it betrays such an utter lack of good common sense that it is hardly worthy of anything but contempt. We all hear rumors of the pedigrees of some of these gentlemen now holding places of very high authority and autocratic power. I do not think I exaggerate when I say that in their brief hour of despotism they insult reputable business men who come down here to confer with them. We hear all kinds of rumors about their sympathy with the enemy, their failure to put out a flag when everyone in the town and on the street had flags displayed, and the fact that their utterances were so open that they almost incurred social ostracism in the little towns which they inhabited. Many of them have written books, some of which have strangely disappeared from circulation in recent months. I am not going to mention the name of this gentleman, because I have nothing to prove about the charge except that it is in a newspaper, which is not legal proof; but here is an account of a person recommended by a certain Senator for the Waterways Commission. It is said that he used to boast of his Bavarian parentage. Recent war dispatches told of a large number of Australian soldiers being taken prisoners by Bavarian troops and they were later found with their throats cut. It is also stated that it was the Bavarian troops, hungry for the blood of Americans and for the German reward, who first made the attack upon the liberty boys in France.

In seeking national appointments it is not believed that American Bavarians will present with the petition for appointment a record of their Bavarian ancestry. Are there not many other capable engineers in the six or eight Pacific Coast States eligible, without the necessity of selecting a man who advertises his Bavarian ancestry?

We all know not only scores but hundreds of such cases, Mr. President, and if some humble and obscure citizen, as occurred hundreds of times during the last year, shall be arrested for an indiscreet utterance, due to ignorance or prejudice, and, if not convicted, subjected to an expenditure of a considerable amount of money before he can get out of the toils of the court, why should we not have the personnel of our departments purged of anyone to whom suspicion attaches?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. PENROSE. Certainly.

Mr. THOMAS. May I suggest to the Senator the propriety of striking out the word "committed" in his amendment and inserting the words "been convicted of," so as to read:

> No person who has been convicted of any of the offenses described in this act—

And so forth.

Mr. PENROSE. No; that would not cover in any way what I have in my mind. As I have already stated, a person who five years ago had uttered the treasonable and ridiculous statement that Mr. Creel did, as recited here in the Senate, about the Constitution of the United States and never been convicted——

Mr. OVERMAN. Would the Senator deny a person the right of trial by jury when he has committed a crime?

Mr. PENROSE. Oh, certainly not, where the penalty is imprisonment or a fine. I do not think the Senator himself would contend that a jury trial is necessary to remove a man from office.

Mr. THOMAS. I really feel that unless the Senator amends his amendment as I suggested it will be entirely inoperative. The Constitution of the United States forbids an ex post facto law, and it certainly forbids forfeiture of any civil right in the absence of a conviction. I do not think that the courts would for a moment hold that it applied unless it was one of the penalties that would follow conviction.

Mr. PENROSE. This is not a conviction to which a penalty attaches or loss of liberty even.

Mr. THOMAS. The deprivation of office is a penalty. I do not think there is any question about that.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I should like to submit to the Senator from Pennsylvania this suggestion: Article II, section 4 of the Constitution provides as follows:

> The President, Vice President, and all civil officers of the United States shall be removed from office on impeachment for and conviction of treason, bribery, or other high crimes and misdemeanors.

The offenses defined in the statute are felonies. The Constitution undertakes to define how officers may be removed in connection with offenses committed and says there must be a conviction. I should like to submit to the Senator the question whether he thinks that anything short of a conviction could constitutionally permit a removal from office?

Mr. PENROSE. The contention is ridiculous. Does the Senator mean to say that a postmaster can not be removed without impeachment?

Mr. OVERMAN. The amendment says "convicted by the head of a department."

Mr. PENROSE. So is a postmaster convicted by the head of a department of malfeasance in office.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I take it, Mr. President, postmasters are subject to the performance of their duties under the rules and regulations of the Post Office Department, and if they do not comply with the postal laws and regulations they can be removed, of course.

Mr. PENROSE. They are convicted by the head of the department——

Mr. OVERMAN. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is the amendment proposed by the committee. The Chair is informed by the Secretary that he can not find to what part of the amendment the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania can be applied.

Mr. OVERMAN. We have not disposed of the committee amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Carolina make a point of order against the amendment?

Mr. OVERMAN. I do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that there appears to be no place in the amendment under consideration where the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania can be inserted.

Mr. PENROSE. I will make a new paragraph to the bill, and that is not subject to a point of order. Amendments are frequently offered to be put at a suitable place, and if the Secretary can not find out I will find out in a few minutes for him. But if the Senator in charge of the bill desires to go on with the committee amendment, and it will facilitate his labors, I will withdraw my amendment and offer it again.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, if the Senator from Pennsylvania is through with his amendment, I desire to offer one.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state to the Senator from Pennsylvania that the question under consideration is the amendment of the committee, and unless his amendment is an amendment to that amendment it is out of order.

Mr. PENROSE. I will withdraw the amendment and offer it later.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I desire to suggest an amendment at the close of line 5, on page 3. The provision reads:

> Or shall utter, print, write, or publish any language calculated to incite or inflame resistance to any duly constituted Federal or State authority in connection with the prosecution of the war.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have not stated my amendment yet.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia declines to yield.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; I yield.

Mr. FRANCE. I merely rose to reserve the right to offer the amendment of which I previously gave notice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has that right. The Senator from Georgia will proceed.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The word "authority," as used in line 6, I think, has two meanings—one an act of authority and the other the person exercising the authority. As used here it seems to me the reasonable construction would be that it means the person exercising the authority. If that is the true meaning of the word, the sentence would mean anyone using language printed, written, published, or spoken calculated to incite or inflame resistance to any duly constituted Federal or State official. That would be the effect of the language if the term "authority" means what it seems to me it means here.

Suppose an order was issued like that issued by Mr. Garfield which would have closed all the lumber mills in Florida for the purpose of saving coal and opening up the port of New York, and I advised the lumber mills that the order was without authority and advised them to go on with their work. Would I go to the penitentiary for it? I am afraid I would. Yet I should like to have a privilege of that character, hoping, however, that a similar occasion will never again arise.

My suggestion is, after the word "any," at the close of line 5, to add "legal act or order of a," so that it will read:

> Or shall utter, print, write, or publish any language calculated to incite or inflame resistance to any legal act or order of a duly constituted Federal or State authority in connection with the prosecution of the war.

I offer that amendment to the amendment.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, may I make a suggestion to change the word to "lawful" act. I think the word "lawful" would be better than the word "legal" in this connection.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I like that better. Let it read "any lawful act or order."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be so modified. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Georgia to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. NORRIS. May I ask the Senator from Georgia a question? In the illustration he gave, I take it, even if his amendment were agreed to and the advice that he mentions were given, in case such an order were issued, he would even with his amendment run a chance, would he not, of going to the penitentiary for 20 years if he happened to be mistaken about it as being lawful?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I ought to know what I was doing, and if I did do it in that particular instance, I would be willing to run the chance.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator were giving advice and the penalty for mistaken advice, however honestly given, meant a penitentiary offense for 20 years he would probably charge a great deal bigger fee for giving it than though such risk were not taken, and it would be a very difficult matter for anyone in ordinary circumstances to get any competent advice.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I answer the Senator in this way. If there is any doubt about the order it ought not to be resisted. If in connection with the war any public official does an act or issues an order where there has been any serious doubt about it I am opposed to resistance; I would advise compliance with the order pending the war. All I ask in the amendment is that it shall be a lawful act or order and not leave the crime to consist of criticizing the officer.

Mr. NORRIS. A difficulty, it seems to me, arises in this, that men might honestly disagree as to whether it were lawful or not. I think they have honestly disagreed in regard to Mr. Garfield's order, for instance.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator from Georgia yield to me a minute?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. I simply want to call his attention to the fact that the word "shall," in line 4, is qualified by the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] so that it reads "shall willfully." It has been amended so that the phrase will read "shall willfully" do so. The word "willfully" changes the tenor of it and makes it clear, so that there can not arise any mistake. It must have been done willfully for that purpose.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then I think the language will be safe if the amendment I suggested is adopted.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not object to the amendment, because that is exactly what the bill means.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But I fear it is not what it means.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator desires to make it plainer, that is all, and I accept it.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Georgia a question before he takes his seat. Under this provision the United States is required to enforce with criminal penalties the orders of any State authority. It seems to me the Federal law ought to be confined to the Federal authority. The States have their own laws to enforce their own authority.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator yield to me on that point? We have cases where they pick out State officers to perform certain duties under our selective-draft law. It is important that those men should be protected and that we should protect them, although they are State officers, just as much as though they were Federal officers.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator from Minnesota has clearly given the answer I would have given to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me, those men are not acting under State authority, they are acting under Federal authority. They are acting under the law of Congress, under the draft act. There is no State law about the draft.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator is mistaken. The law acts through the adjutant general of the State.

Mr. LODGE. That is simply the machinery provided in our act, that is all, and their authority to co[illegible] for[illegible]e draft is, of course, under the draft law of the United States. But I am referring to men who have no existence except by a State law. I know such cases were mentioned to me by the Senator from Nebraska the other day.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. May I make a suggestion to the Senator from Massachusetts? We might take up the question of the word "State" later, but the Senator from North Carolina, as I understand it, does not object to the addition of the words "lawful act or order."

Mr. LODGE. I am entirely in favor of the Senator's amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I hope the amendment to the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, I entertain a view with respect to the purpose of this act which seems to be a view of mine and mine alone. I think the act is not intended to protect against interference with a specific order or a specific act by the Federal official. I think the act as drawn by the committee is intended to cover the case of some scalawag who gets up on a street corner or elsewhere and openly agitates resistance to authority in general. If it is intended to be confined to resistance to a specific act or order I think the language is entirely superfluous and unnecessary, because it is already against the law for anyone to resist the lawful act or order of an official. The criminal code, which I have before me, defines that crime. We do not have to redefine it in this bill. I think we should take care that if any of the soap-box orators who have designs against the peace and good order of the community and whose ultimate purpose is to strip authority of its power by inciting mobs and resisting officers in general act in that way that man ought to be punished. This act was intended to take care of him. I therefore sincerely hope that the acting chairman of the committee will reconsider and not accept the amendment to the amendment, but let us have a vote on it at least.

Mr. OVERMAN. I can not accept it for the committee. I see some point in what the Senator says, because there are a great many orators who stand upon the street and arouse the people to resist the draft. The Attorney General wrote that he had no law to convict such a person. I put in the RECORD an account of a man who was speaking on the street, urging the people to resist the draft and denouncing the flag and the Constitution. I think probably there is a great deal in what the Senator from Delaware says, and I only accept the amendment of the Senator from Georgia personally. I never accept an amendment for the committee.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I should like to ask, if the Senator will permit me, whether he thinks if a man stands up in public and incites people to resist the application of the draft law he could be reached under this act if the amendment of the Senator from Georgia is written into it?

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask the Senator from Georgia to read his amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The language would read in the proposed amendment:

> Or shall utter, print, write, or publish any language calculated to incite or inflame resistance to any lawful act or order of a duly constituted Federal or State authority in connection with the prosecution of the war.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is confined to any legal order.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Or act.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Now, take the case to which the Senator referred. The act in connection with the draft is a legal act. Anyone who would make a speech against an officer who was enforcing, or who had issued the order to enforce the draft, would be clearly subject to it.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me, men have been arrested and punished for doing that.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Let me go one step further in reply to the suggestion of the Senator from Delaware. This language goes to the extent of making it a crime to use any language calculated to incite resistance to the authority; that is to say, the person inside or outside of his official conduct. It just closes the right of criticism of the person, even though no reference is made to his official conduct and no resistance to official conduct is caused. If a legal act takes place or a legal order is issued, I am willing to join in suppressing criticism upon it.

It goes to the extent of suppressing criticism of the person. The Senator from Delaware gives the language the construction I have placed upon it and desires such a construction. The Senator from North Carolina gave it a construction similar to that which it would have with the amendment that I offered and desires that construction.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think the word "authority" really covers what the Senator has offered in the amendment; and why change it, if it does?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Because the Senator from Delaware views it as meaning vastly more. I think we ought to make it clear, and not leave it simply a matter of construction.

Mr. OVERMAN. Does the Senator think that a man would be covered by his amendment who stands upon the street corners, and who abuses the flag, abuses the Constitution, and resists the draft?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There is not any question about such a man being subject to prosecution if my amendment is adopted.

Mr. OVERMAN. Under the words "lawful authority"?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. "Lawful act or order," undoubtedly.

Mr. OVERMAN. Suppose such a man stands upon the street and denounces the flag and the Constitution and urges people to tear down the flag?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is all provided for in another portion of the amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. And if he should inflame people to tear down the flag?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is all covered by the amendment in another provision.

Mr. OVERMAN. Is it? That is the question in my mind.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not think there is any question about it. The provision I seek to amend does not apply to abuse of the flag or the Constitution or anything of the kind.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] would almost narrow this down to resisting an officer who was in the act of serving a summons or a subpœna or a citation. This language was intended to apply to anarchists, to I. W. W.'s, who get up on the street corners and in lumber camps——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The trouble is that it is not limited to them. If you will limit it to them, I shall not object.

Mr. MYERS. If people adopt the practices of anarchists and I. W. W.'s, then they ought to be punished the same as anarchists and I. W. W.'s. This language was intended to apply to people who get up on street corners or in logging camps or in the halls of cities and towns and advocate resistance to all authority, Federal and State, and advise people to pay no attention to law and to defy the authorities of the United States and of the several States. If a man gets up and preaches anarchy and advocates defiance and disobedience and insubordination to all law and authority and organized society, Federal or State, what legal order of any Federal or State authority would he be resisting? What would the order be to do? To appear to-morrow morning at 9 o'clock to report to the draft officer or to appear in court within 20 days and answer a summons? What order would an anarchist be resisting when he preaches the destruction of organized society? You are going to narrow this bill down so that it will not amount to anything when it passes.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, if I understand aright the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], I do not believe that it makes any essential change in the amendment reported by the committee; but I can not agree with the view which has just been expressed by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS].

This language is not directed against governmental authority generally; it is not intended to reach an inflammatory address which simply seeks to question all governmental authority.

Mr. MYERS. Will the Senator let me suggest that this refers to all governmental authority, Federal or State, in connection with the prosecution of the war?

Mr. CUMMINS. Well, it does not do that, in my opinion.

Mr. MYERS. It says so; that is the exact language, if the Senator will pardon me.

Mr. CUMMINS. It makes it a crime for anyone to incite or to inflame, through word or act, resistance to any duly constituted Federal or State authority. As I have construed that, it means this, and must mean it: That the authority of the Federal Government or the State is represented in some direction—order, law, process—which is sought to be resisted. I do not think the Senator from North Carolina, who is in charge of the bill, will assert that it is intended to reach those general declamations against lawfully constituted authority.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BORAH. I want to make a suggestion.

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Utah now presiding [Mr. KING in the chair] has sent to me a proposed amendment, which I think will clarify this matter to some extent, and will satisfy those who are opposing this portion of the amendment on account of the words "State authority." The proposed amendment is "duly constituted Federal authority or State authority, utilized by the Federal Government in the discharge of its functions and in the exercise of its authority in connection with the prosecution of the war."

That eliminates all possibility of trying to legislate concerning State authority, separate and distinct from its being utilized as an agent by the Federal authority in the prosecution of the war; and I would suggest that amendment to the chairman of the committee. It would simplify that; it would do precisely what undoubtedly it was the intent of the committee to do and leave no doubt as to the meaning of the proposed law.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I was not addressing myself to the proposal to eliminate State authority, although I am in favor of eliminating it, and I have an amendment on my table looking to that end; but I supposed we were discussing the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia, the substance of which is to insert a further qualification of authority, namely, "lawful."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. "Act or order."

Mr. CUMMINS. Defining authority by the term "lawful act." I believe that is just what the language employed by the committee must be interpreted to mean, and I see no occasion for changing it in the way suggested by the Senator from Georgia.

But there is a great reason, a very sound and persuasive reason, for eliminating State authority. I was out of the Chamber for a few moments, and it may be the reasons I have in mind have already been given. They are, first, that for the Federal Government to undertake to prosecute those who incite disobedience of a State law will provoke an endless conflict of jurisdiction and will lead rather to the immunity of criminals than to their proper punishment. But that is not all.

The chief reason is this: The Federal Government could not become responsible for the legislation of the States. The States may pass laws in connection with the war which the Federal Government does not want to enforce at all and which it may regard as inimical to the prosecution of the war. It would be a most absurd position for our country to take, to instruct our peace officers to enforce a State law or to punish one for inciting disobedience to such law which, in our opinion, or in the judgment of the Department of Justice, might tend to help the enemy rather than to help the United States. Unquestionably the words "State authority" ought to be stricken from the bill.

Mr. MYERS. May I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. MYERS. The amendment does not say anything about a State law; it says "State authority." A sheriff represents State authority; he is a State official, but he is intrusted with the execution of certain phases of the draft law. In executing the draft law, does not the Senator think that the sheriff, a State authority, ought to be protected?

Mr. CUMMINS. That is Federal authority; it is not State authority. A State officer may execute a Federal law, and for the time being he becomes the agent of the General Government. The words "State authority," however, have a very much broader meaning than the execution of a Federal law through State agencies. The words embrace all State laws and all State orders issued under State legislation; and, as I remarked a moment ago, we might find ourselves not only in a conflict of jurisdiction and power with the officers of the State but we might find ourselves in the position of being compelled to enforce a law which, in the judgment of Congress, in the judgment of the President, and in the judgment of the Department of Justice, tends rather to weaken the country than to strengthen it in the war now in progress. I hope that for the time being, anyhow, these words will be stricken out and that we will from time to time adopt specifically only "State laws in connection with the war" or "State authority for the prosecution of the war," which, in our judgment, will have the tendency which we desire to enforce.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, last week, very imperfectly and very inadequately, I called attention to the specific language embraced within the committee amendment, and then expressed some views tentatively upon that language. This morning, upon reflection, I am confirmed in the views I then expressed, and while I may not have legally presented every argument nor have presented logically any legal argument in respect to that particular language, nevertheless, I feel that that language thus inserted in the amendment is language—and I speak with some feeling and some emphasis—that we ought not to enact in this bill and that ought not to be applicable to the American citizen at this time. I read again the specific clause:

or shall utter, print, write, or publish any language calculated to incite or inflame resistance to any duly constituted Federal or State authority in connection with the prosecution of the war.

I have this morning asked a number of my colleagues what they understood by the word "authority," in line 6, page 3. Some have responded that "authority" meant a specific entity of the Government, which under law or under legal appointment might be exercising certain functions in connection with the war. Others have said that "authority" means a specific official created either by law or in some legal fashion who in connection with the war is exercising certain functions. I do not care which definition may be the accurate one; in either event this power is not only dangerous, but it is utterly subversive of everything which we have believed in the past; and it is a power which I fear we are according only under the hysteria of the moment and because of passing daily events.

I read this morning, Mr. President, the language of the distinguished gentleman who presides over the Bureau of Public Information, Mr. George Creel. I read that he stated, as has been adverted to upon the floor during this debate, that he thanked God that this Nation was not prepared when we entered the war a year ago. I can imagine and you may imagine, too, the answer of the fathers and the mothers of this land whose sons have gone over the sea and who to-day are in the trenches of France with six brief months of preparation—six brief months against a lifetime of preparation of their foes. These fathers and mothers answer, just as you and I, I am sure, answer this remarkable utterance of a "duly constituted authority" of the United States; we answer him, "If you thank God that our boys were unprepared when they entered this war, we feel that you are not fit at this particular time to participate in the prosecution of this war in any regard." Now, the pith and the point, as applied to this bill, is what? Yesterday a duly constituted authority of the United States Government thanked God that we were not prepared a year ago.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. STERLING. Will the Senator yield for just a moment?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Yes.

Mr. STERLING. I hold no brief for Mr. Creel; I have sympathized with a good many of the criticisms that have been made against him or against the bureau of which he is the head——

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I yield to a question of the distinguished Senator, but I do not yield now for any debate.

Mr. STERLING. I should like to be permitted, at least, to say this, that I think what immediately follows the statement quoted by the distinguished Senator from California in Mr. Creel's address ought to be read in simple justice to Mr. Creel, for he states why he was glad we were unprepared, namely, that in being unprepared we were simply following the traditions of this country.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Is that statement in defense of Mr. Creel what the distinguished Senator wished to say?

Mr. STERLING. That is what I wished to say.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I would not, Mr. President, do an injustice even to Mr. George Creel, and I would not in any aspect at all suggest anything that might in any degree be thought to be unfair to Mr. Creel. As I recall his address—and if I do not state it accurately the Senator from South Dakota may correct me in that regard, and I will be glad of the correction—after his remarkable asseveration that he thanked God that this country was not prepared a year ago he said that he made that particular statement—I am speaking only substantially and not accurately—because the traditions of our Republic have always been those of unpreparedness practically, and that to have been prepared at that time would have violated all of those things which we had before held dear. Substantially I have stated, have I not, what followed?

Mr. STERLING. I think so. That is according to my recollection. I have sent for the paper.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. And when the paper arrives I shall be delighted to have the Senator, at the conclusion of my very brief remarks, read what he desires. But, Mr. President, the point to which I was adverting and the point that I desire to make in respect to this bill is this:

Yesterday a duly constituted authority of the United States Government indulged in a statement with which many of us are at wide variance. Now, you may assume it to be a personal statement yesterday, if you desire; but let us assume for the sake of the argument that in the Official Bulletin, presided over by Mr. George Creel, a similar statement is made, and under all the authority and with all the prestige that his appointment gives to him and with all the authority and with all the prestige that are accorded to him by virtue of what has been described as the official publication of the United States Government, he says to the people of the United States that he thanks God, and this publication says that it thanks God, that we were unprepared a year ago when we entered the war. Why, denunciation of that statement—denunciation as all of us or some of us may denounce it in the future—denunciation of the individual who is the duly constituted authority hereafter would subject you, under the terms of this bill, to 20 years' imprisonment, and there is not any other way at all that you can read this bill.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I yield, sir.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I am interested in the Senator's remarks, generally speaking, but particularly as they tie in with the provisions of this bill. For my information will the Senator tell me whether or not Mr. Creel is a duly constituted Federal authority, and what statute constitutes him such?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. He is a duly constituted Federal authority, named such by an Executive order of the President of the United States.

Mr. THOMAS. And drawing a salary from the Treasury.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Yes; not only that, but he has all the earmarks of a public official, in that he draws his salary regularly.

Mr. WOLCOTT. But, of course, Mr. President, the Senator recognizes that for an authority to be duly constituted within the meaning of this act he must be constituted as such by Congress.

Mr. PENROSE. Why, certainly not.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Oh, I think the Senator is quite in error. Does the Senator contend that Mr. George Creel is not a duly constituted Federal agent or authority to-day?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Why, of course I do, Mr. President, unless he is created by a statute or unless a statute authorizes the President to appoint such an official. Of course I do.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Well, if he is not a duly constituted authority to-day, and this publication is not a duly constituted Federal authority, there is room, then, for the Attorney General's office to discharge its functions beyond the enactment of laws of this sort. I think the Senator from Delaware, upon reflection, will admit that he is in error.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I yield; certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If Mr. Creel is not a duly constituted authority or administrative officer of the Government, how can anybody use public funds to pay him?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, in answer to the Senator from Georgia I will say that that is a peculiar sort of psychological phenomenon for the solution of which we would have to refer him, I think, to Mr. Creel.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, may I suggest that the Congress gave to the President a large sum of money to use in his discretion, and the President, I take it, is employing Mr. Creel in some sort of capacity under the authority to spend that money; but I should like some Senator who has been constantly talking on this floor about Mr. Creel and his authority—and there have been many of them doing it—to tell me, for my information, where this authority came from. Of course, they could tell me to go and get it myself, but I do not know where to get it.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I will endeavor to enlighten the Senator. I read the Executive order:

EXECUTIVE ORDER.

I hereby create a Committee on Public Information, to be composed of the Secretary of State, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and a civilian, who shall be charged with the executive direction of the committee. As civilian chairman of the committee I appoint Mr. George Creel. The Secretary of State, the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of the Navy are authorized each to detail an officer or officers to the work of the committee.

WOODROW WILSON.

APRIL 14, 1917.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, if I may make an observation, that does not prove to me at all that Mr. Creel is a Federal authority. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that here a week or so ago, or perhaps three or four weeks ago, the President was reported in the newspapers to have appointed some man, whose name I can not recall—his profession was that of a sculptor—to make some investigations in connection with the aircraft program. The President could, of course, do that. It was a perfectly voluntary officer that he made there, but certainly not a duly constituted Federal authority; and it seems to me, so far as I have seen up to this time, that Mr. Creel is in the same category.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I am sure that on reflection, as I said a moment ago, the Senator from Delaware will realize his error. He certainly, I know, does not deny the validity of the order of the President of the United States; and I fear that if he did deny it, after the passage of this bill, he would be liable to 20 years' imprisonment in the State prison. So if denials are to be uttered concerning an Executive order, or any order at all, they better be made upon the floor of the Senate prior to the passage of this particular measure.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I do.

Mr. KNOX. I wish to inquire if there can be any doubt about the President of the United States being a Federal authority; and if you were to deny his act in appointing Mr. Creel and creating this Committee on Public Information, would you not bring yourself squarely within the provisions of this bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Certainly, Mr. President; and when the Senator from Delaware, after the passage of this bill, denies the authority of the President to make this order, if he denies it—when he denies the authority of Mr. Creel—he might therefore "inflame resistance" to that distinguished Federal authority and thus bring himself squarely within the provisions of this measure and be subject to prosecution and to possible disgrace and imprisonment.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. MYERS. I have heard a number of Senators on the floor refer to the fact that after the passage of the bill Senators would have to be careful for fear of incurring the penalties of the bill, as the distinguished Senator from California just now stated. How can the Senator make that assertion when he knows, of course, quite as well as I do, or even better, that the Constitution of the United States says that for no utterance here in this body shall any Senator be held to answer anywhere else?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Oh, Mr. President, I do not assume that any Senator in this body, if he has the courage to criticize after the passage of this bill will stand upon his Senatorial privilege; and I assume, therefore, that if any Member of this body or any Member of Congress shall see fit to criticize, he will criticize just as freely upon the hustings or upon the stump—just as freely in any forum that there is in the United States—as in the United States Senate; and it was upon that theory that I made the suggestion that I did in reply to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I yield.

Mr. REED. Perhaps the Senator from California is not more interested in preserving liberty of speech to the Senate than he is in preserving liberty of speech to the American people.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, there, as usual, the Senator from Missouri has given the apt and the absolute answer. As he says, not only ought we to preserve liberty of speech to Members of the Congress of the United States, but liberty of speech is just as dear and just as sacred to those less fortunate beings who do not constitute a part of the Congress of the United States.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, the Senator certainly does not mean disloyal speech.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. By no means do I mean disloyal speech, and I am not speaking of disloyalty now. I am speaking of the right to speak as a man sees fit, legitimately and justly and loyally. Does the Senator intend to imply that when I oppose an utterance of the Committee on Public Information, when I say that the head of that duly constituted authority can not indulge for me an expression that he thanks God our boys were unprepared when they went to war, in uttering that, and uttering it with all the emphasis and all the power and all the vigor that I possess, I am uttering a disloyal sentiment?

Mr. OVERMAN. No, Mr. President.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Then there is no difference between the Senator from North Carolina and myself in that regard, Mr. President.

Mr. OVERMAN. There is no difference except as to loyalty or disloyalty, and that is the keynote and the basis of this bill. Disloyalty is the whole thing in this bill. It is all surrounded by the word "disloyalty."

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Ah, Mr. President, but the word does not appear at all in this particular matter, and it is not the keynote of the particular clauses to which I am adverting. I will read them again. There is neither loyalty nor disloyalty suggested in these phrases. The language—which, I repeat, we do not seem indeed to have comprehended fully—is:

shall utter, print, write, or publish any language calculated to incite or inflame resistance to any duly constituted Federal or State authority in connection with the prosecution of the war.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I am not a defender of Mr. George Creel——

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Oh, he does not enter into the discussion except by way of example.

Mr. OVERMAN. But does the Senator think that anything he said would inflame resistance to any duly constituted authority? Is that the point?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I beg the Senator's pardon?

Mr. OVERMAN. I did not exactly understand the Senator. Does what he said in reference to what Mr. Creel said mean that under the language he has read that would inflame resistance to any duly constituted Federal authority?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I have made it plain twice. I shall be delighted for the third time to repeat it to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator and I do not differ as to free speech about matters of loyalty.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I say to you that when this Official Bulletin shall utter such a sentiment as Mr. Creel uttered yesterday, if you consider the Official Bulletin a duly constituted Federal authority, or when Mr. Creel shall personally utter it, if you consider him then a duly constituted Federal authority, in either case if an individual shall denounce what he says, shall in terms that he may see fit to use refer to it in language that may be even abusive, he is then doing something that brings him within this law, because his language—abusive, denunciatory, or otherwise, as you may suggest it to be—is "calculated to inflame resistance" to that particular authority, and that particular authority is acting in the prosecution of the war.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I hate to disagree with the Senator, but I think that is a very narrow construction. Anything that I might say upon the streets in the way of denouncing George Creel for a statement like that certainly would not make me amenable under this law.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, let us carry it to another illustration. Let me ask the Senator first this question: If the Senator believed that I was right in the construction which he says he thinks is erroneous, would he not agree with me that that provision of the law ought not to be here?

Mr. OVERMAN. No, Mr. President; I think it ought to be here, because it is intended to cover those cases, and I do not know how else you could cover cases where men, as I have read into the RECORD two or three times, stand upon the street corners and denounce the Government and the flag and the Constitution and urge people to resist the draft and not to buy liberty bonds. That is the whole idea of this bill, and that is all there is in it.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. If that is the idea of the bill, then state it.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think it is stated.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I repeat my question, inasmuch as the Senator is upon his feet. Let us concede that I may be in error in the construction I put upon the bill. Assuming it, however, to be the proper construction, you would not want the measure then to stand, would you?

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I do not see how it is possible to construe it in that way.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Oh, well, Mr. President, if the distinguished Senator does not desire to answer the query, his very mode of answering, I take it, may be assumed to be conclusive of his position.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I think probably I am very dull, but I can not exactly understand the position the Senator takes. That is the reason why I asked him the question most respectfully.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I have such profound respect for the Senator from North Carolina that I admit, and admit contritely and willingly, that the fault rests with me in my mode of expression.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have such profound respect for the great ability and eloquence of the Senator that, while otherwise I would not have interrupted him, I would have paid no attention to his argument. I desired to have his views upon this matter repeated, because I could not understand how he could get off from this bill as he has.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. I have endeavored to follow the argument of the distinguished Senator from California. I understand the Senator to suggest that the word "authority" in the bill may have two meanings; it may refer either to the law or the order, or it may refer to the officer who executes the law or the order. It has occurred to me that the Senator has not really given us a very clear idea of his notion of the word "resistance" in the bill. Are we to understand that the Senator from California desires to have the liberty to go out and teach and urge and incite resistance to any law or any order or any officer charged with the execution of a law or an order? Is that what the Senator from California desires?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Has the Senator concluded?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I do not think the distinguished Senator had any such view, and if he received any such impression from the language that I uttered, let us assume that he did not hear all that was said.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. JOHNSON of California. What I say to you is this: That this expression, "language calculated to incite or inflame resistance"——

Mr. WALSH. "Resistance," "resistance."

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Of course; but any language which will cause opposition, and which will, as the individual who is affected may assert, impede, is, of course, "language calculated to incite or inflame resistance."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I will ask the Senator to pardon me for a minute. If a particular order shall be given by any department that is in process of execution, and if anybody shall denounce that particular order—perhaps denounce it in unmeasured terms—so that there arises a contrariety and a division of opinion concerning that order, and it is made somewhat difficult of application subsequently, it is obvious that the language that is thus used, that causes this particular state of affairs, is language "calculated to incite or inflame resistance."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California further yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Then the argument of the Senator is upon the use of the word "calculated." I understood that "intended" had been substituted for that word yesterday.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, as he was not here yesterday, I will state that "intended" was substituted for "calculated," in line 24, page 2, and ought to be substituted here, of course.

Mr. WALSH. I am quite sure that the Senator from Idaho intended that it should be substituted.

Mr. BORAH. It is my intention, of course, to have it substituted here, too, as soon as I can get to it.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. But even that does not alter the effect. It improves infinitely the verb, and "intended" is an infinitely better word for use than "calculated" in that connection; but it does not alter the result or the effect, because the intent would be gathered, of course, from the specific act that is done and the specific words that are spoken.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I yield.

Mr. KNOX. I should like to ask the Senator a question, because with him I am most anxious to see that this bill is amended in such a way as to obviate the objections that have been made. I wish to ask the Senator if it will not remove his objection if the words "duly constituted Federal or State authority" should be stricken out, in the sixth line, so that it would read as follows, with these words inserted:

Shall willfully—

I understand "willfully" has been written into the statute—

Shall willfully utter, print, write, or publish any language intended to incite or inflame resistance to—

Now, these are the new words—

the United States, or to promote the cause of its enemies.

Would not those words obviate the objection that has been made?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I think in practically full degree those words would overcome the objections I have endeavored to point out.

Mr. KNOX. Then, if I understand the Senator from North Carolina correctly, as that is the purpose for which the bill has been prepared, the suggestion will meet with his approval, and we might come to a right understanding upon this section.

Mr. McKELLAR. May I ask the Senator from California a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the words "any legal act or lawful order" were inserted right before the word "any," in line 5, would not that correct the difficulty which the Senator has so ably pointed out and in which I agree with him?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I do not think so. I think it would present a limitation which would be incalculably different from the language at present used, but nevertheless I think the fault would still remain. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senator from North Carolina to the proposed amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania, and inasmuch as he may accept that amendment, I leave this matter for the present with him.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will be glad to consider it. I want to say to the Senator from California, since I have understood his question, conceding what he says to be true and, of course, I differ from him, I think the point would be met.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Then the Senator from North Carolina can not vote for this bill under those circumstances, and before the day passes I trust I may demonstrate to him that fact.

Mr. BORAH. Do I understand that the Senator from Pennsylvania has offered an amendment to this particular provision?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is an amendment to the amendment pending. There was a suggested amendment by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me, I wish he would have the amendment suggested by the Senator from Pennsylvania read from the desk.

Mr. McCUMBER. I hope we will dispose of one amendment before we get three or four more before us.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that there is an amendment to the amendment pending, and the suggested amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania would not be in order; but for the information of the Senate the Secretary will read it, not as an amendment but as a suggested one, to be considered later.

The SECRETARY. In line 5, after the words "resistance to," near the end of the line, the Senator from Pennsylvania would insert the words "the United States or to promote the cause of its enemies," so that it will read:

Or shall willfully utter, print, write, or publish any language calculated to incite or inflame resistance to the United States or to promote the cause of its enemies.

Mr. KNOX. Strike out "in connection with the prosecution of the war."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And strike out "any duly constituted Federal or State authority."

Mr. KNOX. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I withdraw my suggested amendment and very much prefer the suggested amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania. I will give way to his amendment.

Mr. BORAH. In connection with the amendment which the Senator from Pennsylvania offers I want to offer this amendment, so that it may go with it. Strike out the word "calculated" and insert the word "intended."

Mr. KNOX. That has been done.

Mr. BORAH. No; it has not been done.

Mr. KNOX. I understood that had been done.

Mr. BORAH. I give notice of that amendment.

Mr. KNOX. I had adopted the idea, because it was written in my bill here.

Mr. THOMAS. It is on the other page.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment suggested by the Senator from Idaho to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 5, strike out the word "calculated" and insert in lieu the word "intended."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho to strike out the word "calculated," in line 5, and insert the word "intended."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania offers the following amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 5, beginning with the word "any," the last word in the line, strike out the words "any duly constituted Federal or State authority in connection with the prosecution of the war" and in lieu of those words insert "the United States or to promote the cause of its enemies."

Mr. OVERMAN. Let it be read as it would read if amended.

The SECRETARY. So that if amended it would read, beginning in line 4:

Or shall willfully utter, print, write, or publish any language intended to incite or inflame resistance to the United States or to promote the cause of its enemies.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania why he seeks to eliminate the State as distinguished from the United States?

Mr. KNOX. I think the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] gave the most complete answer to that a few moments ago. Perhaps the Senator from California did not hear him. We can not properly legislate to protect the laws or the authority of the States. The States are complete and sovereign within themselves; they make their own legislation and they enforce it. We have no function to perform in that connection. It tends to inextricable confusion to insert that language in this measure, in my judgment. That has been expressed by the Senator from Iowa here this morning.

Mr. SHERMAN. In addition to what the Senator from Pennsylvania said, this should apply particularly to local officers in Illinois, many of them who are dilatory or timid in the performance of their duties now under State laws. If such a measure were embodied here they would pass up their responsibility still further and would give that as a reason why they were not performing their local duties.

The complaint of the local officers throughout my country, especially in Madison County, to which I was referring yesterday, is the passing of responsibility from one officer or authority to another. The sheriff of Madison County is wholly incapable of performing his duty, even if he were possessed of all the moral backing of the Government. He was elected on a basis of not executing the laws of that State. He could not be elected probably by his constituency to which he appeals upon any other platform. It happened that in the division of the vote he had a high vote in that county. With such a provision in a bill of this kind, matured into an act of Congress, he would say at once let the Government enforce these State laws. It would be so in keeping with his desire that like human nature in its weakness when it is not backed up by a different personality it would be a standing excuse of the constabulary or the sheriff forces in many States charged with the preservation of law and order to say "Take it to Washington." That would keep them out of trouble.

To my mind, based upon local conditions, that is an additional reason to the very strong one offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] that this amendment should practically be allowed to remain in the form in which the Senator from Pennsylvania moves it.

Mr. OVERMAN. I wish to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania how he construes the language "resistance to the United States." This is a penal statute and must be construed strictly. Suppose an orator on the street, as has happened, should make a speech appealing to the people against the draft and urging them to resist the draft, would that be against the United States?

Mr. KNOX. Without doubt. In my judgment, it would be resistance to the United States, or it would be calculated to incite resistance to the United States to argue against the lawfulness or the propriety or obedience to any statute of the United States or any lawfully authorized order by the United States.

Mr. OVERMAN. Then as a penal statute that would be construed as being against the United States.

Mr. KNOX. I have not the slightest doubt about it at all.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am inclined to think so. I merely wanted to get the Senator's view.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania if a United States marshal were seeking to execute a warrant or seeking to execute an order properly issued by authority and anyone should incite resistance to the execution of the order, would that come within this statute as it will be enacted?

Mr. KNOX. I think so, without doubt. I call the Senator's attention to the principle laid down in the Field case, as showing to what extent the authority of the United States goes and in what remote and collateral matters it is regarded as resistance to the authority of the United States to interfere with the operations of any of its functions or of officials who are executing lawfully those functions.

Mr. BORAH. I quite agree with that interpretation and that view of it. To resist any officer of the United States in the discharge of his duty under the law is to resist the United States.

Mr. KNOX. That is it exactly.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, I think the suggestion of the Senator from Pennsylvania is a very meritorious one. It seems to me to meet the situation that I have in mind as it was required to be met. If I have caught the point, the Senator would object to the language of the amendment suggested by the committee. I think it does not contain those things which to Senators seem objectionable. I think the Senate might very well adopt the amendment suggested by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. CALDER. May the amendment to the amendment be read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, lines 5, 6, and 7, strike out the words "any duly constituted Federal or State authority in connection with the prosecution of the war" and insert in lieu "the United States or to promote the cause of its enemies," so that, if amended, that portion of the section will read:

Or shall willfully utter, print, write, or publish any language intended to incite or inflame resistance to the United States or to promote the cause of its enemies.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCUMBER. I offer the following amendment, which I think will probably be accepted by the Senator in charge of the bill. In line 5 I move to strike out the words "or inflame" and insert in lieu thereof "provoke or encourage," so that it will read:

Or shall willfully utter, print, write, or publish any language intended to incite, provoke, or encourage resistance to the United States.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think that is included in the language of the bill, and I accept the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRANCE. I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 18, in the committee amendment, after the word "whoever," the second word in the line, insert the words "either citizen or alien"; on page 2, line 19, strike out the words "profane, scurrilous"; on page 2, line 20, strike out the words "contemptuous or abusive," so that the amendment will read:

And whoever, either citizen or alien, when the United States is at war, shall utter, print, write, or publish any disloyal language about the form of government of the United States, or the Constitution of the United States, or the soldiers or sailors of the United States, or the flag of the United States, or the uniform of the Army or Navy of the United States, or any language calculated to bring the form of government of the United States or the Constitution—

And so forth.

Mr. REED. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that he has incorporated in his amendment the words "soldiers or sailors" as they occur in line 22, where that language has been changed to "military or naval forces."

Mr. FRANCE. I will say in that connection I was merely quoting the section as printed.

Mr. REED. I think the Senator ought to modify his amendment in that respect.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I can not understand the reason for adding the words "either citizen or alien," because undoubtedly they are already covered by the bill. Why specify either citizen or alien? It says "whoever," and that means anyone; it does not make any difference whether a citizen or alien under the bill as written. I do not see why we should specify and add those words.

Mr. FRANCE. That is perhaps a legitimate criticism, and I shall be very glad to have my amendment modified to that extent.

I merely wish to say in connection with the amendment which I have offered that there is something in the very natures of liberty-loving, English-speaking men which has always caused them to demand the right to grumble at their Government, to criticize it, perhaps even to abuse it, while loving it and loyal to it and ready to die for it. Therefore I have offered this amendment, which merely changes the language so that it prevents publishing anything disloyal. I trust that the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I think the bill had better remain as it is. I do not think that part of the amendment is at all necessary, but is surplusage, which adds the words "either citizen or alien," because anyone in this country living here is subject to that part of the law without specifying whether he is an alien or not. It has been held by the Supreme Court that aliens may commit the crime of treason in this country, and the fact that they are aliens does not exclude them from the jurisdiction of our courts and the control of our law. Therefore that part of the amendment is unnecessary.

Eliminating the other words which the amendment seeks to eliminate—"profane, scurrilous, contemptuous, or abusive"—it seems to me, narrows it unnecessarily. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. FRANCE. I am willing to modify my amendment by omitting the words "either citizen or alien."

Mr. REED. I should like to have the amendment read again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NEW in the chair). The Secretary will again read the amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 19, strike out the words "profane, scurrilous"; on page 2, line 20, strike out the words "contemptuous or abusive."

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, the amendment of the Senator from Maryland, if adopted, would expressly permit people to use profane, scurrilous, contemptuous, or abusive language about the form of government of the United States, of the Constitution of the United States, or the military or naval forces of the United States, or the flag of the United States, or the uniform of the Army or Navy, if such language did not quite amount to positive disloyalty. It is a mystery to me why anybody would want to extend the privilege to people of using profane, scurrilous, contemptuous, or abusive language about our form of government, or Constitution, or Army or Navy, or the flag in time of war.

As was so aptly said yesterday by the distinguished and able Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], suppose a man, when the liberty loan was being raised, would get up and in a loud voice abuse the United States flag and say, "Damn that dirty rag." That might not be construed by a court to be disloyal to the Government, but why should we want to legislate here to permit such language? I can not comprehend why we should do anything of that kind. There is much language which is profane, scurrilous, or abusive which might not be construed by the court to be disloyal, but it ought not to be used about the flag and the form of government or the Constitution or the Army or Navy in time of war; and if used, it would provoke riots, mobs, and lynchings just as much as if it were positively disloyal.

I hope the amendment to the amendment will be defeated.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I do not care to enter into any discussion of the subject of free speech. I will say, however, that perhaps a consideration of the history of the whole doctrine of free speech and of a free press might enlighten the Senator where he is not now enlightened.

Mr. MYERS. I have no doubt the Senator can enlighten me on very much, and I should like to be enlightened upon this amendment.

Mr. FRANCE. I am not surprised that the Senator can not understand what I had in mind, for it is impossible for me to understand what he had in mind when he voted against the right, which the courts have for many years guaranteed to free citizens, both in the mother country and in our own land, to speak "what is true, with good motives and for justifiable aims." When the Senator would vote away the right of a citizen to speak "what is true, with good intent, with good motives, and for justifiable ends," I am not surprised he can not understand my position.

Mr. MYERS. I should like to answer that inquiry. I do not believe in permitting that right, even if expressing the truth, to be exercised in disloyal, profane, scurrilous, contemptuous, abusive, obscene, or vile language about the Constitution, the form of government, or the flag, or the Army or Navy. If the right of free speech is criticizing in respectful and decent language, then people ought to have the right to speak the truth, but not in such language as is prohibited in this bill.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I was one of those who voted against the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] with reference to speaking the truth, the right of liberty of speech, the right of speaking the truth. He has just referred to the fact that he has not criticized the Senator from Montana now for voting against this amendment, as he is one of those who voted against the former amendment. I want to say to the Senator from Maryland that if he offered the Ten Commandments, the Lord's Prayer, or the Golden Rule as an amendment to this bill, I would vote against it just upon the same principle that I voted against his first amendment and as I shall vote against this amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. It has about as much to do with this bill as the Lord's Prayer would have to do with it.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I was on the committee that had this bill under consideration. I begged my associates repeatedly to modify its language. I then expressed the fear that the bill in some respects might be so broad as to impinge upon the liberties of the citizen. I was overruled in the committee. But, Mr. President, I am unable to escape the fear I then entertained and expressed. With the general purposes of this legislation I am in absolute accord. With the desire to promote the stability of our Government during this great conflict I am in the most hearty sympathy. But frequently men fail to accomplish their purpose by attempting measures too extreme. Often the best way to defeat a good object is to go about it in an intemperate manner.

Repressive measures frequently promote opposition. It has been often said that "the blood of the martyrs is the seed of the church." Applied politically the aphorism may be thus rendered. Unjust and repressive acts are the food of anarchy. I venture to ask the attention of the Congress to a bit of history that is often referred to, and yet is, I fear, about to be disregarded.

I refer to the alien and sedition law. I read it. I want Senators who are here to take the pending bill in their hands and see how closely we are paralleling the old alien and sedition act. I desire, then, to review very briefly the comments of some great authorities upon that act I hope Senators will comply with my request to take the amendment which we are now considering in hand, the general amendment which was offered in the committee, and parallel it with the sedition act of July 14, 1798.

The sedition act was as follows:

And be it further enacted, That if any person shall write, print, utter, or publish, or shall cause or procure to be written, printed, uttered, or published, or shall knowingly and willingly assist or aid in writing, printing, uttering, or publishing—

Notice—

any false, scandalous, and malicious writing or writings against the Government of the United States, or either House of the Congress of the United States, or the President of the United States, with intent to defame the said Government or either House of the said Congress or the said President, or to bring them, or either of them, into contempt or disrepute, or to excite against them, or either or any of them, the hatred of the good people of the United States, or to stir up sedition within the United States or to excite any unlawful combinations therein for opposing or resisting—

Now, observe the parallel—

any law of the United States, or any act of the President of the United States, done in pursuance of any such law, or of the powers in him vested by the Constitution of the United States, or to resist, oppose, or defeat any such law or act, or to aid, encourage, or abet any hostile designs of any foreign nation against the United States, their people or Government, then such person, being thereof convicted before any court of the United States having jurisdiction thereof, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $2,000 and by imprisonment not exceeding two years.

The more you study that statute the more you will see that it embraces the very things covered in this proposed statute, the difference being, however, that a conviction under the old sedition law would have been much more difficult than under the proposed statute, because the old sedition law required that everything that was done should be done maliciously and falsely, whereas the proposed act omits both of those important qualifying terms.

Moreover—and I call especial attention to the fact that a few moments since the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] offered an amendment, which was defeated by a majority of two votes, to the effect that there might be given in defense the truth of the statement made, provided always that the accused should also show that the utterance to which he gave expression was made in good faith—the old alien and sedition law, bad as it was, had this clause:

And be it further enacted and declared, That if any person shall be prosecuted under this act for the writing or publishing any libel aforesaid, it shall be lawful for the defendant, upon the trial of the cause, to give in evidence in his defense the truth of the matter contained in the publication charged as a libel. And the jury who shall try the cause shall have a right to determine the law and the fact, under the direction of the court, as in other cases.

Does it not seem strange that we have just defeated an amendment reserving a right which was reserved even in the abominated and execrated sedition law of 1798? Observe also that the amendment we defeated was more stringent than the sedition law, for it required that the accused should not only prove the truth of his accusation but that he should prove that his intent and purpose was a good and loyal intent.

Mr. President, perhaps I talk to deaf ears, but the day will come when the blunders and errors and mistakes that we make will all have to be tested out. So I am begging the Senate to give a little consideration to the experience of the past.

I wish only to call attention to two authorities: First, to Cooley on Constitutional Limitations. Old Thomas M. Cooley, in my opinion, was during his lifetime the greatest living lawyer. He combined in a singular degree the wisdom of a statesman with the learning of a judge. He had this to say regarding the sedition law which I have just read to the Senate:

At a common law it was indictable to publish anything against the Constitution of the country, or the established system of government. The basis of such a prosecution was the tendency of publications of this character to excite disaffection with the Government, and thus induce a revolutionary spirit. The law always, however, allowed a calm and temperate discussion of public events and measures, and recognized in every man a right to give every public matter a candid, full, and free discussion. It was only when a publication went beyond this and tended to excite tumult that it became criminal. It can not be doubted, however, that the common-law rules on this subject were administered in many cases with great harshness, and that the courts in the interest of repression and at the instigation of the Government often extended them to cases not within their reasons. This was especially true during the long and bloody struggle with France, at the close of the last and the beginning of the present century, and for a few subsequent years, until a rising public discontent with political prosecutions began to lead to acquittals, and finally to abandonment of all such attempts to restrain the free expression of sentiments on public affairs. Such prosecutions have now altogether ceased in England. Like the censorship of the press, they have fallen out of the British constitutional system. "When the press errs, it is by the press itself that its errors are left to be corrected. Repression has ceased to be the policy of rulers, and statesmen have at length fully realized the wise maxim of Lord Bacon, that 'the punishing of wits enhances their authority, and a forbidden writing is thought to be a certain spark of truth that flies up in the faces of them that seek to tread it out.'"

We shall venture to express a doubt if the common-law principles on this subject can be considered as having been practically adopted in the American States. It is certain that no prosecutions could now be maintained in the United States courts for libels on the General Government, since those courts have no common-law jurisdiction, and there is now no statute, and never was except during the brief existence of the sedition law, which assumed to confer any such power.

The sedition law was passed during the administration of the elder Adams, when the fabric of government was still new and untried, and when many men seemed to think that the breath of heated party discussions might tumble it about their heads. Its constitutionality was always disputed by a large party, and its impolicy was beyond question. It had a direct tendency to produce the very state of things it sought to repress.

That is the point I am trying to make here to-day. That, I venture to say, will be the very effect of this proposed law if we do not radically amend it. I continue to read:

The prosecutions under it were instrumental, among other things, in the final overthrow and destruction of the party by which it was adopted, and it is impossible to conceive at the present time of any such state of things as would be likely to bring about its reenactment or the passage of any similar repressive statute.

And we are in the very act of passing such a statute.

When it is among the fundamental principles of the Government that the people frame their own Constitution, and that in doing so they reserve to themselves the power to amend it from time to time, as the public sentiment may change, it is difficult to conceive of any sound principle on which prosecutions for libels on the system of government can be based—

And that is all this proposed law is—except when they are made in furtherance of conspiracy with the evident intent and purpose to excite rebellion and civil war. It is very easy to lay down a rule for the discussion of constitutional questions; that they are privileged, if conducted with calmness and temperance, and that they are not indictable unless they go beyond the bounds of fair discussion. But what is calmness and temperance, and what is fair in the discussion of supposed evils in the Government? And if something is to be allowed "for a little feeling in men's minds," how great shall be the allowance? The heat of the discussion will generally be in proportion to the magnitude of the evil as it appears to the party discussing it; must the question whether he has exceeded due bounds or not be tried by judge and jury, who may sit under different circumstances from those under which he has spoken, or at least after the heat of the occasion has passed away, and who, feeling none of the excitement themselves, may think it unreasonable that anyone else should ever have felt it? The dangerous character of such prosecutions would be the more glaring if aimed at those classes, who, not being admitted to a share in the Government, attacked the Constitution in the point which excluded them.

As, for instance, the woman suffragists of to-day or our prohibition friends, who think the Constitution ought to be amended.

Reading again:

Sharp criticism, ridicule, and the exhibition of such feeling as a sense of injustice engenders, are to be expected from any discussion in these cases; but when the very classes who have established the exclusion as proper and reasonable are to try as judges and jurors the assaults made upon it, they will be very likely to enter upon the examination with a preconceived notion that such assaults upon their reasonable regulations must necessarily be unreasonable.

If any such principle of repression should ever be recognized in the common law of America, it might reasonably be anticipated that in times of high party excitement it would lead to prosecutions by the party in power, to bolster up wrongs, and sustain abuses and oppressions by crushing adverse criticism and discussion. The evil, indeed, could not be of long continuance; for, judging from experience, the reaction would be speedy, thorough, and effectual——

Mr. SHERMAN. What is the Senator reading?

Mr. REED. Cooley on Constitutional Limitations.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Johnson, Cal.	Page	Smoot
Bankhead	Jones, N. Mex.	Penrose	Sterling
Beckham	Jones, Wash.	Phelan	Stone
Borah	Kellogg	Pittman	Sutherland
Calder	King	Poindexter	Swanson
Chamberlain	Knox	Ransdell	Thomas
Curtis	Lewis	Reed	Thompson
Dillingham	McCumber	Robinson	Tillman
Fletcher	McKellar	Saulsbury	Trammell
France	McNary	Shafroth	Vardaman
Gore	Martin	Sheppard	Walsh
Henderson	New	Sherman	Warren
Hitchcock	Norris	Sh'elds	Wolcott
Hollis	Overman	Smith, Md.
James	Owen	Smith, S. C.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-eight Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I simply wish to finish reading the excerpt from Judge Cooley and one or two other very brief authorities. Continuing, Judge Cooley says:

But it would be no less a serious evil while it lasted, the direct tendency of which would be to excite discontent and to breed a rebellious spirit. Repression of full and free discussion is dangerous in any government resting upon the will of the people.

The people can not fail to believe that they are deprived of rights, and will be certain to become discontented when their discussion of public measures is sought to be circumscribed by the judgment of others upon their temperance or fairness. They must be left at liberty to speak with the freedom which the magnitude of the supposed wrongs appears in their minds to demand; and if they exceed all the proper bounds of moderation the consolation must be that the evil likely to spring from the violent discussion will probably be less, and its correction by public sentiment more speedy than if the terrors of the law were brought to bear to prevent the discussion.

The English common-law rule which made libels on the Constitution or the Government indictable, as it was administered by the courts, seems to us unsuited to the condition and circumstances of the people of America, and therefore never to have been adopted in the several States. If we are correct in this, it would not be in the power of the State legislatures to pass laws which should make mere criticism of the Constitution or of the measures of government a crime, however sharp, unreasonable, and intemperate it might be.

Mr. REED. I call attention to this language:

The constitutional freedom of speech and of the press must mean a freedom as broad as existed when the Constitution which guarantees it was adopted, and it would not be in the power of the legislature to restrict it, unless it might be in those cases of publications injurious to private character or public morals or safety, which come strictly within the reasons of civil or criminal liability at the common law, but in which, nevertheless, the common law as we have adopted it failed to provide a remedy.

Following this is a long statement by this great jurist, going more into detail, but I do not intend to take the time of the Senate to read it. Just for a moment I call attention to an excerpt from Judge Story, who, speaking of this same act, said:

There remain one or two other measures of a political nature whose constitutionality has been denied, but which, being of a transient character, have left no permanent traces in the constitutional jurisprudence of the country. Reference is here made to the alien and sedition laws passed in 1798, both of which were limited to a short duration and expired by their own limitation. One (the alien act) * * * The other (the sedition act) declared it to be a public crime, punishable with fine and imprisonment, for any persons unlawfully to combine and conspire together with intent to oppose any measure or measures of the United States—

And so forth.

Notice that the requirement there was a conspiracy—a very different thing from the individual act of a man. I continue reading:

or, with such intent, to counsel, advise, or attempt to procure any insurrection, unlawful assembly, or combination; or to write, print, utter, or publish, or cause or procure to be written, * * * or willingly to assist in writing, * * * any false, scandalous, and malicious writing or writings against the Government of the United States, or either House of Congress, or the President, with intent to defame them, or bring them into contempt or disrepute, or to excite against them the hatred of the people—

And so forth.

And this final clause:

It provided, however, that the truth of the writing or libel might be given in evidence, and that the jury which tried the cause should have a right to determine the law and the fact, under the direction of the court, as in other cases.

I repeat that that right which was reserved in that abominated and detested law is not in this proposed act, and we have just rejected an amendment reserving that right. So much faster do we travel than our ancestors.

Judge Story continues:

The constitutionality of both the acts was assailed with great earnestness and ability at the time, and was defended with equal masculine vigor.

I pass over numerous comments upon the law, only pausing to call attention to a footnote:

The alien and sedition acts were the immediate cause of the Virginia resolutions of December, 1798, and of the elaborate vindication of them, in the celebrated report of the 7th of January, 1800. The learned reader will there find an ample exposition of the whole constitutional objections. See also Fourth Jefferson's Correspondence—

And so forth.

I shall not take the time of the Senate to produce those documents, but all men know that it was these laws, obnoxious to our form of government, which produced a political revolution against which ousted the party in power.

From another footnote I read this:

The alien and sedition acts were, beyond all question, condemned by public sentiment; but that the condemnation, in the minds of any considerable number of the people, is placed on the ground of want of constitutional power is by no means clear. * * * The sedition act was clearly in the highest degree impolitic, and, as the prosecutions under it showed, was susceptible of being used for the purposes of oppression and terrorism, and these facts afford reason abundant for its condemnation. It was far from being as questionable in point of constitutional authority—

As upon the ground just mentioned.

Mr. President, at the risk of being misunderstood—and I often am—I do not hesitate to say that extreme legislation is always a mistake, and this for the very good reason given by Judge Cooley. It produces the thing it is intended to prevent. Repressive legislation acts as an irritant to a mind already inflamed against a Government for real or imaginary acts of oppression. I do not intend to further comment. I have done my duty by calling attention to the words of these great and wise men who spoke with that deliberation which can seldom be fully exercised save in the philosopher's study, where the panorama of history may be calmly passed in review.

This bill contains a provision that whoever shall speak contemptuously of the Constitution of the United States may be sent to the penitentiary for 20 years. Mr. President, I have been a defender of the Constitution of the United States in my poor and weak way ever since I have been old enough to take part in public discussions. I have defended it upon this floor. I have been a defender of the courts of my country when certain great men who are now posing as the chief patriots of earth were going up and down the land declaring that there ought to be an appeal from the solemn decision of a court to a vote by the mob in the courthouse yard, when the seed was being sown that has produced the I. W. W.'s of this country, when the dragon's teeth were being scattered abroad, from which there has sprung up an army of anarchists and other dangerous people who would destroy law and order. I am to-day the defender of the Constitution. If this bill were made to read, "whoever shall disloyally attack the Constitution," I would have no objection to utter; but the language is, "whoever shall speak contemptuously of the Constitution."

What is meant by "speaking contemptuously of the Constitution"? Is the woman in contempt of the Constitution who declares that it is an unjust Constitution because it does not give the right of suffrage to women? I am not a woman suffragist, but I assert the right of a woman or of a man to insist that the Constitution is unjust if they believe it to be unjust, provided always they seek only by lawful means to bring about a change and remain loyal citizens. I might also say that Senators upon this floor have spoken of the Constitution in what I regarded as somewhat contemptuous language. The distinguished Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] acknowledges the soft impeachment and, in his usual pleasant and gracious manner, appropriates it to himself.

Mr. LEWIS. As to certain features.

Mr. REED. As to certain features, yes; but when you attack certain features of the Constitution you have attacked the Constitution. In that sense it is an entirety. I have heard Senators upon this floor indulge in some very strong statements in regard to the Constitution, statements which it seemed to me placed the Constitution in contempt, and yet I know that those Senators meant no more than to express an honest judgment, and that they were as loyal as I am, or as anyone else can be.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Pertinent to the phase of the question which the able Senator is now discussing, I desire to call his attention to the fact that only a very few years ago the able Senator from Mississippi, Mr. Money, addressed the Senate armed with an array of authorities and facts which challenged the admiration of every Senator who listened to him; he maintained that the fifteenth amendment to the Federal Constitution was not legally, constitutionally, adopted. His speech was made in support of a resolution calling upon the Department of Justice to test that fact. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri, agreeing as I do with the able Senator from Mississippi who preceded me as an honored Member of this body, if I would come under the condemnation of the proposed statute if I should say on the stump that which learned Senators said in this Chamber?

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. LEWIS. Not that I am sure that my illustration fortifies the argument of the Senator from Missouri, but in order that the position I take may be understood, permit me to state that I have often said on this floor, and I have said in other places, that there were provisions of the Federal Constitution which I did not regard as advantageous to my country and which I felt were decided obstructions to its welfare—not that I spoke in contempt of it, not contemptuously, but, frankly, because I have felt those provisions as construed have worked great injustice and ought to be amended. Let me illustrate to the Senator and say, in conclusion, that the provision that no State shall impair the obligation of a contract caused the courts to decide in the State of Wisconsin that a franchise obtained by a legislature confessed to have been bought nevertheless was a contract, and, though it might have been obtained corruptly, that they could not go behind it, that the State could not impair it, merely because it was obtained through these legislators who were charged with being corrupt. In my own city of Chicago it was openly charged—the facts of which I shall not affirm or deny—that certain street railway franchises in the past were obtained by notorious, open debauchery; but the highest courts of my country restrained me as a law officer from making an attack upon those contracts in behalf of the State, and in one particular instance of Federal supremacy a Federal judge sent me to jail for 30 days—but I was busy in other duties and could not accommodate him at the time. But I only invite the attention of my eminent friend to the fact that I had to come to the Supreme Court of the United States to get that judgment reversed, however just it might have been to me under other circumstances. [Laughter.] That is what I meant when from time to time I have said, in the presence of my able friend and distinguished lawyer, that there were many provisions of the Federal Constitution that I feel in their operations work great injury to my Government.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if this bill is passed, and the Senator shall go upon the public streets, or any place where he does not have the immunity of this Chamber, and shall say what he has just now said, would he not be liable to arrest and imprisonment? I ask the question in all seriousness and in all kindliness. We are here endeavoring to frame a law, and we ought to frame a law that is wise and just, if we are capable of so doing. With the language the Senator has just uttered I do not agree. I do not agree that our courts have gone as far as the Senator appears to think they have, and in cases where they have gone near that line I think the courts have themselves been mistaken. Yet, when I say that, I have only asserted that courts are human and that courts err. We must therefore take into consideration the fact that human courts will enforce this statute. Perhaps they will enforce it in times of great excitement, when even courts are somewhat carried away by popular clamor. We ought to consider all such possibilities when we are enacting a law.

Why, Mr. President, speaking of remarks about the Constitution, I happen to have before me the words of my friend the Senator from Illinois, whose loyalty no man can challenge. This is the statement, made during the discussion of the food bill:

It will not serve to excuse our inactivity or defeat proposed methods because of the cry "unconstitutional." The people are not so much concerned about our Constitution as they are about our institutions.

That is rather contemptuous language of the Constitution.

The American people are in no mood—

Now, notice—

to allow an obsolete paper Constitution—

Not just "a scrap of paper," but an "obsolete paper Constitution"— to defeat the preservation of the human constitution. Under the war powers of our Government the President commands, and the Congress directs the method of its performance.

I do not read that to criticize my friend. In the exuberance of debate, and inspired doubtless by those poetic faculties which make the Senator in person so charming and in eloquence so resistless, I think he went a little further than he probably would if alone in his study with neither eyes to seduce nor applause to excite he had undertaken to write down his sober opinion of the Constitution.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, if my alluring friend will allow this interruption—— [Laughter.]

Mr. REED. I could not do less.

Mr. LEWIS. I will have him assured that my observations on certain provisions at that time were coolly calculated, deliberately uttered, and now reaffirmed; but it was not a spirit of poetic effusion within me that inspired the utterance. The Senator was my chief debating antagonist at that hour. It was the agitating thrust of the distinguished Senator from Missouri, whose keen lance, penetrating at my bosom, forced the flame from my forge, that I might burn away his blade.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if any act or word of mine be credited with having evoked even a momentary flash of that genius which has made the Senator from Illinois so illustrious, then I have achieved immortality and am almost content to end this earthly career, for shall I not be entitled to the encomium: "He inspired the genius of LEWIS and so accomplished the superhuman." [Laughter.]

Coming gently to the earth, I remark that other men have criticized the Constitution, and doubtless will continue to criticize it; but I have this to say—that whether they act in the spirit of poetic frenzy, or respond to less lofty impulses, the principles of the Constitution will endure while human liberty lives upon this earth. Courts may misconstrue it, legislators may disregard it, the waves of passion may beat against it, but it will endure, because it is founded upon the eternal principles of justice and right. The changing seasons of men's opinions may come and may go, the little tempests of revolution rage their brief hour and die away, but while men love liberty they will have freedom of speech, freedom of the press, security of life, of liberty, and of property, and about these great pillars is builded the temple of the Constitution, and it will endure as they shall endure. These shall endure until disaster shall destroy the race of men. And yet I do not claim that the Constitution is infallible, nor do I affirm that we might not want in a proper way to change certain of its precepts; but that very right implies the right to criticize, in a proper way, the Constitution.

Let me read you a few words, and let me then ask if their author should be treated as an outcast or a felon.

> The charm of our constitutional ideal has now been long enough wound up to enable sober men who do not believe in political witchcraft to judge what it has accomplished, and is likely still to accomplish, without further winding. The Constitution is not honored by blind worship. The more open eyed we become, as a nation, to its defects, and the prompter we grow in applying with the unhesitating courage of conviction all thoroughly tested or well-considered expedients necessary to make self-government among us a straightforward thing of simple method, single, unstinted power, and clear responsibility, the nearer will we approach to the sound sense and practical genius of the great and honorable statesmen of 1787. And the first step toward emancipation from the timidity and false pride which have led us to seek to thrive despite the defects of our national system rather than seem to deny its perfection is a fearless criticism of that system.

Such are the concluding words of a chapter devoted to criticism of our form of government and of certain constitutional fundamentals. They were written by the distinguished President of the United States. I have been reading from pages 332 and 333 of Congressional Government. Yet if this bill shall pass, and if these same sentiments should be expressed by one of ruder mold, not so gifted in grace of speech, but still as honestly expressed, we might, under this bill, see that man haled before a court.

This bill as it came to the Congress was, as I understand, the handiwork of the Attorney General's office. The Attorney General's office had examined the various decisions, and had been engaged in the business of undertaking to prosecute those acts which were regarded as inimical to our Government. Certain defects had been discovered in the law; among others, that the law did not cover the question of intent, but only covered the doing of the act itself; and so the Attorney General's office prepared a bill which the Attorney General's office believed would meet the difficulties and solve whatever legal problems were necessary of solution, then sent that bill over, and it was passed by the House. That bill appears here now in the plain type. The amendments appearing in italics were added in the Senate committee. They are outside the purpose of the Attorney General.

Now, I have no criticism of the real author of this amendment. The real author of this long amendment is the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS]. If I understand correctly, he is the real author of the Montana law. Now, out in Montana they had a very bad situation. They had one of those conditions which I sometimes think almost called for martial law. They had I. W. W.'s by the scores and the hundreds. If I do not state this correctly, the Senator will correct me. They were turbulent, they were lawbreakers, they were guilty of sabotage and other crimes.

The people of Montana wanted to suppress them; the Senator from Montana wanted to suppress them; and it was a very proper motive. They enacted a law to meet that particular condition, but I do not think it is necessary to fasten such a law upon the entire United States. So I hope this bill will be carefully gone over and those extreme provisions which ought not to be in a law passed in this Republic withdrawn from it, to the end that all of us may vote for it. Whatever is done, I am sure the motives of every man touching this legislation are only the motives of those who want sound and wholesome laws.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. MYERS. I will say to the Senator from Missouri that he has correctly described the conditions which existed last summer in Montana, and not only in Montana but all over the Northwest and in every Northwestern State, from Minnesota to the Pacific coast, and not only in the Northwest but in the West and the Southwest. Those conditions, while they appear to have been temporarily checked, are not abolished, and they threaten to become active again in the near future; and it seems to me they are spreading more or less all over the United States, judging by recent outbreaks that we read of in the morning papers every day.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I think the Senator is unduly exercised. Comparatively a few men in a State can provoke disorder and create bad conditions, and yet I undertake to say there has not been a moment when the good people of the State of Montana were not 100 to 1 in the majority.

Mr. MYERS. Yes; but if there is no law to enable them to deal with these matters, they may resort to mob law.

Mr. REED. Very well. Let us come to that. The Senator says there is no law. Mr. President, there is a law in the State of Montana, there is a law in every great civilized State, that will reach, in my judgment, all these conditions. The act of sabotage which has been complained of is illegal under the laws of every State. It is the malicious destruction of property. It may be so done as to result in homicide. It can be punished without interference with liberty of speech. Moreover, the inciting of people to deeds of violence is unlawful in every State of this Union. It is unlawful, as suggested by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], in times of peace and in times of war.

We have made it unlawful to make speeches against or do anything to resist the draft. We have made it unlawful to do anything in resistance of the movement of our Army. We have made it unlawful to resist the sale of bonds. Indeed, Mr. President, we have gone so far in the enactment of these statutes that circulars have been sent out to the good women of Massachusetts, commanding them to report the amount of food they have in their houses, and notifying them that if they do not report correctly they will be sent to the penitentiary. That circular was sent out by a Federal food administrator. It illustrates how laws may be abused.

Let me give you another illustration: There is a gentleman now connected with the Government who has been appointed to buy lumber. I received a letter a few days ago from one of the prominent lumber men of my city, a man of considerable wealth, one of the very highest class of our citizens, who complained to me that he had been called to Washington, and that a statement like this had been made to him and to other lumbermen:

"The Government wants you to cut certain kinds of lumber in your mill. The Government will give you a price which the Secretary of War fixes; and you can take your option, gentlemen, to do what we say or go to the penitentiary for 30 years." It was stated in about that sort of style. I knew the man who wrote the letter was a reputable man, and I called up the gentleman who was asserted to have given the orders. To my astonishment he admitted he had made substantially the statements charged. Moreover, he affirmed his right to make them, seeking to justify himself on the ground that he thought the lumbermen were going to charge too much for their lumber. But I called his attention to the fact that the Government could commandeer and take the lumber and fix the price, and asked why it was necessary to hold before these men the threat of the penitentiary. He again sought to justify it. He insisted that the men were free to accept or reject the price that was offered. I asked him if the freedom of acceptance was not a good deal like that which is tendered to the individual on the highway when a robber puts a pistol to his head and gives him an option to turn over his pocketbook or to have his brains blown out. I gave this gentleman credit that when the proposition was presented to him in that way he assumed an apologetic air and said he would not repeat the performance.

But, Senators, you find this same evil illustrated time and again. The average Government agent or official—no, not the average Government official, but many of the Government officials—to-day accompanies his orders with a threat. I signed a little application to be graciously permitted to have some coal put in my cellar yesterday morning. The application was on an official blank that was furnished; at the bottom of the blank was a warning, the black type of which looked me in the face with the declaration: "If you make a single statement there that is not accurate you are liable to be sent to the penitentiary." If, forsooth, in stating the amount of coal I had left in my cellar I guessed it a ton too little or too much I was to be classed as a felon. Where did the miserable little popinjay who sends out those circulars get that authority?

There used to be an old maxim, "Set a nigger on horseback, he will ride to the devil." Judge Cooley, in the language that I read to you, called attention to the fact that these powers are likely to be abused. I have in mind a gentleman who came to me and wanted to get a position in a safe place in the Army. He was within the draft age. I always believe, as Abe Lincoln did, that no man ought to be very greatly abused because the Lord put a cowardly pair of legs under his body. So I said to this individual that I would see if I could not help him. I do not know whether it was through my help, or how it happened, but, anyway, he got a position somewhere, somehow, connected with a food administrator, either State or national, I do not know which; and the first thing I read in the newspapers was that he had somebody arrested because an order had been issued that a 10-cent loaf of bread should be made a certain size and this certain culprit baker had made two loaves half the size of the 10-cent loaf and was selling them for a nickel apiece. I wished then that I had this gentleman somewhere where he would be obeying somebody else's commands instead of himself issuing orders.

It is that sort of thing that we here ought to guard against. When it comes to the suppression of those individuals who go out and preach the overthrow of our Government, when we deal with men who go about at a time like this trying to destroy the force of our Government, when we deal with wretches who by direction or indirection are trying to give aid and comfort to the enemy, I will go "as far as who goes farthest" to apprehend and convict and punish. But it is not necessary to break down the liberty of speech in order to stop the ravings and rantings of an anarchist. It is not necessary to destroy the freedom of the press of a whole people because there may be some miserable wretch who prints an obscene or an indecent or a disloyal thing. We need not grow alarmed and lose our heads. This whole Republic still stands and it will stand, though the storms and tempests of a world war may beat about it. Still it will stand, because it is founded upon the eternal rock of liberty and is sustained by the arms of 100,000,000 freemen. We need not grow alarmed.

There will be a mouthing, carping, ranting fellow here and there. There will occasionally come to us excited stories in the press that are afterwards found on investigation to be untrue. Let me say to the press, or to its representatives, and say it in the kindliest way, that if there was a little more care in investigating before statements are given out there would be less of feeling. How many times have you read in the paper that people had been given glass in their food, and you rarely hear of the case again? How many times out of the multitude of times we have read that glass has been administered has the story been true? I do not say some wicked, infamous wretch may not have given broken glass to a human being, but I do say it is about as impossible a crime as you can conceive, because a man who eats bread with broken glass in it will very soon find it. If you doubt that try the experiment of sprinkling a little sand in your food. I do not say it has not happened, but I say we have been told a thousand times it happened where it probably happened once.

A fire breaks out, and the statement is made that it is of incendiary origin. I do not say that fires of incendiary origin have not occurred and that they may not have been set by those who love Germany and who hate the United States. Let us all hope in every such case for a swift apprehension and a condign punishment.

But, Mr. President, it is the fashion nowadays if a fire breaks out to say that it is incendiary and to charge it to evil-minded people who want this country to lose in the great war. You find the statement comes to you with many illuminating details and with great circumstantiality and the next day you do not hear of it again.

If as a matter of fact the crime has been committed as charged there would be some convictions, there would be more arrests. All our officers are not asleep. The whole community would constitute itself in every instance a society of detectives to run down and bring to judgment the culprit. But you have not heard of many detections.

So also the cry is raised of spying; that hated word "spy," how often is it heard upon the floor of the Senate. I hope I will not be misunderstood. I hope nobody will say I am making a plea for spies; really, the time has come when a man is not safe in asking for calmness and reason any more. Yet I think our Federal authorities have for the most part apprehended the spies. There may be others. How they get word abroad I do not know; but, Senators, I do not feel that this country is rotten and reeking with German sympathizers. I do not believe that condition is general. If I ever am compelled to believe that it is general it will be the saddest moment that ever came to me in life. I believe, on the contrary, that all the history of this world does not furnish an example of such loyalty, such deathless love of country, as that which now animates the hearts of the American people. Here and there an ignorant man, here and there a vicious man, here and there a criminal, may conspire against our beloved country; but what of the great body of our people? Mothers have given up their sons with a sacrifice that is unexampled in history. Fathers have seen their boys go to the training camps and to the field with breaking hearts, and yet bid them go. From every community there has come the same response. There has been no general slacking; there has been no withholding of support. Our Government has asked for money and it has been poured out in golden streams, the like of which was never dreamed of in all the history of the past. We vote $20,000,000,000 here in this Senate without an hour's debate and without a dissenting voice. We have voted other thousands of millions of dollars on other occasions without a single negative. We have, Mr. President, laid taxes heavier and heavier and heavier until we have taken a large part of the earnings of many of our citizens; yet no man raises a question about the taxes. All of them pay, even though they must borrow to pay; yet there is not a word of complaint.

Let me tell you that it is a bad time if there are spies in this country in communication with Europe to be constantly sending word across the water that we are in danger here at home; that there is an insurrection brooding; that we have traitors in every community; and at the feet of the Goddess of Liberty lurks the coiled serpent of rebellion.

I tell you, sir, the word to send to Germany is that this is a united people; that the people of America are willing to spend the last drop of their blood in defense of America's honor. The word I would send across the water to the Kaiser would be that he can only achieve a victory when the last of America's men are dead in their graves, and that long before that time comes "the scepter shall have departed" from him and his home, and upon the ruins of autocracy will have been erected a temple to liberty in which even the present subjects of the Kaiser shall enjoy the rights of men.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I wish to address myself particularly to the amendment pending. There is a very well-founded distinction, and we must observe that when we undertake to frame laws or bills that may become laws between citizens and aliens. Treason is defined to be not an ordinary crime, but according to the regulations of different nationalities depending either upon the legislation of Parliament in England or some similar authority if the Crown possesses that elsewhere, or in our own country by constitutional definition in certain acts. The Constitution of the United States defines but a single crime in express words undertaking to describe in apt language of what a crime shall consist. That is the crime of treason, and it is defined—

> Treason against the United States shall consist only in levying war against them or, in adhering to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort. No person shall be convicted of treason unless on the testimony of two witnesses to the same overt act or on confession in open court.

That being the definition of treason and the degree of proof required, Congress has legislated. Some amendatory acts have been passed from the original act, but section 1342 of the Revised Statutes of the United States contains a great number of important provisions. Section 1343 defines the punishment for spies as a part of this same enactment. It declares:

> All persons who, in time of war or of rebellion against the supreme authority of the United States, shall be found lurking or acting as spies in or about any of the fortifications, posts, quarters, or encampments of any of the armies of the United States or elsewhere shall be triable by a general court-martial or by a military commission and shall, on conviction thereof, suffer death.

There is the definition of disloyalty found in the dictionary. There is nothing in express words in the authorities which I have on the desk. Allegiance, however, which is a necessary link in these transactions, is defined to be "the tie which binds the citizen of the Government in return for the protection which the Government affords him; the duty which the subject owes to the sovereign correlative with the protection received."

There is a local or actual allegiance which is due from an alien resident in a country in return for the protection afforded by the Government. That is only a common-law allegiance or definition of what constitutes a less binding tie by an alien in his relation to the Government where he is temporarily found. It leaves it open to construction, because it is open to construction in that way.

This bill ought specifically to include both aliens and citizens. Then there can be no doubt about it. This is especially true in view of using the term "disloyal." The term "disloyal" implies by the force of the word itself a breach of the duty owed to the Government; whether it includes the temporary allegiance of an alien is open to question, in view of the statutory definitions sought to be made in the bill, if it should mature into an act of Congress. Because of that I think the amendment of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] ought to be adopted, so that it will in lieu of the word "whoever" employ the words "citizen or alien." Then it is not open to construction; there is no avenue of escape in the event of a prosecution of a resident alien under the provisions of the bill.

This statute that has been in force for many years, Mr. President, that spies shall be punished by death when found in and about a camp, fortification, military post, or elsewhere, covers the whole United States during certain periods. That period is either when rebellion is on or the United States is at war. The law then covers conditions found at the present time. We are at war. With matters in that condition spy after spy has been arrested in the United States. For days and weeks, and it is over a year since we declared war, spies have been known to swarm all over the country. They have been in the Capital; they have been in the capital of almost every State in the Union, in every one in which any information would be of value to an enemy. There have been traces of spies everywhere. Some have been arrested.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] not many days ago referred to that fact and asked what had become of them. What punishment had been meted out to those men who have been arrested by the Government on a charge of that kind. They have been taken in custody by a marshal, they have been placed in jail, in places where the United States authority incarcerates offenders, some of them local jails, it is true, under an arrangement made in the different counties or cities where there is jail room. What has been done in all that time? These gentlemen, some of them foreigners owing no allegiance to our country, are in jail, eating three meals a day, employing high-priced lawyers, or have their governments do it for them, preparing for trial, enjoying the best that the community affords, with high-priced cigars on the table, with magazines, periodicals, and pleasing literature for their delectation during their idle time. What has been done? Nothing save the arrest.

Here is the law under which these gentlemen ought to be prosecuted:

All persons who in time of war or of rebellion against the supreme authority of the United States who shall be found under the conditions which constitute a spy shall be triable not by civil courts, but triable by a court-martial.

That is already the law of the land, and how is it used?

I am moved now to make the direct charge that this bill is not intended to reach those men already incarcerated in the penal institutions of this country. They are already capable of being punished under a law—the law of the camp, not merely in the civil courts of the country. The ulterior purpose of this bill is to reach another grade of alleged offenders. The purpose of it is to go where a court-martial can not reach.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARDING in the chair). Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am in hearty accord with the view the Senator is now expressing, and I am glad indeed that he is calling attention to the statutes which govern. The position was taken here the other day when I was urging the same proposition the Senator is now urging that under the Milligan case—an Indiana case, decided by the Supreme Court of the United States—military tribunals had only jurisdiction when martial law had been declared. I know the Senator is familiar with that case, and I feel that the Senator's view of it is right.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; I will come to that in a moment. But the spies that have been arrested since war was declared a year ago this April have not been tried by a court-martial. They have been arrested by civil authority. Some of them have been taken around posts and fortifications near or in encampments where the military forces of the United States are in process of training. They can lawfully be tried by a court-martial.

I do not want to go into the Milligan case. Every lawyer reads that and knows about it, and all Senators are familiar with it; but I can make this very short synopsis of the Milligan case:

The Milligan case arose in Indiana. Milligan was by a court-martial tried in Indiana, a part of the military district, and by a court-martial sentenced to death. He sued out a writ of habeas corpus in the Federal court, and that led to the opinion, finally, by Justice Davis, speaking for the court in that case. These are the only necessary principles involved in the discussion of this bill. There is no such thing as martial law. It is a misnomer of itself. There is such a thing as martial rule. That is the law of the camp. It is the discretion of the commanding officer. It is the rule laid down according to the exigencies of that particular case. It is not a rule of law at all; it is a rule of men, and is sharply distinguished from the rule in civil tribunals.

Milligan was tried by a court-martial. There was no obstruction of the process of the civil courts; the courts were open and all civil process could be issued. There was no occasion for the declaration of martial law. There is but one condition that will warrant the declaration of martial rule. It is when the courts are closed by military force; when the actual clash of arms between the embattled forces, one enemy against another in our country, suspends all the civil laws of the country, process can not be issued or served, courts can not be convened, and the orderly administration of justice is interrupted. That is a question of fact. Nobody will contend that we are in a condition that martial law can be declared in this country, except in certain isolated cases in certain parts of the country I think martial law ought to be declared now. If the governors of the various States had that high sense of duty that they are endeavoring to impress upon the Senate, they themselves, by existing law, would preserve the peace in their respective States. It is only because they think more of the effect it will have upon votes in future elections than they do of their oath of office that they are passing this duty up to the Senate and the House of Representatives. That is what is the matter now. There are too many politicians in governors' offices, too many demagogues in the country. That is what is hurting this country, and not the lack of law.

In the Milligan case it was declared that the court would take cognizance of the actual conditions in the country; that they would endeavor to ascertain by evidence, or by taking judicial notice, as they did in Indiana, of the actual conditions of the country, whether Indiana was at peace or at war; whether the courts were open for the issue of process and the orderly administration of justice. That is a question of fact; it is not a mere question of the proclamation of the commanding officer of our country—the President—or of any of the military or naval officers of the United States.

While things were in that condition this trial was had. The courts were open. It is about the same thing as would justify the suspension of the writ of habeas corpus by an act of Congress. We can not arbitrarily suspend the writ of habeas corpus, a writ of common right. Every State in the Union has it. It is habitually employed in all of the Federal courts. It dates back to 1379. It is merely an act of Parliament, and we have copied almost its verbiage with very little modification. We have no power now to suspend even the writ of habeas corpus, although we are at war. We can in such cases suspend the writ of habeas corpus only when rebellion and invasion are accomplished facts. Then we may do so. There is neither in this country. There is no rebellion, except certain riotously disposed persons who are committing various outrages in different States of the Union because of the phlegmatic apathy of governors, sheriffs, and other peace officers of the States where the outrages occur. For one I wish to pass the responsibility back to the governors of the States where these riots and murders occur. Let them first perform their duty; let them come into the Senate Chamber and make their appeal with clean hands and with duty performed before they undertake to tell us what our duty is to preserve peace in local jurisdictions by an act of Congress so as to relieve them from their duty. They can then say, "Go to Washington with your troubles and let the authorities there settle these local difficulties."

With things in that condition, the court said in the Milligan case that the only thing that could be done was to discharge the defendant. There was no martial law that could be justified in Indiana; there was no suspension of the ordinary rules of civil government; there was no rebellion or invasion actually in the State of Indiana. It was declared a military district, and the Union general was in command of the country, but there was no suspension of the ordinary functions of the civil authorities, courts or otherwise. Grand juries were open; marshals served processes; the local authorities in the State were all of them competent and empowered to carry on the usual functions of civil government. It was a question then of fact, and there were no facts that would justify the proclamation of martial rule in that territory.

That is the condition of things now. The existence of certain facts must necessarily be proven, and they can not be proven in this case. There is no claim here that we could declare martial law. But that does not apply to camps; it does not apply to spies who are acting in behalf of the public enemy. It applies to no fortified place where the military authority of the United States has exclusive jurisdiction. So these spies, under section 1343 of the Revised Statutes, are now subject to trial by court-martial and to the death penalty. There is not anything to hinder the spy who has been taken near a camp, who has maps and information upon his person designed to be communicated to the public enemy, from being tried by a court-martial and being executed, as spies have been from time immemorial. Still I have not heard of anything of that kind being done. I think it very unlikely that it will be done.

Courts-martial are held in camps and in places adjacent to camps. I think within a mile limit, as I remember in a general way from the statute, a kind of a safety zone about military points. Courts-martial of that kind are valid, and a death sentence imposed by a court-martial would not be stayed by the civil courts or by any appeal to them. So we have this authority at this time, but we are not using it.

I know what is the matter, and I think all the rest of you do. The very statement made by these distinguished gentlemen who were in conference in this city yesterday, and still are to-day, explains the situation. There is a national convention of lecturers abiding in Washington. They are a very useful cult. They are a gentry who possess universal information. Nothing can be done without them. All the operations of civil government would instantly cease if they were to remove from the land. I have no doubt that they are a very earnest lot. They are here taking counsel with each other how to save the country. They will do everything but fight. I never knew one of them that had any practical sense. [Laughter.]

One of the chief spokesmen, and I imagine the bright particular star of this entire collection, is the head of the Bureau of Publicity of this Government. He seemed to have occupied a place precisely in the center of the spot light. He obtained publicity; he understands how to get it. I presume this morning at every breakfast table throughout all of North America a paragraph was read of which he delivered himself yesterday. It was in substance that he thanked God—it has been referred to—that we were not prepared for the war, following it by another paragraph that to have been prepared for the war would have been a contradiction of all our ideals of government in this country.

Through him must percolate all of the information of military matters; through him all news must be censored; through this distinguished pacifist, through this gentleman, who is telling this combined aggregation of governmental talent known as a convention of lecturers, all of us are to be permitted to think and to know things, and to know no more than he permits. With such men as he to censor the information which the public may have I can understand how any kind of laws will be wholly futile in their result; I can understand just as well, too, that when anything fails this head of the Publicity Bureau will be the first to charge it upon the neglect of Congress to furnish additional laws.

I had rather have a community or a country with good men and poor laws than to have a country with poor men and the best laws that ever were devised from the time of Solon down to the President of the United States. If you will give me good men with any kind of makeshift laws, government will be successful, but with the best of laws and poor men in office, having no sympathy with the motive of the law or with its execution, government will be a failure.

I want to ask another thing for the Senate to consider in this connection, and especially in view of some amendments which have already been adopted to the bill, and which I hope will remain in the bill. Whether it shall be finally in that shape where I can vote for it or not, I should greatly like to vote for some such measure. I take occasion now to say that not only the head of the Publicity Bureau, a pronounced pacifist who derides the idea of preparation, is in authority, but others just as bad are in authority. If we were prepared, if we had one and one-half or two million of trained soldiery on the line in France, if we had our resources organized and accessible so that we could bridge the Atlantic Ocean and land our supplies where they are needed to sustain the forces of the United States soldiers, by the time the autumn came to this continent the war would be ended. In this critical period, when the allies are trying to defend either the approach to Paris or the approach to the English Channel, either of which is equally dangerous both as to the strategic importance and to the morale of the allies and ourselves—in this time, say what you please, we are bearing no man's part in this mighty struggle of the world.

I know how optimistic everybody is; I do not think at all to classify myself as a pessimist; I am like most of us, for I think most people are optimists by nature and pessimists by experience. Whatever we may hope, here is the hard, cold daylight truth, that for a Nation of 100,000,000 people, with more gold in our coffers than any other nation in the world, with the wealthiest soil the sun ever shone on, that makes the Nile and the Euphrates look like they were only a part of the world's historical supply in years past—with all that, with our resources of the metals, the iron, and the steel out of which men gird themselves in modern times for such struggles—with all these advantages of civilization and art and the historical traditions of a thousand years going back through our ancestry, the fact remains that, with a year charged to our credit since the war began, in this struggle, I repeat, we are not bearing a man's part.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARDING in the chair). Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield.

Mr. KNOX. May I not ask the Senator from Illinois if he is not an optimist somewhat in the sense of the Irishman's definition of that term, "doing your best to believe something you know is not so"? [Laughter.]

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir; I think that very aptly describes my frame of mind and probably the frame of mind of many other Members of the Senate. But with matters in that condition we are told by divers gentlemen that our airplane program, our armament and explosive program, and our ship program are all in a very flourishing state. I wish that were so. A Member of Congress, for whom I have the highest esteem, back in his home State of Illinois not long ago made a speech in which he said that within three months we had so developed explosives that both the bomb that explodes on the surface of the water, destroying a submarine when it is in view, and the deep-sea bomb that follows the U-boat when submerged, are now accomplished inventions, and that in three months the submarines would be chased from the Atlantic Ocean. I am sure that everybody would rejoice to know that such inventions existed. He said, further, that we had thousands of airplanes. I do not know where they are; they are like many other things; they are like the majority side of this Chamber, for instance, which is absent, with the single exception of the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN]. [Laughter].

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, I am afraid the Senator did not notice me.

Mr. SHERMAN. I beg the Senator's pardon. I wish to include the Senator from Delaware in that roll of honor and also the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], who is caught in suspicious circumstances on the Republican side of the Chamber. [Laughter.]

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I should like to inquire if I am in a suspicious position because I am talking to the junior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON]? I thought that would be permitted everywhere.

Mr. SHERMAN. No; that is not the suspicious circumstance. I would not so regard it; but the fact that the Senator had successfully executed a camouflage over here, and I was not able to see him, for he looks almost like a Republican. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Chair may make an inquiry, Has it occurred to the Senator from Illinois that he may have emptied the majority side of the Chamber by his attack on the lecturing profession? [Laughter.]

Mr. SHERMAN. The Chair, as usual, is right, especially the present occupant of the chair. The fact remains that across the sea the allies have steadily given ground. The enemy has taken, since the drive began about the 21st of March or so, an area of country nearly 200 miles larger than the State of Rhode Island. That is how much they have occupied. They are fortifying; they are "digging in," to use the local military phrase; they are bringing up reserves, with heavy artillery and military supplies, to hold the country they have taken. They are repeating the tactics which they followed when they made the first attack through Belgium and eastern France and took the territory in 1914–15, which they yet hold.

Now, whatever some of the public officers who address the lecturers in convention assembled in this Capital may think; however fervently they may thank the Diety that we were not prepared, I deplore it, and I criticize it as the crime not only of our country but the crime of the age against the civilized world. I say to the vacant side of this Chamber that if we had been prepared this war would have ended next autumn, and the "Hindenburg drive" would have been the last expiring gasp of German autocracy in the world. Now, the line is bent back, and if the allied military stations are taken, if the enemy penetrates to the channel, whether Paris falls or not, they will have severed the British Army from the French; they will have divided the two great nations in their military strength; and can then proceed to fight and destroy them in detail. That is why now a million hardened soldiers would have decided the fate of the civilized world; that is why, I presume, the publicity director yesterday thanked the Lord that we were not prepared when we went into this war. I shall not spare my sentiments upon this question either in this Chamber or out of it, whether there be jail sentences enforced by this bill or not; I shall criticize one who utters such language as the great archtraitor of this Republic, and others who may sympathize with him, whether they are in the office of the Secretary of War or not, whether they be pacifists known or concealed, who feel such sentiments deserve nothing but the anathema of every patriot in this country, whether he votes for this bill or not.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. STONE. Upon whom is the Senator laying the blame, if, indeed, he is laying it upon any particular person or particular organization, that we were not able to have a million hardened soldiers at the front? To be sure, it would be most fortunate if they were there, but the Senator seems to be complaining of somebody because we did not have them there.

Mr. SHERMAN. For once the Senator understands me. I was complaining [laughter]; I intended to be understood as complaining.

Mr. STONE. Of whom?

Mr. SHERMAN. I will tell you; I will satisfy the curiosity of the senior Senator from Missouri in a parliamentary way. I do not complain of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], who has been sound upon that question ever since I have been a Member of this Chamber, for more than four years. His voice has been heard in warning time after time in public prints and on the public platform. He has urged upon all, and especially upon those who were his associates, to prepare. Who, I inquire—and I think it needs no answer—since the 4th of March, 1913, has been in control of both Houses of Congress and of the Executive office of this country, together with all of the departments and machinery that frame legislation, that organize armies, that equip navies, and that are entrusted with the power to put the Nation in a condition to defend its rights either domestic or foreign? What organization has been in control of actual government in that time, I inquire of the Senator? Has he found, I will ask as a corollary to that, any of the minority political organization, in any considerable number that would strike any ordinary mind as being worth while, opposing any moves of a military character that were made by the majority?

Mr. STONE. Perhaps not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield, certainly.

Mr. STONE. Perhaps not; it may be that none of the minority during the period named opposed any movement of the kind indicated by the Senator, but just before that, when his own party was in power, what did they do? Why did they not then organize, discipline, and in every way prepare a great military force for the support of the Government in any possible emergency? If it be true, as I say it is, that they drifted, as they had drifted before, why throw the responsibility upon the present majority? Why not assume some part of it yourselves?

Mr. SHERMAN. I have not said the responsibility was on the President. I have said it was on the political organization that was in the majority.

Mr. STONE. I did not say "the President."

Mr. SHERMAN. Perhaps I misunderstood the Senator; and if I did, I will apologize to him; but what political organization has been in control of the House of Representatives since the election of 1910? Let me premise that, though, by saying that all the Navy there is now on salt water was built by the organization that is in the minority now, and it was built over the protest of the then Democratic minority in the House.

Mr. STONE. That is very funny.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am glad to excite the sense of humor of anybody. [Laughter.] Indeed, in times so grave and troublous we need to cultivate something that will excite our risibilities once in a while in order not to become too sober; therefore I am sure that it is a matter of congratulation that it seems, to use the expressive phrase of the Senator, "funny." Let it be so; but the Navy was built over the protest of the minority party when the Republicans had a majority in the other House. That is the record.

The Senator asks the question, what the majority party did before that time? They so conducted themselves as to divide the family and five years ago to put the party of which the Senator is an honored and useful member in power. I ask him what that party did for preparedness in the five years until war was declared? Since that time it has been a case of profound governmental hysteria and not organization.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator has animadverted very severely upon Mr. Creel for his declaration that he thanked God that we were not prepared. Will the Senator permit me to have read from the desk an extract from a speech delivered by the President of the United States at the Jackson Day dinner at Indianapolis on January 8, 1915, touching on that point?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir; I shall be very glad to have the matter read.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask to have the Secretary read the part I have marked. It was only about three years ago that the President gave utterance to those words, so I do not wonder that Mr. Creel perhaps feels as he does about it. He has eminent authority.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The SECRETARY. Reading from page 93 of a work entitled "President Wilson's State Papers and Addresses," published in 1917:

> And what a future it is, my friends! Look abroad upon the troubled world! Only America at peace! Among all the great powers of the world only America saving her power for her own people! Only America using her great character and her great strength in the interests of peace and of prosperity! Do you not think it likely that the world will some time turn to America and say, "You were right and we were wrong. You kept your head when we lost ours. You tried to keep the scale from tipping, and we threw the whole weight of arms in one side of the scale. Now, in your self-possession, in your coolness, in your strength, may we not turn to you for counsel and for assistance?" Think of the deep-wrought destruction of economic resources, of life, and of hope that is taking place in some parts of the world, and think of the reservoir of hope, the reservoir of energy, the reservoir of sustenance that there is in this great land of plenty! May we not look forward to the time when we shall be called blessed among the nations, because we succored the nations of the world in their time of distress and of dismay? I for one pray God that that solemn hour may come, and I know the solidity of character and I know the exaltation of hope. I know the big principle with which the American people will respond to the call of the world for this service. I thank God that those who believe in America, who try to serve her people, are likely to be also what America herself from the first hoped and meant to be—the servant of mankind.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I have no criticisms to make, and shall not have during the pendency of the war, of the Chief Executive of our country. That was a state of mind at that time which all good citizens, at present at least, will regret. It was like the business depression that set in some time after the Senator's party became a majority. It was purely psychological. If your bank account was exhausted, that was psychological, the lack of orders was psychological, and so on, which I do not care to pursue. That is another story. Nevertheless, that was a psychological condition. It was not a natural condition, because the world everywhere outside of our own happy shores was in a very disturbed state. We refused, however, to see beyond the horizon where these conflicts were then in progress; but I think it does, to a very large degree at least, explain the complacent frame of mind in which the Director of Publicity found himself on yesterday, when he faced an audience of lecturers.

The mere fact that any person who censors all the news of the United States should face an audience of lecturers is enough to exhilarate and excite almost anybody, let alone the Director of Publicity. It was a most novel situation and a still more novel audience. Such things are seldom seen. There is the great source of inspiration. If there is any psychology in masses in this country, it comes from the lecturers, from these gentlemen who have cultivated their intellect and who are in a continual state of suppressed information, only waiting for a couple of hundred dollars per night to loose their tremendous knowledge upon a suffering world. I ask the Senator from Missouri to think of the Director of Publicity in that psychological condition. It is no wonder that he broke forth in a pæan of rejoicing and returned thanks to his Maker that he was a pacifist and was proud of it, and that he was glad we were unprepared.

I can not tell whether his rejoicings will continue. That depends upon what the law books call a vis major, a superior power. It depends on how the lines of the allies hold against the Hindenburg drive. If they are broken, and we fight Germany and her allies alone; if we find ourselves pitted on land and sea against a race of hardened and prepared warriors, I ask the Director of Publicity, when he faces at their annual meeting these distinguished providers of mental pabulum for the public, what he will then do when he breaks forth with a pious ejaculation of that kind? Will he again thank God that we were unprepared, when we are fighting single handed, England and France lying broken and humbled at the feet of a powerful foe, with our own coasts bombarded, and possibly our territory invaded? I ask then the proud Doctor of Publicity to rejoice in our unpreparedness—a race of pacifists!

I remember a certain distinguished gentleman west of the Mississippi River, whose habitat has been there for some years, a native of my own State, who at one time opposed a standing army, as he called it, and opposed the plan for a continental army of the only real fighter in the cabinet, a man who had vision for the future—Secretary Garrison—who wanted a continental army of 400,000 men drilled—not turned into a standing army but drilled for emergencies. At that time the great commoner from Nebraska was Secretary of State. His method of preparing for trouble was equal to that of the toper who takes some of Bryan's grape juice as a preliminary to an extended debauch, instead of Peoria whisky. You have got to take some course that—to use the phrase of some of the administration now, at the eleventh hour—has teeth in it. I bid the Senator from Missouri to inspire his party, the political organization of which he is a powerful and influential member, to put forth the gentlemen who had teeth prepared that will make them look for once like the dogs of war unloosed upon the Germans. I want that done. But we find no such encouraging symptom. For four years, or for three years at least—because a year ago we declared war—we slumbered upon the edge of the volcano. The explosion was on across the sea, but we slept in fancied security, with just such gentlemen as the Director of Publicity and others of like kind going about over the country, talking against "the evils of militarism"!

There never was any danger of militarism among the American people, from George Washington's day to this afternoon, but we were told all the time that we did not need to prepare because we were going to remain neutral. We would not fight; we would stay out. I not only remember the Jackson Day speech, but I remember the phrase "Too proud to fight," which I will not attribute to the President, but which I will attribute to the unwise ministers who surrounded him, the keepers of the Chief Executive's conscience, just as the lord chancellor in England is the keeper of the King's conscience. Upon him is visited the punishment. That is the reason I am talking about these responsible ministers of the Executive and not about the Executive. I would not do that.

These men, however, who are in authority are responsible for the fact that we can not bridge the Atlantic Ocean, that we have a pitifully small number of men in France, that even now our resources are not mobilized. It is true that we are reaching forward in the best possible way consistent with the speed required because of the lack of preparation. We are doing the best we can; but at this vital moment, when the interests of the civilized world are hanging in the balance, when the question is whether the Germans shall break through the allies' line or not, I call the attention of the Senator from Missouri for the third time to the fact that we are not yet doing a man's part in that struggle.

I hope, addressing myself reverently to the All-wise Power, that we shall speedily reach the point where we will do our whole part, and do so before it is too late. This is not the only man, either, and that is the reason why I want this bill amended before I ever vote for it, and amended out of its present form. It has been improved to-day by amendments that have been adopted, but it must be amended substantially in other features before it ever ought to become a law. As it passed the House it contained all it ever ought to have contained. That is the limit, and is all that is required in safety. But if we go the limit and pass it—and the majority may do so—if we give to these governors and sheriffs and peace officers of the States some house of refuge to which they can flee in the avoidance of their duty, what will be the result?

I want to tell you, there is dynamite all over the Mississippi Valley. There is dynamite all over central and southern Illinois. There are concealed conditions, only waiting for the spark to explode them. They are not the public enemy. They are not spies. They are not aliens who are engaged in trying to subvert the public authority. They are ones who are incited to violence and disorder. They are ones who are constantly present as a nightmare to these governors who are shouting lustily for help from Congress to avoid doing anything themselves. They are the disturbers of various kinds, I. W. W.'s, chronic loafers, men who would not work whether there was an I. W. W. or not, men who never did work, men who are enemies of any form of organized society, some of these same lecturers, men whose lifetime has been spent in declaiming against any and all governments. There is James Eads Howe, the hobo king, who every once in a while holds a convention in St. Louis or Chicago. I attended one of the conventions. I looked at the assembled multitude. It is a matter of duty to see your constituents from various countries or States. They had a familiar look, and a still more familiar fragrance. They are dynamite all the time. Out of that material mobs are made that are scaring the governors of States. They are present all the time. I sat there a little while. I heard their motions. They believed in a life of perpetual repose, with three meals a day furnished by somebody else. They had an aversion to hard work. Every one of these bronzed, blistered, odoriferous knights of the tomato can avowed himself an enemy of organized society. They are dynamite. Some of them are I. W. W.'s; others are not. How are they useful? They are the best men in the world when a strike is on.

I have analyzed mobs. I have seen some of them resolved into their ultimate constituents. These are the men who hang on the fringe of a mob in Chicago or St. Louis. They are the ones who, in every mob I ever saw, form that tempestuous foe, who, in the absence of organized society backed by a riot gun, burn buildings, slay the defenseless, and destroy law and order in communities. The whole western country is full of them. What they need is a governor with a few companies that are not afraid to shoot, and the first few of them that are put under the sod in 1918 will be not only a happy riddance but a tremendously good object lesson, and this cry for help from the governors will fade away.

What has that to do with the bill? After we pass this bill we will have boards of mediation and conciliation and industrial commissions galore. I could not undertake to describe all of these commissions and boards; but one of them has as a member John H. Walker, president of the Illinois Federation of Labor. Mr. Walker lives at Danville, Ill. Mr. Walker comes to Washington. He invariably takes a high moral stand when here. He wraps about himself Old Glory, and nobody can make a more touching appeal for loyalty and an undivided people in our country than he. He is a part of this administration. At home there is no greater archdisturber in five States up the Mississippi Valley. There is nobody to-day who is as dangerous as he back in the country where he lives, as far as delegated power can make anybody dangerous. I have an article, which I shall read when the issues make it proper, signed by him. There has been a strike on for nearly a year in a town of 75,000 people out there. They are waiting now to start it again—not only the strike in the industry concerned, but a sympathetic strike, including everyone who will go out, and stop everything in that community. Mr. Walker, in this article, calls attention to the fact that that strike will be resumed, and that he proposes to use the same methods that were used before.

After I left this Chamber last fall two of the street cars were dynamited in my own city of Springfield, which is the location of this trouble. They propose to resume that. Of course these men do not dynamite the cars, but these same men who are found in conventions of the kind I describe are the irresponsible agents who go out and put dynamite on the tracks. They are all of the same kind. Before I vote for any stiffer laws of that kind I want an efficient administration of existing laws, and I want men in power here who at home themselves are not hanging over the verge of bloody anarchy 11 months out of the 12 of a year. There is more in men to administer the law than there is in the laws themselves; and I wish to repeat what I said yesterday, that the trouble is that we have not the right kind of men to whom authority is delegated in the execution of the governmental powers that are now needed for the protection of the community in the development of our preparedness.

I decline to be drawn into a political discussion. I will enter upon that on some future occasion, when the issues are proper. I wish to say, however, to the senior Senator from Missouri that I will gratify his curiosity—I will fill him to satiety with information about what his political party has not done for five years since it has been in power.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes.

Mr. STONE. I really think that the Senator from Illinois—whose intense patriotism no man, I think, in all the land will question—and I might agree upon this proposition which I make to him, that we do not engage in any political discussion or any discussion that tends to excite in this great hour of distress partisan feeling or partisan alignment. So I think we might let all of that go.

Mr. SHERMAN. I agree with the Senator, and I shall be very happy indeed if others have the same psychological mental attitude that he has. I wish the Chief Executive had it and many of his responsible ministers. I shall adhere to my determination not to criticize the Executive; but I will say that his ministers, to whom he delegates his power, ought to have instructions to bring themselves into the same nonpartisan frame of mind which always distinguishes the Senator from Missouri, so that we might have a nonpartisan war for the preservation of a nonpartisan democracy. That would be a very happy state of affairs.

I wish to say, with due deference to my genial associate in the Senate, that later on, at the first opportune time, I will apply the acid test to a nonpartisan democracy. I do not wish to do so on this bill. I hope to take it up on the consolidation bill, which will be here immediately after the disposition of this bill, and will be before the Senate until it is disposed of. I wish there to show how essential it is that no partisan feeling shall be aroused under present conditions of the public defense. I wish to show how that very desirable condition has been violated, how a nonpartisan condition is to be created only when votes are needed and when bills and appropriations and all of the necessary paraphernalia of successful war are to be prepared; how, when this is done, there are some intimations that the acid test ought to be applied not to everybody, but to the minority party alone.

I do not want to trench upon that territory, because I shall, as I said, on proper occasion—and I hope at no distant time—go more into detail about this lack of preparation for the last five years. I shall also endeavor to impress upon the Senator from Missouri how essential it is that we apply the acid test to everybody, not simply to a minority but to a majority as well, and how, when it is done, it applies only to the minority party to defeat them and to the majority party to elect them, regardless of how they vote in this body or in the House of Representatives.

I hope the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] to the amendment of the committee will be adopted. I can say quite candidly that if this bill is not amended, not only in that but in some other particulars—pending amendments that are yet undisposed of—however I should like to vote for some of the provisions of the bill, I can not do so. I can not take the chances on it. I intend, so far as I can, to support war measures; but I find myself in the same frame of mind as the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. I would rather defeat every such bill, I would rather meet my constituents and be defeated either for nomination or for election than to destroy the right of free discussion of public questions in this country.

That is the problem involved in this bill. I think it has been very greatly improved this morning; and with the elimination of some other features that are in it I think it will escape the criticism of the junior Senator from Missouri, and will be at least something that will go through without substantial opposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] to the amendment of the committee.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, lines 19 and 20, after the word "disloyal," it is proposed to strike out the words "profane, scurrilous, contemptuous, or abusive."

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is upon the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I offer the following amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, strike out lines 13 and 14 to and including the word "war" and in lieu insert:

Except in good faith to recommend one kind of production for another.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, that amendment comes in connection with this language in the bill, beginning on line 8:

Or shall, by utterance, writing, printing, publication, or language spoken, urge, incite, or advocate any curtailment of production in this country of any thing or things, product or products, necessary or essential to the prosecution of the war in which the United States may be engaged—

Then the amendment of the committee continues—with intent by such curtailment to cripple or hinder the United States in the prosecution of the war.

My amendment leaves the amendment of the committee as it is, but strikes out the words "with intent by such curtailment to cripple or injure the United States in the prosecution of the war" and inserts in lieu of those words "except in good faith to recommend one kind of production for another."

That permits anyone to suggest that a person might cease one form of production and go to another if it is done in good faith. The other day, when I suggested that the language with reference to intent be stricken out, it was suggested that if we did that we might subject innocent parties to prosecution who might suggest to a neighbor a change, for instance, of the production of wheat to the production of barley, or something like that. As I understand the object of the committee, it is to punish those who now, during the war, urge the curtailment of the production of those things that are essential and necessary in the conduct of the war. With that object I am in hearty sympathy, and I do not believe that we ought to permit the encouragement of nonproduction in those articles, whether it is done with the intent to injure the United States or not. The curtailment of these essentials means disaster to the Nation, and anyone urging such curtailment should be punished, even though there be no actual intent to hinder the United States.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator will allow me, I have this situation in mind. I think one of the most important things that ought to be done in the southern part of the country is to do all we can to decrease the production of cotton, which brings a very high price, and raise more foodstuffs.

Cotton is necessarily used in the war. The Senator's language might possibly take care of that, but it does look to me like we ought not to say people can not advise others even to quit farming unless the purpose is to injure the country.

Mr. JONES of Washington. My amendment, I think, covers that, because you would not urge these people to stop production entirely.

Mr. HARDWICK. Oh, no.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If you want to slow down upon the production, for instance, of cotton, and urge them to go into something else, that could be done.

Mr. HARDWICK. And raise a larger percentage of foodstuffs.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; I propose by my amendment, in lieu of the words proposed to be stricken out, to meet a situation just like that.

Mr. HARDWICK. I beg the Senator's pardon, but ought we not to keep it about like the committee has it for this reason, that no matter what one man would advise another, not to produce corn or cotton or wheat or anything else, he has a right to do it unless the thing is intended to hurt the country?

Mr. JONES of Washington. As I take it, the language of this committee amendment, in order to convict anybody under it you must not only advise the curtailment of production but the production of an article which is essential to the conduct of the war, and you must prove that the advice is given with the intent to cripple the United States.

Mr. HARDWICK. Certainly; but, if the Senator will pardon me, the intent like any other intent in anything else can be proven by indirect testimony, by the kind and character of his conduct and his apparent motive as gathered from his words and deeds.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If the amendment left it that way, I would be satisfied. I would rather see those words stricken out entirely and not make it a statutory provision, but allow the court and the jury from the facts proven to determine whether an intent exists such as should be punished. But when we put a positive requirement in the statute as to the intent, it seems to me that it places the burden absolutely upon the prosecution to show the intent by some positive testimony and not by inference. That is what I fear, and I want to call attention to what I have in mind and the situation I want to meet.

I have here some slips, some pasters [exhibiting], that are sent out by an organization in this country not only in war but in peace. They declare it to be one of the fundamental policies of this organization that work should slow up, should be curtailed, and it is not aimed at the Government of the United States in time of war, it is aimed at the industrial condition of things in this country whether in war or in peace. While I would not propose this legislation to be effective in time of peace, I do think suggestions of this kind should be stopped in time of war; they do cripple the United States. But they are not done with a specific intent to cripple the United States. They are simply urged to cripple industries, and the result of it, of course, would be to cripple the United States. But I doubt if this could come within the language of the statute.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Will the Senator state what is on the slips?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am going to call attention to that right now. Here is one of them. It says:

Don't scab—

I have no doubt Senators know what is meant by scabbing, but notice here this is an entirely different suggestion from what we ordinarily understand labor to refer to as scabbing.

Don't scab. Whenever you speed up or work long hours on the job you are scabbing on the unemployed—

"Speed up" is underscored. In other words, you are scabbing when you work energetically in connection with whatever you are doing. That is printed in large red letters, with a background of black—

Join the union of your class. The I. W. W. For information address I. W. W., 1001 West Madison Street, 51, Chicago, Ill., U. S. A.

It is the men at those headquarters whom I want to catch. Many of the hundreds who follow the suggestions are not at heart really bad people. They are simply influenced by these master minds in Chicago. Many of them are loyal at heart, but they are the dupes and tools of men who are criminals and traitors.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Washington. If the Senator will wait just a moment, I want to read another of these just to exemplify what I mean:

Line up. Join the I. W. W. We want no scabs around.

That is, we want nobody who works actively upon the job. We want no one to do a full day's work, because such a man, they say, is scabbing upon the unemployed.

Then here is another one:

Slow down—

In big letters, encircled by red and black—

Slow down. The hours are long, the pay is small, so take your time and buck them all.

Mr. President, as I said, I doubt if that would be met by the language of this amendment. It may be that the committee did not attempt by this amendment to meet a situation like that, but that is a part of the system and the situation in the western country that is causing great trouble with us. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. HARDWICK. I wish to suggest this thought to the Senator because I know he has given the subject very thoughtful consideration. For many years throughout the South we have had organizations of farmers who have endeavored to curtail the production of cotton every year in the interests of a higher price. Even in time of war those organizations by pursuing that propaganda would do the country no harm because we do produce more than we need for ammunition purposes. I wonder if the Senator thinks it would be exactly safe to make it against the law for men to advise farmers, under those circumstances, even where their object was to get a better price for a farm product and even in time of war, if it is for the good of the country. That is why the committee put that language in.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I think we can very safely leave a great many of these suggested situations——

Mr. HARDWICK. But they are actual situations.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I understand that. I think we can leave a great many of those things to the courts and the jury. Under the language that we may put in I do not believe that any jury will convict anybody of conduct like that, if they are satisfied that it was done with entire good faith and without any purpose of injuring the Government or its activities, or of hampering its work or diminishing its efficiency or anything of that sort.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I think the case suggested in the paper just read by the Senator from Washington ought to be met, but there is this difficulty, and I think it will appeal to him at once. It ought not to be a crime really to ask another to do a thing, or not to do a thing, unless it is a crime either to do or not to do the thing. The real harm is the curtailment of production. We have not made it a crime for a farmer to fail to produce everything of which his farm is capable. We have not made it a crime for a manufacturer to fail to produce everything of which his manufactory is capable.

Does the Senator from Washington think we ought to make it a crime for a neighbor to advise the doing or not doing of a certain thing when the act itself or the omission itself is a perfectly innocent thing? I think it is illogical to make the person who gives the advice guilty and leave the person who does the wicked thing free before the law.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It might be well to amend this amendment in that line.

Mr. CUMMINS. I want to ask another question.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Probably we ought not to make it a crime to advise a man not to do a thing positively if we did not make it a crime for the man to refuse to do a thing with the same intent as that which prompted the advice as shown by the facts.

Mr. CUMMINS. There is one difficulty about the Senator's amendment. It does not go to the principle of the amendment at all, but to the expression of his idea. A manufacturer of steel, for instance, looks over the field. Now, steel is necessary for the prosecution of the war. It is one of the things which is just as necessary for the successful prosecution of the war as cotton. But a board of directors sit down and consider how much steel they shall produce, and they come to the conclusion that a certain amount is all that is necessary. I fear that advice of that character, although given in perfect good faith, would become a crime because the thing there is a curtailment of a product that is necessary in the prosecution of the war.

As I remarked yesterday, as zealous as we all are to catch the real criminals in this country, we will imperil the efficient prosecution of these wrongdoers if we bring within the scope of the law a series of acts which are in and of themselves innocent and convict citizens who have no intent to do their country harm.

I really think that the language of the act is sufficient, because I do not know of a single instance where there is a desire to limit production or attempt to limit production in order to do the country harm that this bill will not sufficiently reach. It is not difficult, as the Senator from Georgia says, to prove the intent in the act if the act is one which is of sufficient importance to really hurt the country in the prosecution of the war.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Let me ask the Senator a question: Does he think these proposals which I have read would come within the committee amendment?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not know; I doubt it, for this reason: It may very well be that the people who are responsible for those circulars or those letters have no intent with regard to the war at all. I know that the I. W. W. is a wicked and blasphemous organization not only in war but in peace as well, and it ought to be exterminated. I expect some of that literature is for the purpose of forwarding their peculiar propaganda and has no relation to the war at all.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think the particular placards that I have read were issued to the public before we got into the war.

Mr. CUMMINS. If that be true, then I think Congress in its efforts to forward the country in the prosecution of the war ought to confine itself to the war.

Mr. JONES of Washington. They have also been put up since, as far as that is concerned.

Mr. CUMMINS. We ought not to attempt to usurp or take away the authority of the State to prosecute men for crimes that are not connected with the war, even though the crimes may be committed with reference to some product that is used in the war.

I was very much in sympathy with the rather emphatic way in which the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] expressed himself. We can not altogether take on the duties of the States and endeavor to correct these wrongs which were committed before the war began, and I fear will be committed after the war is at an end.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I sympathize with the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa and with the statement of the Senator from Illinois with reference to the duties of the States and State officials in matters of this kind. But be that as it may, this Nation is carrying on the war. It is a national undertaking, and the activities in lines of industry in the States in many directions are centered upon this great task that the Nation is engaged in.

The condition I have in mind in my State is this: We are doing a great deal in the shipbuilding line, one of the vital agencies and vital necessities of this war, and anything that retards or interferes with the progress of the shipbuilding industry threatens and endangers the success of the Nation in this war. To my mind, anything that the Nation can do to prevent such interference, to prevent such hindrance, it ought to do; and we, as the representatives of the National Government, ought to take every possible step to stop such interference, regardless of action or nonaction by the States.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator from Washington knows that the conditions to which he adverts as prevailing in his own State exist to a greater or less extent in the State of Montana?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. I feel quite sure that the Senator from Iowa is correct in his statement, that under the bill, as it now stands, the circulation of appeals such as those read to the Senate by the Senator from Washington would not be reached. I sympathize fully with the purpose of the Senator from Washington, but I desire to inquire whether, under the amendment which he has proposed, a father would not subject himself to prosecution if he advised an impetuous son who was desirous of putting under cultivation a thousand acres of grain that his means were such that he ought not to venture more than 500 acres?

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; I do not think so, Mr. President.

Mr. WALSH. But the father advises the son to curtail production.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; but there is no jury that would convict him of violating this law under a state of fact like that.

Mr. WALSH. Let me ask the Senator, if a man went to his banker to borrow money with which to put under cultivation a thousand acres of land, and the banker advised him that he believed he ought to content himself with 500 acres in view of his financial ability, if the banker would not subject himself to prosecution?

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; I do not think so. Mr. President, I take a little different view of the situation and the probable effect of this statute than probably do some of the other Senators.

Mr. WALSH. If the Senator will pardon me, I merely meant to suggest to the Senator from Washington, being in entire harmony with his views, that I thought the language of his amendment ought to be modified.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have no doubt as to the sincere purpose of the Senator from Montana to accomplish what I should like to accomplish; there can not be any question about that at all; and his judgment is worth more than mine with reference to this matter, because he is a member of the Judiciary Committee and he has given the matter very great study. I know he would like to meet the situation just as earnestly as I would; but I want to say this, Mr. President, without questioning in the slightest or reflecting upon the integrity or the sincerity of any Senator, that I view this a little bit differently from the way it seems to me a great many other Senators look at it.

We can conjure up all sorts of difficulties that may come to entirely innocent people from the language of the bill when we propose to meet a particular situation; we can conjure up how a man under entirely innocent circumstances and with an innocent intention could be brought within the plain letter probably of the act; but, Mr. President, I am not worrying very much about that situation.

I believe that with the situation as it now is and with the matters that we want to meet by this legislation, juries and courts will very well take care of persons who may be haled into court who have not intended to violate the spirit of the provisions of this proposed act. In my judgment, more innocent men will be mobbed if we frame this law in such a way that it can not be enforced than there will be innocent men convicted under it if we leave its provisions broad and wide.

I have felt that we have already put in a great many exceptions and a great many limitations that the criminal lawyer will take advantage of in the interest of his client, which will practically nullify this law and make it ineffective, so that the Department of Justice will not be able to enforce it or to accomplish anything under it. That is one reason why I want to strike out the provision in the bill which provides that these acts must be done with the intent to cripple or hinder the United States. I do not believe, if it is simply shown that the person indicted tried to encourage by language or writing the curtailment of production by a private party who may be producing things that are really essential in the conduct of this war, that that could be held to prove the intent to injure the United States and to cripple the United States. I believe that you must go further in order to show that intent than to show simply that the person recommended the curtailment of the production of wheat by a farmer on his private account, for instance, even though such wheat might ultimately get into the hands of the United States or the agents of the United States. So I believe that in our intense caution to throw around the accused the safeguard of words, the safeguard of the statute, we are simply placing in the hands of those we want to catch an instrumentality by which they will be acquitted, that we are nullifying the purpose of the law.

As I said a while ago, I have no fear that the innocent man will be convicted of violating this law. It is the man who does the things that are actually injurious to the Government, that are actually detrimental to its cause, and actually weakening its power and its force, who will get the advantage of the various exceptions which we have placed in this act. That is the reason, Mr. President, that I have offered this amendment. I do not want any innocent man convicted under this law, but I want just as few guilty men to escape as possible.

It has been suggested, in connection with this debate, that we need a law of this kind in order to prevent mob outbreaks all over the country. Of course, as the Senator from Tennessee has stated, this law is to be passed to punish the wicked and the criminal. As an incident, however, if it is effective, it will stop the movement toward mob law that is spreading throughout the country, and that is inevitable where nothing is done under the law to punish the violators of the law, or where convictions are not secured.

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] says that we have laws on the statute books now that are not being enforced. I think that is so. It is almost incomprehensible to me, if we have the spies throughout the land that we have heard so much about, that we have not punished any. We have a law to punish spies, but the trouble is that they are not being convicted; they are not being punished; they are not being prosecuted. We do not need any additional law to punish spies. What we need is more energetic prosecution. So a great many of the things which we are trying to prevent by additional law, I am constrained to believe are already covered by existing statutes, but if additional law is necessary I want it passed, because if the condition of things continues as it is now we are going to have a great deal of trouble through the people taking the law into their own hands.

I stated a few days ago that in the town in Washington in which I lived for 25 years or more, just as peaceful a community as there is in the United States and as highly enlightened and law-abiding a community as can be found anywhere, they took the secretary of the I. W. W. organization out about a mile and a half and tarred and feathered him. I noted some comment in the papers that indicated that I justified this course of conduct. I did not; I simply cited it to show what the condition of the public mind is getting to be and to indicate that unless something is done along the line either of the enforcement of existing law or the passage of new law that will provide for the punishment of offenders of this kind in an orderly and legal way, the people are going to take the law into their own hands. I do not like to see that; I want to see things done in an orderly and legal way and punishment meted out to wrongdoers according to law—mob law is lawlessness and breeds lawlessness and is to be unsparingly condemned.

I picked up my paper the other day, and I found from another place in my State this dispatch:

BELLINGHAM, WASH., March 29, 1918.

Ten masked men last night entered the rooming house at Sedro-Woolley, south of here, where J. Dietz, secretary of the I. W. W. local, slept, took Dietz from his room by force, coated him with tar and feathers in a public street, took him to the edge of the town, and told him never to return.

That is simply another manifestation of the intense feeling that is developing in that section of the country; and it grows very largely out of the very things that I have read from these posters. It is a situation that must be met in some way. The local authorities should prevent mobs if possible; that is true; they should prevent the conditions, too, that lead to these mobs; but in this great undertaking of the National Government, the conduct of this war, that involves the very life of the Nation, the liberties of our people, and the prosperity and happiness of future generations, the National Government ought also to do anything and everything that it possibly can do to meet the situation. Where the Nation's cause is endangered we should not wait upon the State. The Nation should act to meet the danger that threatens it.

Mr. President, it may be that the language I have suggested is not the clearest that can be used, and it is possible that, if further consideration be given to it by the committee, they might frame some provision to meet the condition of things that members of the committee admit the proposed amendment does not meet. That condition ought to be met if it is possible for Congress to meet it. If it is possible for us to enact legislation that will prevent the open, public, and notorious urging of workmen in shipyards not to put forth their utmost efforts, if it is possible for us to prevent the open, public, and notorious urging of men in the lumber camps, in the spruce woods, and in every line of activity connected with the strengthening of the National Government to slack, to slow up, to cease doing their utmost, we ought to pass such legislation.

In my judgment, Mr. President, legislation to meet that situation is far more important than legislation to punish men who go around denouncing the Government. Such action does not affect the power of the Government and the strength of the Government; but the man who induces another laborer to work less in the production of ships, to work less in the production of ammunition, to work less in the production of airplanes, and spruce, and all that sort of thing, is doing a real substantial injury and is doing an act that does injure, cripple, and hinder the United States in the prosecution of this war. I have no use for the man who insults the flag. He should be punished, but he does not, in fact, weaken the Nation. The man who slows up work or induces its slowing up does a real, substantial harm.

If any Senator can suggest better language, I would be glad to have the suggestion made. This whole matter, of course, will go to conference; it can be considered very carefully there; and if the committee find that other language can be agreed upon that will meet the situation I am trying to meet, and which apparently the committee has not met, I hope they will take action along that line. Probably the committee may not have had the particular facts and conditions brought to their attention; I do not know; but if they did, I have no doubt that they tried to meet them and probably came to the conclusion that language could not be framed to meet them; but it is such a serious situation and involves so much of concern to the Government that I hope the committee will endeavor to meet that situation. I should like to see in the bill language of the kind I have proposed, or, if it is not deemed wise to put such language in, I hope that the committee, when this bill goes to conference, as it will go to conference on the committee amendments, will try to frame a provision that will meet the situation which I have cited.

Mr. OVERMAN. I wish to say to the Senator that we had this question before us and tried to cover the situation, but if the Senator's amendment is agreed to we will consider it in conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Let the amendment to the amendment be stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. In the amendment proposed by the committee it is proposed to strike out, on page 3, lines 13 and 14, the words "with intent by such curtailment to cripple or hinder the United States in the prosecution of the war" and to insert the words "except in good faith to recommend one kind of production for another."

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I was not in the Chamber when that amendment was offered, and I should like to have it stated once more.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will again state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. In the committee amendment, on page 3, lines 13 and 14, it is proposed to strike out "with intent by such curtailment to cripple or hinder the United States in the prosecution of the war," and to insert "except in good faith to recommend one kind of production for another," so as to read:

> Necessary or essential to the prosecution of the war in which the United States may be engaged, except in good faith to recommend one kind of production for another, and whoever shall willfully—

And so forth.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I try to vote intelligently; I probably fail to do so sometimes; but I should like to understand more definitely than I do now exactly what the amendment contemplates. Does it mean that if a man advises another man not to sow a particular grain, but to sow some other grain, unless he does it in good faith he becomes a criminal? Is that the idea, I will ask the Senator from Washington?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, there is hardly time for me to say just what I mean.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, just in a word.

Mr. JONES of Washington. But I want to say that the exception I make there would except the act that the Senator mentions. If a man advises another to sow barley instead of wheat, he is taken care of by this exception; and that is the reason why that language was put in.

Mr. GALLINGER. What kind of advice would make him amenable to the law?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Why, if he urges the curtailment of the production of things that are essential and necessary to the United States in the conduct of this war, without doing it in good faith and without recommending the production of some other article.

Mr. GALLINGER. The man himself might do that, and it would not be criminal; but if he advised another to do it, it would be criminal?

Mr. JONES of Washington. That was suggested by the Senator from Iowa, and it brought to my mind the idea that the amendment of the committee probably ought to be amended further; but I am taking the amendment of the committee as it is.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the individual perpetrating the deed himself ought to be as amenable to the law as the man who took his advice and committed the act.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That may be possibly true, but that was not the situation I was trying to meet. I have taken the committee amendment as it is. We have a condition of things throughout the country where men are openly and publicly recommending to those who are engaged in certain lines of essential work that they slow up.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think we are somewhat responsible for that ourselves. During the past few years at least a half dozen times we have undertaken to obviate that by requiring men to do their best, but in every instance the Senate has decided otherwise, and concluded that the man of the least efficiency should be the standard for the workers in our plants owned by the Government; and I think we are quite responsible ourselves for establishing that rule.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, may I point out to the Senator from New Hampshire one of the cases which is covered by this amendment which I think would be very unfortunate to be made criminal?

Take a farmer in my State. There is a good deal of discontent there. Many of the farmers think that the Food Administration has not acted in good faith toward them. The farmer has under consideration this question: "Shall I raise next year and fatten 100 steers, or 50?" His neighbor says, looking at everything: "I do not believe that you can sell your cattle, if you raise them, for what they cost you, and I would advise you not to raise more than 50." That advice would be criminal under the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington, although I know he does not intend that anything of that kind should come within the correction that he desires; but that is the difficulty about the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is the impression that it made on my mind when I heard it read. I may be wrong about it. I hope I am.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I just want to say, Mr. President, that I do not think that would be criminal under the amendment; but I am not going to argue that further. I am satisfied that no jury would ever convict any man under the statute on the state of facts disclosed by the Senator from Iowa. It is the men who are going to go free, by reason of the restrictions and limitations and technicalities that we are putting in their hands in this statute, that I am after and that I would like to get.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, about two weeks ago, or perhaps a little more, there was a delegation here of live-stock producers and feeders from Missouri, Kansas, Oklahoma, Iowa, and Illinois. I remember the coming of representatives of this industry from those States, and there may have been representatives from other States in the Central West; I do not remember all who were here. These gentlemen came from a section which, as we all know, is noted for production in live stock—cattle, hogs, and sheep—and noted for the purchase, feeding, fattening, and marketing of such animals for food.

I was one of a number of Senators and Congressmen who went with this delegation to see Mr. Hoover, the head of the Food Administration. At that hearing difficulties of the situation with which these men were confronted were quite fully stated, and very emphatically stated, to the Food Administrator. It was admitted at that hearing that cattle and hogs could not be fed and fattened, at the present prices of grain, at a profit. The question then was, What should be done? The question was, Should the farmers who raise cattle and hogs, or the feeders who fatten them for the market and take them for sale in the market, go forward out of a mere spirit of patriotism and perform these patriotic functions at a loss? The question was, Should these people do this out of patriotism merely; and if not, then what?

There was a suggestion that the price of cattle and hogs and other animal food should be fixed, as the price of wheat was fixed. On the other side came the suggestion that the Government should fix the price of meat foods, or in the alternative reduce the price of feed—that is, the price of the food, the grains, that are used to fatten and prepare live animals for the market. That presented, of course, a very difficult situation, which has not yet, so far as I know, been solved.

Mr. President, I have referred to this merely to accentuate the difficulties of the situation referred to by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] and other Senators. The Senator asked what would happen if a neighbor to some farmer who questioned him about how many cattle or how many hogs he should feed at existing grain prices; whether, in the circumstances, he should attempt to feed 50 or 100, more or less; and if the friend questioned should advise "less," what then? It is impossible for me to think, Mr. President, that under the provisions of any bill that this Congress would pass these two farmers and feeders I speak of—whether two or more—conferring together to get the views of each other with respect to a question of mutual import to them, should by any sort of construction be subjected to prosecution and to the extreme penalties of this proposed law. If I thought that were true—if I believed that the provisions of this bill would subject such men in the case I have stated to arrest, indictment, and prosecution—I could only place upon the measure my absolute and unreserved condemnation. I hope nothing will be put in the bill making such a thing possible.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, like the Senator from Missouri, if I thought the bill or the amendment that I have proposed would do anything of that kind, of course I would oppose it most bitterly; but I am satisfied that neither under the bill as proposed by the committee nor under the amendment proposed by me would any prosecution occur.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, what has troubled me, and what troubles me now, is a case of this kind: There are two farmers, neighbors. I have taken occasion to call attention to a condition that exists in my own section of the country, where grains are so high that it is almost impossible for farmers to keep their stock. It has been stated here, and I suppose is a matter of fact, that the grains that formerly were much cheaper than wheat are now bringing as high a price, and even a higher price, than wheat, and they are much more profitable to raise. Suppose that these two farmers are having a little friendly chat, and the one farmer in the meantime has ceased sowing wheat because he finds he can make more money out of sowing these other grains. He is not, under this provision as I have heard it read, amenable to the law. He has done that of his own volition. But he says to his neighbor, "If I were in your place I would not sow wheat this year. It is more profitable to sow rye or barley or plant corn," and he becomes amenable to the provisions of the bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Oh, no, Mr. President.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is the way I understand it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator is mistaken. He would be expressly excepted by the amendment I have proposed.

Mr. GALLINGER. In case he gave advice?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; advice of that kind. The Senator knows that I would not propose a proposition like that any more than he would, and the language of the amendment that I have proposed expressly excepts the very situation the Senator names.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then whom does it make amenable?

Mr. JONES of Washington. It makes amenable the people who recommend the curtailment of these industries that are essential to the conduct of the war, under the language of the amendment, independent of recommending going into something else, for the purpose really and with the intent to injure and hinder the United States in the conduct of the war. That is what the prosecutor would have to show.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have very little idea that anybody would be convicted under it, but the man in the illustration I use has advised the curtailment of the production of wheat.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; but he has advised going into something else.

Mr. GALLINGER. Something else that is not especially needed under present conditions.

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; some other line of production. That is what the amendment says.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was going to make this suggestion to the Senator: I think it would be better if the Senator would withhold his amendment and take the provision in the bill as it is—the Senator is accustomed to writing statutes—and write a provision that would cover it a little more definitely and completely than his proposed amendment does.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Of course, we have not time; it is desired to get a vote on this amendment, as the Senator knows, and I do not want to delay it, and I just offered a suggestion that I thought might be of some value, at any rate, when the bill got into conference, because it brings out a condition that I called attention to when the Senator had to be away——

Mr. GALLINGER. I was away; yes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That the committee confess that they have not covered, and that it is very desirable to cover.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will not delay it.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator if he does not think, in reality, that the cases he mentioned are covered by the bill as it now stands?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I did not think so, Mr. President, and the Senator from Iowa does not think so, and the Senator from Montana does not think so, so there is a doubt about it, anyway.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let us take the case of these Industrial Workers of the World. They send out literature, such as the Senator has read, to those employed in getting out timber for the ships, or they send out literature to the carpenters employed in the construction of ships for the United States. Now, this reads:

> Whoever * * * shall * * * incite or advocate any curtailment of production in this country of any thing or things, product or products, necessary or essential to the prosecution of the war.

Mr. JONES of Washington. But it does not stop there. If it stopped there, it would be all right, but it does not stop there.

Mr. McCUMBER. What is the point, then?

Mr. JONES of Washington (reading)—

> with intent by such curtailment to cripple or hinder the United States in the prosecution of the war.

There people do not do it for that purpose. They did this in peace. It was part of their propaganda.

Mr. McCUMBER. I understood the argument, but I can not see how it is possible for them to say they did not do it for that purpose, and inasmuch as the natural consequences of their acts would be to lessen the output of the timber necessary for the ships, I can not imagine how any jury would say that they did not intend the logical result of their action. As long as the courts instruct the jury that a man intends the logical consequences of his action, and when he says that to the lumbermen he shall perform only a few days work in the production of that thing which is necessary to carry on the war, it seems to me that this clearly comes within it, notwithstanding the view of the Senator.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish I could agree with the Senator. I hope he is right, but if he is I can see how in the cases suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire the parties might be convicted under the committee amendment by a jury which concluded that they had really curtailed production and drawn the inference or intent therefrom that it was done with the intent to hinder the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] to the amendment.

On a division the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PENROSE. I have an amendment to offer. I desire to offer the following amendment as an additional section to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator does not want to have it read now.

Mr. PENROSE. I should like to have it read.

Mr. OVERMAN. We can not dispose of it to-night.

Mr. PENROSE. I will withhold it until to-morrow morning, if the Senator is going to move a recess or an adjournment.

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to see if I can get a unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. PENROSE. Will the Senator permit it to be read?

Mr. OVERMAN. Certainly.

The Secretary read as follows:

> SEC. —. Any person holding any office or position under the United States by appointment who shall have committed any of the offenses herein enumerated shall upon a conviction therefor, after hearing before the head of the department in which he is serving, be thereupon discharged from such office or position by the said head of such department: Provided, That if charges are preferred that such person has committed any of these offenses, such charges shall be promptly heard by the head of the department.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. PENROSE. I do not consider that the amendment should lie on the table. It is pending before the Senate.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator could not offer it now.

Mr. PENROSE. Why not?

Mr. OVERMAN. Because it is an amendment to the bill.

Mr. PENROSE. I understood that the bill was open to general amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. No; it is not.

Mr. PENROSE. I am misinformed then. I asked one of my colleagues a little while ago whether the bill was open to general amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. We are still on the committee amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is still open to amendment, but the pending question is the committee amendment.

Mr. PENROSE. I was informed otherwise or I would not have offered the amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask that the proposed unanimous-consent agreement which I send to the desk may be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that at not later than 5 o'clock p. m. on the calendar day of Wednesday, April 10, 1918, the Senate will proceed to vote, without further debate, upon any amendment that may be pending, any amendment that may be offered, and upon the bill H. R. 8753, a bill to amend section 3, title 1, of the act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations," etc., through the regular parliamentary stages to its final disposition; and that after the hour of 3 o'clock p. m. on said calendar day no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 10 minutes upon the bill, or more than once or longer than 5 minutes upon any amendment offered thereto.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If it provides a definite time when the vote shall be taken, regardless of whether the amendments have been disposed of or not, I object to it. If it does not, I would have no objection to it. If it does, we would get ourselves into a position we did some time ago in reference to two or three bills, and I practically resolved then that I would not again consent to fix a definite time to vote upon a bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. It is to vote upon any amendment pending.

Mr. HARDWICK. Any amendment pending at that time or offered at that time can be voted on. Of course, the discussion would be closed.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is the point, closing the discussion. I do not think the discussion should be closed until the amendments have been debated.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let it be read again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will again read the proposed agreement.

The Secretary again read the proposed agreement.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am willing to make any agreement to begin debating and voting at any time to-morrow under the 5 or 10 minute rule, and then to continue until the bill is disposed of, but I am not willing to consent to fix a definite time when the bill and all amendments shall be voted on without further discussion. Let us begin at any time with the five-minute rule—at 11 o'clock or 1 o'clock or 2 o'clock.

Mr. OVERMAN. Until the bill is finally disposed of at 5 o'clock. If we meet at 11 o'clock that will give ample time.

Mr. STONE. Is it understood that the Senator from North Carolina desires to take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow?

Mr. OVERMAN. If this agreement is made. That will give ample time for debate.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the proposed unanimous-consent agreement be read as it has been modified, if it has been modified.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand the Senator from Washington wants to begin voting at 5 o'clock and to continue until the bill is finally disposed of.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not want to vote at a certain hour, but to go on with the discussion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not understand that the agreement fixes a time for a final vote and does not therefore understand that it requires a roll call for a quorum. He will submit that matter to the Senate if anyone has any doubt about it. Otherwise the roll will not be called.

Mr. OVERMAN (reading)—

It is agreed by unanimous consent that at not later than the calendar day of Wednesday, April 10, 1918, the Senate will proceed to vote upon the bill (H. R. 8753) to amend section 3, title 1, of the act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations," etc., through the regular parliamentary stages to its final disposition; and that after the hour of 3 o'clock p. m. on said calendar day no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 10 minutes upon the bill, or more than once or longer than 5 minutes upon any amendment offered thereto.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, as to the matter of the necessity of a roll call my mind is not very clear as to what the rule provides. The purpose of that system was to allow Senators to be in the Chamber when an agreement was reached, but if the rule does not require a roll call unless an hour is named——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks it would be well for the Secretary to read the rule so that Senators may be advised just what is prescribed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think that is wise.

The Secretary read paragraph 3 of Rule XII, as follows:

No request by a Senator for unanimous consent for the taking of a final vote on a specified date upon the passage of a bill or joint resolution shall be submitted to the Senate for agreement thereto until, upon a roll call ordered for the purpose by the Presiding Officer, it shall be disclosed that a quorum of the Senate is present; and when a unanimous consent is thus given the same shall operate as the order of the Senate, but any unanimous consent may be revoked by another unanimous consent granted in the manner prescribed above upon one day's notice.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask if this proposed unanimous-consent agreement does not provide that there shall be a vote on a particular calendar day?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands it to be an agreement by unanimous consent to limit the debate. If, however, upon examination that is not correct——

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the Secretary read the first part of the proposed agreement.

The Secretary read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that on the calendar day of Wednesday, April 10, 1918, the Senate will proceed to vote, etc.

Mr. GALLINGER. That seems to fix the time.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator from North Carolina proposes to modify that.

Mr. STONE. There is a quorum present right now and why not call the roll?

Mr. GALLINGER. All right.

Mr. STONE. And not leave that sort of a precedent.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is the only thought I had in raising the question.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Harding	McNary	Smoot
Baird	Hardwick	Martin	Sterling
Bankhead	Henderson	Nelson	Stone
Beckham	Hollis	New	Sutherland
Calder	James	Nugent	Swanson
Chamberlain	Johnson, Cal.	Overman	Thomas
Colt	Jones, N. Mex.	Page	Thompson
Cummins	Jones, Wash.	Penrose	Tillman
Curtis	Kellogg	Phelan	Townsend
Fall	Kendrick	Pittman	Trammell
Fletcher	King	Poindexter	Underwood
France	Kirby	Reed	Vardaman
Frelinghuysen	Knox	Saulsbury	Warren
Gallinger	Lewis	Shafroth	Williams
Gerry	McCumber	Sheppard	Wolcott
Hale	McKellar	Sherman

Mr. McKELLAR. My colleague [Mr. SHIELDS] is unavoidably absent on official business.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to announce that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] is necessarily absent on official business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-three Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The Senator from North Carolina proposes the following unanimous-consent agreement.

The Secretary read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that on the calendar day of Wednesday, April 10, 1918, the Senate will proceed to vote, without further debate, upon any amendmet that may be pending, any amendment that may be offered, and upon the bill H. R. 8753, a bill to amend section 3, title 1, of the act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations," etc., through the regular parliamentary stages to its final disposition; and that after the hour of 3 o'clock p. m. on said calendar day no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 10 minutes upon the bill or more than once or longer than 5 minutes upon any amendment offered thereto.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Do I understand this proposed agreement now is simply a limitation upon debate?

Mr. OVERMAN. That is all it is, an agreement to vote on the calendar day of Wednesday and a limitation upon debate.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I must say that the language is a little peculiar, if that is the intention. Why should there be any reference to a vote at all if upon a certain hour on a certain date you are going to simply limit debate?

Mr. OVERMAN. On that calendar day we vote. It may be midnight before we vote.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Make it the legislative day.

Mr. OVERMAN. Then it might be next Saturday or next Sunday before we would vote.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. If it is simply a limitation upon debate, I am perfectly willing, and have been willing to have that done for some days; but to fix a definite time at which we will come to a vote upon the bill and the amendments——

Mr. OVERMAN. Then let us unanimously agree that after 3 o'clock to-morrow the debate shall be limited to 10 minutes on the bill and 5 minutes on each amendment. I am willing to do that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the agreement as modified.

The Secretary read as follows:

It is agreed, by unanimous consent, that after the hour of 3 o'clock p. m. on Wednesday, April 10, 1918, no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 10 minutes upon the bill (H. R. 8753) to amend section 3, title 1, of the act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations," etc., or more than once or longer than 5 minutes upon any amendment offered thereto.

Mr. PENROSE. I simply desire to make the observation that it is rather unusual to ask for a unanimous-consent agreement before a bill has been reported to the Senate and open to general amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. If there is any objection, let the debate go on.

Mr. PENROSE. I do not want to delay the vote one moment, but I certainly think we ought to have a few hours of unrestricted debate for those Members of this body who desire to offer amendments to the general bill?

Mr. OVERMAN. Does the Senator object?

Mr. PENROSE. I want to expedite the bill, but I assure the Senator that the request is in a very unusual form.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. PENROSE. I intend to object, Mr. President, with the hope the Senator will renew the request after the bill gets into the Senate and has been open for at least a short period to general amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let us vote on the pending amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the Senator from Pennsylvania has just asked that we should have "a few minutes of unrestricted debate" upon this bill.

Mr. PENROSE. That was a stroke of humor, Mr. President, which I hope the Senator from Mississippi will not take seriously.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I did not understand the Senator.

Mr. PENROSE. I say that was a shallow attempt at humor, which I hope the Senator from Mississippi will not take too seriously. I saw him before me when I made the observation, and I knew that "a few minutes" did not apply. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. Before the Senator from Pennsylvania informed me of the fact I knew that it was shallow, but I confess that I did not know it was an attempt at humor. [Laughter.]

Mr. PENROSE. In connection with the vision of the Senator from Mississippi which stood before me, I felt the thing somewhat humorous.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, if I am not only humorous in myself, as Shakespeare said about Jack Falstaff, but the cause of such exceedingly shallow superficial humor in others, including the Senator from Pennsylvania, as he has just exhibited, I should be very sorry for myself. Now I will go on with what I have to say.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think we can vote on the amendment now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi has the floor.

Mr. OVERMAN. I beg pardon of the Senator from Mississippi. I did not know he had taken the floor.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, so much time has been taken up in trying to waste time that I am going to take a little time in trying to expedite legislation.

The Senator from Pennsylvania regretted that we could not have a few hours or "minutes" of "unrestricted debate." We have had upon this bill days of unrestricted debate. The Senate spent 48 hours—and I beg to call the attention of the Senator from Pennsylvania to that fact—trying to make up its mind whether it wanted to put the past participle "calculated" or the past participle "intended" into the bill. The Senate has stood here as a part of the national legislative body criticizing the Executive for inefficiency, and yet this great august body spent 48 hours determining whether the word "intended" or the word "calculated" should appear in this proposed statute; tweedledeeing and tweedleduming—camouflaging—and trying to fool one another, and with the hope ultimately of fooling the American people.

"A few minutes of unrestricted debate!" It is unrestricted debate you have had already, about nothing; whether you should say "intended" or whether you should say "calculated," the only difference in God's world being that "calculated" is objective and "intended" is subjective; and that is a fine psychological point upon which thousands of pages have been written in the metaphysics of the world. We stand here criticizing the Executive for inefficiency, and in the midst of a world war that involves human liberty and world democracy we have wasted 48 hours trying to find out whether we should say "intended" or "calculated." Any man in the world might have gone to Bouvier's Law Dictionary and found out the difference between "intended" and "calculated," if he had been in earnest, if he had been sincere, and if he had been really and truly patriotic.

Do you think that you are fooling the American people? Do you think that the American people do not know the seriousness of the present situation in France and in Flanders? Do you think that we do not know that the Germans are about to break through the lines and may possibly conquer France as they have already conquered Roumania and Serbia and Belgium; that they may possibly fool France as they have already fooled Russia? Do you think that the American people are blind to what is going on in Europe? Do you think they are going to be patient with you for camouflaging and wasting time here?

You have had the opportunity every minute since this bill was reported either to vote it up or vote it down; and it does not make much difference which way you voted it; but you have chosen rather to waste time, talking, fooling, camouflaging, tweedleduming and tweedledeeing, splitting hairs at a time when the whole cause of the liberty of the world is at stake.

Every now and then a Senator gets up and makes a speech as if we were in the very bosom of peace; he talks as if we were passing a statute for peace time. Why, Mr. President, "laws are silent while war is being waged." What will it profit a man to save a technical law point while he loses the liberty of the world, while he loses a place under the sun for democracy? Shall the right of the people to rule perish from the earth just simply in order that august Senators may split hairs upon the difference between "calculated" and "intended"? Who cares a cent which one of the two words you put into the statute? I voted to leave "calculated" in because it happened to be in the bill, but would have voted to leave "intended" if "intended" had been in the bill.

The Senator from Pennsylvania rises in that august, highly physical presentation manner of his and appeals to us for "a few minutes of unrestricted debate," and then afterwards tells us that he "was joking"—joking at this time; joking in this assembly, and joking in this great, august senior member of the Federal legislative body! With the soldiers dying in the trenches, with sabotage loose in the factories, with strikes on hand, while we are building ships and turning out munitions, the Senator from Pennsylvania can find no higher duty than to "joke" with the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. May I interrupt the Senator from Mississippi?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am authorized by the Senator from Pennsylvania to withdraw his objection to the unanimous-consent agreement, unless some other Senator objects.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That being the case, I shall finish with reading a little interview from former Senator Root, and then take my seat.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, if my withdrawal will make the Senator from Mississippi finish, I do it all the more cheerfully. [Laughter.]

Mr. OVERMAN. I suggest to the Senator from Mississippi to insert the interview to which he refers in the RECORD, without reading.

Mr. JAMES. Let the Senator read it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I think that perhaps the Senator from Pennsylvania is again engaged in trying to "joke," and perhaps he may confess later on after he has heard from the American people that his last joke was equally superficial with his first. Now, I am going to read what I had in mind:

Philadelphia, April 8—

This is a quotation from ex-Senator Root, who has been tested by the American people, who has forgotten partisanship, who has joined me in saying that he recognizes no more a Democracy and no more a Republicanism in this country; that he recognizes only two parties, one absolutely, aggressively, and, if necessary, offensively American, and the other either lukewarm or pro-German.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Of course.

Mr. PENROSE. I am curious to know, in view of the lofty sentiments expressed by the Senator from Mississippi, how he explains this statement made in a Washington paper:

The Democratic congressional campaign committee was reorganized for the approaching campaign at a meeting of Democrats of the House and Senate last night. Representative FERRIS, of Oklahoma, was elected chairman, succeeding Representative DOREMUS, who retired. Vice chairmen were elected as follows: Senators SHAFROTH, Colorado; SHIELDS, Tennessee; and THOMPSON, Kansas; and Representatives WEBB, North Carolina; GANDY, South Dakota; BAKER, Colorado; and COX, Indiana. Representative LONERGAN, Connecticut, was chosen secretary——

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator need not read all the names.

Mr. PENROSE. I do not want to omit any of these disinterested, nonpartisan patriots.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well; if it amuses the Senator and he thinks it is interesting, let him read them all.

Mr. PENROSE. The article continues—.

South Trimble, Kentucky, Clerk of the House, assistant secretary—

As will doubtless be recalled, we see his handsome presence here every day—and Joseph J. Sinnott, of Virginia—

Was chosen sergeant at arms of this nonpartisan, patriotic aggregation, and in his leisure moments, when not performing those duties he acts as Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is the Senator through with the names?

Mr. PENROSE. I am through, and I am a little curious to know what explanation the Senator has——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have a very plain one.

Mr. PENROSE. For this sudden nonpartisan activity starting up within the last few days.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, "mark, now, how plain a tale shall put him down." I have no explanation to give of that.

Mr. PENROSE. I did not think you had.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And I have none of the previous Republican congressional and national campaign committee meetings which were summoned in about the same way. I will call the attention of the Senator to the fact that his party took precedence of mine in that respect.

Of course, I have no apology to make for the fact of having been a Democrat, and the Senator has none to make for having been a Republican, but I say at this moment—and I dare him to meet the challenge, and he and his party did not meet it in Wisconsin—that I have thrown Democracy and Republicanism to the wind and behind me; that there is no partisanship of a party character on historic lines in America that binds me any more during this war. I shall vote in the State of Mississippi for any man who has been loyal to the United States Government during this war and before this war against any man who has been disloyal or lukewarm or undetermined or undecided.

Mr. PENROSE. Of course, regardless of color. [Laughter in the galleries.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, well, I yield to the Senator again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will suspend. The Chair announces that any signs of approval or disapproval on the part of the occupants of the gallaries will result in having the gallaries cleared. The Senator from Mississippi will proceed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, were the gallaries cheering me? I did not know that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will proceed in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I never speak to the gallaries, and I never know when they cheer me. Perhaps they were cheering the Senator from Pennsylvania, because of his magnificant physical appearance. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, the other day I made a speech upon this line in this body, and the low, partisan, Republican newspapers represented me as making a partisan speech, when I had made a preeminently nonpartisan speech, inviting every Democrat and every Republican in this country to come up to the mourners' bench to drop partisan politics and to agree that all Republicans should vote against a Republican who was not patriotic in favor of a Democrat who was, and all Democrats to vote against a Democrat who was not patriotic in favor of a Republican who was. Yet your miserable, reptile press of a partisan character—and there is no reptile press except the partisan press, and there is no reptile Democratic press, it is purely Republican—arraigned me for having made a partisan speech. I am the only man who has not made one. If it be partisanship to try to line up the population of America on one side in favor of America, and on the other side lukewarm toward America then I am partisan. If it be partisanship to attempt to array the Democratic or the Republican Party against one another during this war, then I am not partisan.

Before the Senator from Pennsylvania interrupted me I was about to read something that came from ex-Senator Root, ex-Secretary of War Root, ex-Secretary of State Root, in my opinion the best intellect that has stood upon the Republican side of this Chamber during my service in this body, and I will go a little bit further and will say, in my opinion, the best intellect that has stood upon either side of this body during my service in it. Here is what he says:

PHILADELPHIA, April 8.

"We in America have talked so much that it is time to shut up and make things go. It is time we pointed to things done—big things."

These were the words spoken to-day by former Senator Elihu Root in a ringing address at a meeting of the National Security League. He continued:

"We must have two things to win this war. We must exercise moral qualities. The party that will win this war is the one that has the best moral courage and the greatest capacity for sacrifice.

"The second thing we must have is victory in arms against an enemy in arms."

I pause to say that we did not choose to go to this war. Austria chose to go to this war rather than to leave Serbia independent; Serbia chose to go to this war rather than leave herself nationally decapitated; Germany chose to go to this war rather than to let Russia help Serbia assert her independence; Russia chose to go to this war rather than let her little Slav brother be run over, decapitated, and sacrificed; Belgium chose to go to this war rather than to sacrifice here sacred word of honor in a solemn treaty; France chose to go to this war rather than to sacrifice her duty to her ally; England chose to go to this war rather than to sit still while France was made a vassal state and Calais and all the channel ports were made German ports directed at Dover, on the coast of England; she also and more sacredly chose to go to war rather than have Belgium overridden, sacred treaties violated, and the solemn faith of the world treated as a contemptuous thing.

Everybody chose to go to war except us. We never chose to go to war at all. We never declared war. We waited with infinite patience, and sometimes with a degree of patience that looked almost pusillanimous, while Germany was making war on us. She fired on the American flag at the masthead of the Gulflight. She sank the Lusitania with American citizens on board—not only men but women and children, unwarned, unknelled, unsung, and unshriven. She followed it up with the sinking of the Arabic and of the Sussex and of the other ships upon which Americans went down unknelled and unsung, to hell or heaven, whichever was their fate. She purchased, by base money, sabotage in America. She stirred up strife in our factories, and she stirred up all sorts of German propaganda in the German-published press. She put slow bombs upon ships carrying our citizens and our cargoes out upon the high seas. She tried to blow up this very Capitol while she was about it, and luckily succeeded in blowing up nothing except the telephone booth out there. The anniversary that we celebrated the other day was not an anniversary of our declaration of war; it was an anniversary of the time of American realization of the fact that we were already at war with Germany and that we must resent it. That is what Mr. Root means by what he just said.

Now, I will go ahead. Mr. Root says:

The second thing we must have is victory in arms against an enemy in arms. To make physical force felt we must have men, money, ships, airplanes, and guns. Washington is getting these things.

You Senators upon that side of the Chamber, and a few non compos mentis fellows on this side, remember what Root said here:

Washington is getting these things—

Men and arms and munitions.

There must be no divided people, and throughout the land there must be a deep sense of duty and feeling for this great sacrifice of war.

Now, I call your especial attention to this. Elihu Root says this, not I:

I hate to go to Washington, because so many people weep on my breast and bewail that nothing is being done. It is true that some things have not been done. But many great things have been done and are being done.

Those are the words of a patriot, although he is a Republican.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, may I ask my friend—because I have just come into the Chamber—who it is that hates to come to Washington for fear somebody will weep on his breast?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Elihu Root—

I hate to go to Washington, because so many people weep on my breast and bewail that nothing is being done—

Ex-Secretary of War, ex-Secretary of State, and ex-secretary of two or three other things, and a partisan Republican in ordinary times.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I ask that the proposed unanimous-consent agreement be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that the only objection to the unanimous-consent agreement has been withdrawn. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I think we ought to reach the unanimous-consent agreement now, seeing that we have had our usual daily scold.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the unanimous-consent agreement is entered into.

The agreement is as follows:

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT.

It is agreed by unanimous consent that after the hour of 3 o'clock p. m. on April 10, 1918, no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 10 minutes upon the bill H. R. 8753, a bill to amend section 3, title 1, of the act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with foreign relations," etc., or more than once or longer than 5 minutes upon any amendment offered thereto.

RECESS.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m., Tuesday, April 9, 1918) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Wednesday, April 10, 1918, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, April 9, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, receiving with unfeigned love and gratitude all that has come down to us out of the past, which makes for larger life and higher civilization; yet we realize that our work is not done; hence we pray for larger and clearer vision, that we may go forward with firm and unfaltering footsteps, high ideals, and unswerving integrity to the great task which looms before us.

Grant that every citizen of the United States may realize fully the object for which we are engaged in the world-wide war; that a wave of patriotism, unparalleled in history, may sweep throughout the length and breadth of the land; that the men who can fight may rally willingly and gladly to the Stars and Stripes; and that those of us who can not fight may sacrifice our energy and means to support our soldiers and hearten them with a firm resolve, that they will never sheathe the sword of liberty until a peace shall be established, which shall secure to all men life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; in the name of Him, who taught us liberty, truth, justice, righteousness. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman withhold that until we dispose of two resolutions?

Mr. SLOAN. I will.

JOHN E. NICOL.

Mr. PARK. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged resolution, House Resolution 292 (Rept. No. 478), for immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 292.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, to John E. Nicol, clerk to John H. Capstick, a Representative from the State of New Jersey at the time of his death, March 17, 1918, the sum of $166.66, being an amount equal to one month's salary of a clerk of a Representative in Congress.

Mr. PARK. That, Mr. Speaker, is the usual resolution.

The resolution was considered and agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on April 8, 1918, approved and signed bills of the following titles:

H. R. 2617. An act to ratify the compact and agreement between the States of Oregon and Washington regarding concurrent jurisdiction over the waters of the Columbia River and its tributaries in connection with regulating, protecting, and preserving fish; and

H. R. 10365. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Forsyth special road district of Taney County, Mo., to construct a bridge across White River, at Forsyth, Mo.

W. H. ANTHONY.

Mr. PARK. Mr. Speaker, I present another privileged resolution, House resolution 294 (Rept. No. 477).

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 294.

Resolved, That the Clerk be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, to Gardner Anthony, son of W. H. Anthony, late an employee on the roll of the House, a sum equal to six months' compensation as a messenger to Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and an additional amount, not exceeding $250, to defray the funeral expenses of said W. H. Anthony.

The following committee amendment was read:

Amend by striking out all after the word "House" in line 2, and adding the following: "an amount not exceeding $250 to defray funeral expenses of W. H. Anthony, late an employee on the roll of the House."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN] makes the point of order that no quorum is present.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman withhold that for a moment?

Mr. SLOAN. I will.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the pending oil and coal leasing bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the oil and coal leasing bill. Is there objection?

Mr. BARNHART. Reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire of the gentleman if they are his own remarks?

Mr. MONDELL. My own remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. TOWNER, by unanimous consent, was given leave of absence for eight days on account of the liberty-loan campaign.

CALL OF THE HOUSE.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska makes the point that no quorum is present, and evidently there is not.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina moves a call of the House.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FOSTER) there were—ayes 69, noes 2.

So a call of the House was ordered.

The Doorkeeper was ordered to close the doors and the Sergeant at Arms to notify the absentees.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Beshlin	Flynn	Kelly, Pa.	Ragsdale
Borland	Foss	Kettner	Rankin
Brumbaugh	Fuller, Ill.	Kless, Pa.	Riordan

Fields	Kelley, Mich.	Powers

The SPEAKER. On this vote 317 Members, a quorum, have answered to their names.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were opened.

COMMUTATION TO COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

The SPEAKER. When the House adjourned last night it was considering the bill (S. 3863) to provide quarters or commutation thereof to commissioned officers in certain cases.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I thought that the unanimous-consent agreement that I obtained called for a vote upon this bill immediately after the reading of the Journal, but to save any question I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

S. 3863. An act to provide quarters or commutation thereof to commissioned officers in certain cases.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments, except the Haskell amendment.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the Haskell amendment.

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DILL. May we have the amendment again reported?

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the Haskell amendment.

There was no objection, and the Clerk read as follows:

On page 1, line 6, after the words "United States," strike out the words "who maintain a place of abode for a wife, child, or dependent parent," and after the word "furnished," in line 7, strike out the words "at the place where he maintains such a place of abode, without regard to personal quarters furnished him elsewhere," and after the word "sixty-nine," in line 12, on page 1, strike out the words "to be occupied by, and only so long as occupied by, said wife, child, or dependent parent."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Haskell amendment.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 140, nays 175, answered "present" 3, not voting 113, as follows:

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, I voted "yea." I have a pair with Mr. TALBOTT, of Maryland. I wish to withdraw my vote and be recorded present.

The name of Mr. BROWNING was called, and he answered "Present."

The result of the vote was announced, as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin demands a division.

The House again divided; and there were—ayes 177, noes 23.

So the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. DENT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 2316. An act to promote export trade, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 9314. An act making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919.

TO INCREASE THE MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I ask to call up the bill H. R. 9932, which is on the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9932) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States."

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May 18, 1917, be amended as follows:

In section 2, page 3, line 12, after the word "person," strike out the words "not alien enemies," and after the word "citizens" add the words "except alien enemies or citizens or subjects of countries not at war with a country or countries with which the United States is at war," so as to make the paragraph read as follows:

"Such draft as herein provided shall be based upon liability to military service of all male citizens, or male persons who have declared their intention to become citizens, except alien enemies or citizens or subjects of countries not at war with a country or countries with which the United States is at war, between the ages of 21 and 30 years, both inclusive, and shall take place and be maintained under such regulations as the President may prescribe, not inconsistent with the terms of this act."

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That section 2 of the act entitled 'An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States,' approved May 18, 1917, be, and the same hereby is, amended so that it shall read as follows:

"'SEC. 2. That the enlisted men required to raise and maintain the organizations of the Regular Army and to complete and maintain the organizations embodying the members of the National Guard drafted into the service of the United States, at the maximum legal strength as by this act provided, shall be raised by voluntary enlistment, or if and whenever the President decides that they can not effectually be so raised or maintained, then by selective draft; and all other forces hereby authorized, except as provided in the seventh paragraph of section 1, shall be raised and maintained by selective draft exclusively; but this provision shall not prevent the transfer of any force of training cadres from other forces.

"'Such draft as herein provided shall be based upon liability to military service of all male citizens, or male persons who have declared their intention to become citizens except alien enemies or citizens or subjects of countries not at war with a country or countries with which the United States is at war, between the ages of 21 and 30 years, both inclusive, and shall take place and be maintained under such regulations as the President may prescribe, not inconsistent with the terms of this act.

"'Quotas for the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, or subdivisions thereof, shall be determined in proportion to the population thereof, and credit shall be given to any State, Territory, District, or subdivision thereof, for the number of men who were in the military service of the United States as members of the National Guard on April 1, 1917, or who have since said date entered the military service of the United States from any such State, Territory, District, or subdivision, either as members of the Regular Army or the National Guard. All persons drafted into the service of the United States and all officers accepting commissions in the forces herein provided for shall, from the date of said draft or acceptance, be subject to the laws and regulations governing the Regular Army, except as to promotions, so far as such laws and regulations are applicable to persons whose permanent retention in the military service on the active or retired list is not contemplated by existing law, and those drafted shall be required to serve for the period of the existing emergency unless sooner discharged: Provided, That the President is authorized to raise and maintain by voluntary enlistment or draft, as herein provided, special and technical troops as he may deem necessary, and to embody them into organizations and to officer them as provided in the third paragraph of section 1 and section 9 of this act. Organizations of the forces herein provided for, except the Regular Army and the divisions authorized in the seventh paragraph of section 1, shall as far as the interests of the service permit, be composed of men who come and of officers who are appointed from the same State or locality.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, the object of this bill is to amend that portion of the selective-draft law of May 18 which made declarants of foreign countries subject to the draft. The amendment will only apply to those citizens of foreign countries who are neutrals in this war. The State Department has had a great deal of trouble on account of the fact that Congress in that law made mere declarants, who, according to all the rules of law, are not citizens of the country in which they have declared their intention, liable to the draft. I would like to give just one concrete case which I think will explain the whole proposition in a nutshell. This case came to my personal observation within the last 10 days. There was a subject of Turkey living in my home town, and, as we all know, there is no declaration of war between this country and Turkey. He was drafted in the first draft.

The Spanish ambassador, representing the Turkish Government, called upon the State Department for his release, and the President ordered him discharged from the Army. Only recently that same citizen of Turkey was caught in the second draft, and the draft board held that under the act of May 18, which made him liable to the draft, that they had no discretion, and the only way he could be released would be by an order of the President as Commander in Chief of the Army to discharge him. Now, the President of the United States wants to be relieved from that embarrassment. The Secretary of State wrote a letter to the committee recently urging the passage of this bill at as early a date as possible, so as to relieve the subjects of the Scandinavian and Central and South American countries and all other countries with whom we have treaties expressly providing that a declarant shall not be subject to military service. I desire now to read a letter from the President of the United States:

MARCH 8, 1918.

MY DEAR MR. DENT: I am taking the liberty of writing to say how deeply I am interested in the amendment to the selective-service act of May 18, 1917, which seeks to except from the operation of the act the citizens and subjects of neutral countries who have declared their purpose to become citizens of the United States.

Whatever the general merits of the question, if we could consider ourselves absolutely free with regard to it, we are unfortunately not free but are bound by definite treaty obligations, which I should deem to take precedence of our temporary convenience, and I hope very much that it will seem best to the committee to report the amendment and to the House to adopt it. It is a matter that touches our honor as a Nation, and I am sure will be dealt with as such.

Cordially and sincerely, yours,

WOODROW WILSON.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. I will.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Has the gentleman any information as to the status of Finnish first-paper declarants in the United States under this bill as amended? I want to say I am in sympathy with the bill, but what will be the position of a man from Finland?

Mr. DENT. A man from Finland would not be from a neutral country, I imagine.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That is the question. I want to state, if the gentleman will allow me to take one or two minutes of the time at his disposal——

Mr. BRITTEN. Why would not Finland be considered as a neutral country?

Mr. DENT. Because that is a part of the Russian Government, who at least were cobelligerents. However, this is a matter for the State Department.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I think it will be found to be a close question and open to future dispute. I am in favor of this bill, of course. I favor carrying out all the provisions of all the treaties of the United States all the time. I recall that when the House was hearing read the proposed amendments at the last moment before passing the draft act there was some confusion. A great many amendments were sent to the desk and no opportunity given for discussion of them, the time having been limited by rule. One amendment of the many offered—I think it was proposed by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCCLINTIC]—undertook to remedy this situation, would have prevented the mistake. Under the circumstances the House could not hear an argument or really consider it. Since then the position of men from neutral countries—Norway, Sweden, and so forth—in the western country has made much confusion. At the present time in the town from which I come a Finnish missionary, a minister, is in jail charged with treason. He has been going all through the far Northwest speaking in the Finnish and possibly some other languages, in the foreign-language churches, saying to those Finnish, Danish, and other north-country people that if they had first-paper sons in the new Army of the United States he could get them out, and for a fee of about $20, which he claimed it would cost, he would proceed to do that. Of course, he stretched his statements and offended many good, patriotic Finnish and Swedish citizens by crying out, "Why are these boys in the Army? They have no right to be there," and so on. No one knows how much else of that kind of misleading stuff he has been talking.

Mr. DENT. That is one of the main reasons for the passage of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Certainly. The missionary is in jail, charged with treason, and a bond is asked for $10,000, which he can not get. It is an unfortunate situation, and I am glad the gentleman is pressing the bill. I thank him for his time.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield me five minutes of his time?

Mr. DENT. I will.

Mr. BURNETT. That bill that was passed, the draft bill, was in clear violation of a treaty with neutral countries, was it not?

Mr. DENT. It was.

Mr. BURNETT. Did not the State Department and these gentlemen on the Committee on Foreign Affairs, or the War Department, call that to the attention of the Committee on Military Affairs when they were considering it, and insist that they ought not to violate the treaties?

Mr. DENT. No. I will state to my colleague from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] that nobody called our attention to that, not even any Member of Congress, when we were debating that bill on the floor. That seemed to have been overlooked entirely by everybody.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. It came up at the last moment, as I stated, but too late to get time for debate. I tried to get time. The correction now is in itself an object lesson against a limitation of time when serious amendments are being offered, and an argument against the plan, occasionally used, of piling up at the Clerk's desk amendments en bloc, only to have them shouted down.

Mr. BURNETT. Was it not stated by representatives of the War Department that that could be done before the committee?

Mr. DENT. That the declarants——

Mr. BURNETT. Could be conscripted?

Mr. DENT. No; the gentleman is mistaken about it.

Mr. BURNETT. That bill was prepared by the War Department?

Mr. DENT. The draft bill was prepared by the War Department. There is no question about that.

Mr. BURNETT. And no question raised about violation of treaties then?

Mr. DENT. No.

Mr. BURNETT. That came up on the alien-slacker bill.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH].

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand an article that appeared in last night's Washington Evening Star, containing an account of a speech made before the National Conference of American Lecturers at Memorial Continental Hall by Mr. George Creel, chairman of the Committee on Public Information. I shall read only one sentence from that speech, and to that I ask gentlemen of the House to give attention. Mr. Creel said:

> I will be proud to my dying day that my country was inadequately prepared when it entered the conflict; to have been prepared would have given the lie to everything we ourselves believed in and to our self-avowed position before the world.

I ask you to let this phrase sink into your minds for a moment, gentlemen—"I will be proud to my dying day that my country was inadequately prepared when it entered the conflict." My colleagues, I never thought the day would come when a man who calls himself an American citizen, much less one who holds a position of high importance in this Government, would publicly proclaim such sentiments as that.

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will yield to my colleague.

Mr. SLOAN. Who was it said that damnable thing?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Creel, chairman of the Committee on Public Information. I know of no instance up to now, with possibly one or two exceptions, when even the most craven pacifist ever went half so far. I have heard men since this war began apologize for our failure to prepare in some substantial degree for the inevitable. I have heard some men condone this failure as a political necessity, but never before have I heard an American boast of it and glory in it.

That is fine news, my colleagues, to send to our boys at the front. That is a message which will cheer the hearts of our brave allies. Gen. Foch, in supreme command of all the allied forces, no doubt will delight and glory with Mr. Creel upon the fact that America entered this war entirely unprepared. The brave Belgian king; Gen. Joffre, who months ago came to us and begged for men and cannon; Gen. Haig; the generals commanding the Italian armies, will, of course, join Mr. Creel in his patriotic delight that this country is in the least possible degree able to render efficient assistance to the allies in this greatest emergency the world ever saw. And it is an emergency of to-day, my colleagues; it is the emergency of this particular drive that is now going on about Amiens, and not of something that may happen in the far distant future.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will.

Mr. DENISON. Does not the gentleman think that Von Hindenberg would also appreciate that sentiment?

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] has anticipated me in the enunciation of that precise statement. The only individuals abroad to whom such a message will bring cheer are the commanders of the armies of the central powers. The only men at home to whom it will bring cheer are those that wish ill to America. [Applause.] The only men that have a right to rejoice in the fact that America entered this war unprepared are the Kaiser and the Emperor Charles and Von Hindenberg and Ludendorff and all their murderous crew.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LONGWORTH. May I have about three minutes more?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I ask that the gentleman have five minutes more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] controls the time.

Mr. DENT. I would like to ask the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] if he desires to yield some of the time?

Mr. KAHN. I will be glad to yield five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I do not think there is one man on the floor of this House that will take exception to a word that I have said or will say upon this subject. I surely hope not.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I did not hear the opening words of the gentleman's statement. On what occasion was this astonishing statement made?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will repeat to the gentleman. It was made yesterday at some time before the National Conference of American Lecturers, by Mr. Creel, the chairman of the Bureau of Public Information.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Will the gentleman kindly state the purpose for which these men are here gathered?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I am not sure just what was the purpose of the gathering. I suppose it was for the purpose of promoting the issue of liberty bonds to help fight this war.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Is it not the purpose to prepare lecturers for the Chautauqua during the summer for war work?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I would assume that it was for a patriotic purpose. I was informed that Lord Reading delivered a speech in the afternoon at that conference, advocating the buying of liberty bonds for the purpose of rendering effective aid to the allies.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. If the conference is gathered here for the purpose of preparing lecturers for war work for the future, I suppose this will be taken as a caption of all the speeches that will be made—"Unpreparedness."

Mr. LONGWORTH. I sincerely hope that there is no such ulterior motive behind this. There may be. But whether there is or not, I say that no more unpatriotic, un-American sentiment has ever been uttered by any American citizen since this war began.

I repeat that the only men who have the right to glory and delight in our failure to be at all prepared for this war are the Kaisers and the Hindenbergs and Ludendorffs abroad and the I. W. W.'s and the Bolsheviki at home. [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I yield.

Mr. SABATH. I heard the gentleman read a part of the sentence. Will the gentleman be kind enough to read the entire sentence and the article?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I read the entire sentence, and if the gentleman likes, I will have the entire article published in the RECORD.

Mr. SABATH. I think, in justice to himself and to the House as well, the entire article ought to go in.

Mr. LONGWORTH. This is the first sentence in the article quoting Mr. Creel's address. It is the caption and underlying theme of the whole discussion.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] has just said that the gentleman from Ohio had read only a part of the sentence.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I read the entire sentence. I repeat it. I have repeated it several times; I will publish this sentence and the whole speech in the RECORD.

I say, gentlemen of the House, that this was a peculiarly sinister speech, a peculiarly sinister utterance, to go forth at such a time as this, this attack upon the principle for which our late colleague, Gus Gardner, a short time ago laid down his life.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois. Who censored this article that you are speaking about, if you know? [Laughter.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. I hope before I conclude my remarks to make clear to the House that a very efficient censorship should be placed hereafter upon any utterance of this gentleman and that future utterances on his part should come from him in a private capacity. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. This speech should receive the attention of those in high authority, my colleagues.

Mr. MADDEN. If he uttered this in his private capacity as a citizen of the United States, he might have been arrested, might he not?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I think very probably. He ought to have been. [Applause.] What Mr. Creel may think as Mr. Creel is a matter of no sort of importance, but what he says in public in his capacity as chairman of the Committee on Public Information is of the highest importance, because the American people have the right to presume that he represents the views of those higher up.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has again expired.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Can I have two minutes more? I have been greatly interrupted, as gentlemen will realize.

Mr. KAHN. I have not the control of the time.

Mr. DENT. I will be glad to divide the time.

Mr. KAHN. I would certainly yield to the gentleman two minutes.

Mr. DENT. I do that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for two minutes more.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is it the view of those in high authority that it is a just cause for boasting that America went into this war inadequately prepared, with the necessary corollary that on the day this war is over we must at once reduce ourselves to a condition where we shall be impotent to enforce a just and lasting peace?

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. If that is not the view of those in high authority, then Mr. Creel should resign or be removed at once. [Applause.]

Mr. DENT. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. DENT. Does the gentleman himself admit that we were totally unprepared?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I do not admit that we were totally unprepared. I admit that we were grossly unprepared, at least inadequately prepared, and for this the committee of which the gentleman is chairman is not without blame.

Mr. DENT. Will the gentleman place the responsibility for that at any particular point?

Mr. LONGWORTH. No; but that is not the object of my speech. The object of my speech is to show that an official has gloried in the fact that we were unprepared; in fact, that the more unprepared the better.

Mr. MADDEN. And the gentleman from Ohio, while admitting that we were unprepared, is not willing to admit that he is proud of it?

Mr. LONGWORTH. No. On the contrary, it gives me feelings only of sadness and shame.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Perhaps the gentleman took his cue from the celebrated address made in this House, when men who were advocating preparedness were told not to be nervous or hysterical?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Well, if the gentleman from Vermont is alluding to what I think he is, the same gentleman, who made that address, the other day made a fine appeal to the American people for force, force, force, and yet only two days afterwards the chairman of the Committee on Public Information advocates weakness, flabbiness, cowardice! [Applause.]

I append hereto the entire speech of Mr. Creel as reported in the Star:

PART OF UNITED STATES IN WAR—MR. CREEL'S THEME—MAKES OPTIMISTIC ADDRESS BEFORE AMERICAN LECTURERS REGARDING FUTURE OPERATIONS—CITES WORK ALREADY DONE.

A most optimistic message concerning America's future progress in preparing for her great rôle in the world drama was given by George Creel, chairman of the Committee on Public Information, speaking this morning before the opening session of the National Conference of American Lecturers at Memorial Continental Hall.

He received round after round of applause from the delegates when he told either of something that has been done or that will be done.

Mr. Creel was the only speaker this morning, former Ambassador Gerard, who was scheduled to appear, being in Indiana, where he will remain until the end of the week, and Bainbridge Colby, of the Shipping Board, an "added starter," having been detained by a conference with Secretary McAdoo.

MR. CREEL'S ADDRESS.

"I will be proud to my dying day that my country was inadequately prepared when it entered the conflict," declared Mr. Creel. "To have been prepared would have given the lie to everything we ourselves believed in and to our self-avowed position before the world."

How far and how fast the country has gone since it started, he emphasized, is indicated by the fact that to-day, a year after our unprepared entrance into the conflict, a portion of our Army, created since that time, is bearing its full burden, notwithstanding the fact that European nations far more versed in war do not habitually give their men battle-front work before a year's training has expired.

"The liberty motor is to-day 100 per cent perfect, and within a week its critics will have to admit this fact," he asserted. The aerial program, he added, will be announced to the country within 30 days, and will be a credit to this great Nation. He paid his respects to those who constantly demand 100,000 airships, explaining that 2,500 on one side has been the maximum so far.

COUNTRY OWES APOLOGY, HE SAYS.

The whole Nation owes Secretary Daniels an apology for its undeserved vilification of that official, Mr. Creel told his hearers. Furthermore, the vast war expenditures have been made without one cent of graft nor has a single life been lost by neglect, he asserted.

"What if a few overcoats were lacking at first?" he said. "Food has nowhere and at no time been lacking. We can all remember the typhoid camps, the 'embalmed beef,' and the paper-soled shoes of 1898!"

Mr. Creel took up in detail the criticisms that have been made regarding the early lack of rifles for troops, the use of French machine guns while the Browning gun was being perfected, and the use of British and French made ordnance, which he said was done at the suggestion and request of those Governments in order that they might keep their factories running, and that the American transports might not be incumbered with cannon. England and France had more artillery than they could use, and had the facilities to make more, he said. They preferred to keep on making them and have the benefit of the money the United States paid for them. They were really our guns, he explained, and not those of the allies.

IMPROVED RIFLE SUPPLIED.

"We could have put a rifle in the hands of every soldier from the beginning," he remarked. "Those who criticized the equipment of some of the men with broomsticks while better rifles than any we were making for our allies were being perfected were not trying to win this war, but another kind of war at a later date. Now we have a rifle that can shoot two bullets to the German Mauser's one!"

Mr. DENT. Does the gentleman from California wish to use some time?

Mr. KAHN. Just a few minutes.

Mr. DENT. How much time does the gentleman wish to use?

Mr. KAHN. Five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, the State Department and the War Department have both joined in asking for this legislation; and I ask permission to extend my remarks by inserting a letter from the Secretary of State to the Committee on Military Affairs about this matter.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KAHN. This country in its indictment of Germany points out that the Imperial Government of that country has failed to keep its treaty obligations. The people of Germany might, under existing conditions, come back at us and say, "You are violating your treaty obligations." And I take it that there is no Member of this House that wants such a condition to continue.

The number of men that will be affected by this change in the law will be exceedingly few. Thirty thousand in all is the estimate of the Secretary of State and the Secretary of War. Of those, 15,000 are inhabitants, or citizens rather, of our neighbor Republic, Mexico. About 40 per cent of the others are citizens of the Scandinavian countries, so that all told there will be about 9,000 men in this country who will be affected by this legislation.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Is the bill intended to relieve from military service all those who were drafted into the service after having declared their intention to become citizens?

Mr. KAHN. Yes; and I may say to the gentleman that the diplomatic representatives of the nationals who had not become citizens, but simply declared their intention, have gone to our State Department frequently, and have protested against the taking of their nationals into our armies by draft.

Mr. MADDEN. The enactment of this law then would, as a matter of course, without any further formality, relieve all men who are in the Army who have simply declared their intention to become citizens.

Mr. KAHN. If they desire to be relieved. If they make no objection to going into our Army, they can still continue there.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. They come in under a new form, do they not, on reapplication?

Mr. KAHN. Oh, no; they will just continue in the organizations to which they have been assigned.

Mr. MADDEN. Would a man who has declared his intention to become a citizen, who is in the Army and who objects to remaining there, be required to obtain through his own government, or through some other foreign agency, an application for relief?

Mr. KAHN. He would probably be required to appeal to the representative of his government; but if he has seriously objected to continuing in the Army in the past, and has appealed to his representative for release, the President of the United States, as Commander in Chief of the Army, has ordered his release.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; I know that has been done in a great many instances.

Mr. KAHN. Exactly.

Mr. MADDEN. But I know some cases where objection is made to remaining in the military service of this country by men who have declared their intention. Would this give them the right of direct appeal for discharge?

Mr. KAHN. I think it would. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Before the gentleman yields back his time, will he answer a question, please?

Mr. KAHN. Yes; if I can.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KAHN. I ask for another minute to answer the question of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DENT. I yield a minute to the gentleman.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. On page 3, beginning with line 4, the act is made to apply to all persons who have declared their intention. Then follow later the exceptions—alien enemies, or citizens or subjects of countries not at war with a country or countries with which the United States is at war.

Mr. KAHN. That is the amendment. That is the change in the bill that is proposed.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Is it the intention of that amendment to make the draft law apply to nations who would be our allies in the war?

Mr. KAHN. No.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Because this language would seem to do that.

Mr. KAHN. No; that is not the intention. I want to say to the gentleman that treaties have been entered into with countries that are our cobelligerents, and I believe those treaties have been pending in the Senate. They will take care of that situation.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. I know, but this language makes the draft law apply to those declarants who are citizens of our allies. Is that the intention of this bill?

Mr. KAHN. Perhaps it does.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. Why should it be? Why should we draft the men who are citizens of our allied countries and not draft the others?

Mr. KAHN. They do not object, as I understand it.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania. I know, but if the principle is right, why should not the declarants be exempted in all cases?

Mr. KAHN. Well, in this war the various countries that are fighting together will, in my opinion, have to furnish many more millions of men than have been furnished thus far.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. Is it not the purpose of this legislation to deal more particularly with the subjects of neutral nations who have come into our country and declared their intention, and in no way to involve the declarants of our cobelligerents?

Mr. KAHN. That was the intention altogether. The treaties with the neutral nations, or at least some of the treaties with neutral nations provided specifically that we should not take their nationals into our Army, even though they might have declared their intention to become citizens of this country. It was not intended to affect the cobelligerent nations. They are being taken care of through treaties that have been negotiated with those countries.

Mr. DENT. And this is the only way, by legislation, that we can take care of the subjects of neutrals?

Mr. KAHN. Exactly.

Mr. DENT. By treaty with others, and by legislation with these?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. Did not the House recently pass an alien-slacker bill, which dealt with the nationals of cobelligerent countries?

Mr. KAHN. I think it did.

Mr. DENISON. What has become of that bill?

Mr. KAHN. It went over to the Senate.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If the gentleman will permit me, it is awaiting the perfecting of some treaties, to prevent further violations of treaties such as we have had in the case of some of nationals of the neutral countries.

Mr. BURNETT. If the gentleman will permit me, the treaties are not pending in the Senate. They have been withdrawn. That is what the chairman of the Senate committee told me last Saturday, that they have been withdrawn for some amendments and will be back in a week or 10 days, and the alien-slacker bill is waiting on them.

Mr. KAHN. I can readily understand how some condition may be overlooked even in a treaty, and that it may be advisable to withdraw the treaty for the time being in order that the scope of the treaty may be enlarged, to cover new cases that have arisen since the original treaty was entered into.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Just as this bill and the alien-slacker bill leave certain nationals in this country neither fish, flesh, nor good red herring. I have yet to learn the status of the unnaturalized Finnish people in the United States. If their position can not be clearly defined they should be unnecessarily abused.

Mr. KAHN. In this war it is exceedingly desirous that we clear our skirts, and that we do not put it into the mouths of the autocrats in Germany to say that we have violated our sacred treaty obligations.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KAHN. The letter from the Secretary of State to the chairman of the House Committee on Military Affairs concerning this legislation is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, February 14, 1918.

Hon. S. HUBERT DENT, Jr.,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs, House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. DENT: I inclose a draft of a proposed bill to amend the selective-service act of May 18, 1917, so as to exempt from its operation citizens or subjects of neutral countries who have declared their intention to become citizens of the United States. The proposed bill has been prepared by the War Department in conjunction with the Department of State. The two departments are strongly of the opinion that, from the standpoint of international relations, it is highly undesirable that the existing law should stand, unmodified, as evidence of a disregard of treaty obligations or even of a supposed rule of international conduct heretofore observed by other governments.

In this relation I desire to make the following observations:

As you are aware, all aliens (except alien enemies) who had declared their intention to become American citizens were, by the selective-service act, made liable to military service in the same manner as citizens of the United States. The act contained no provision preserving the treaty stipulations by which this Government had become obligated to exempt the nationals of Argentina, Costa Rica, Honduras, Italy, Japan, Paraguay, Serbia, Spain, and Switzerland from military service in the United States. It made the declaration of intention the determining factor of such liability, although this Government is a party to several treaties which specifically stipulate that the declaration of intention shall not, of itself, affect in any way the nationality of the declarant. And it is, as you know, the rule of law in the United States, supported by decisions of the United States Supreme Court, that a declaration of intention does not confer American citizenship upon the declarant or release him from his prior allegiance. Apparently there has never been any intention on the part of the Government to regard such persons, generally, otherwise than as aliens. It was not to be unexpected, therefore, that the department should receive numerous and insistent requests from the diplomatic representatives of neutral countries for the discharge of their nationals who had been conscripted. In some cases such requests were based upon our treaty stipulations to exempt the aliens in question from military service, which obligation seemingly must be regarded as having been violated by the selective-service act.

In other cases requests, little less insistent, were based on the asserted practice of nations to exempt from military service in international conflicts resident nationals of foreign countries. In still other cases, requests were found upon treaty provisions which expressly reserve the alien nationality of persons who may declare their purpose to become citizens of the United States, but who have not completed the act of naturalization. On account of the number and insistence of such requests, and considering the grounds upon which they were based, but without prejudice to any claims which the United States might have to the services of persons within its jurisdiction who have endeavored to absolve their former allegiance and indicated their intention to take up permanent residence in this country, the President has found it expedient in the conduct of foreign relations to indicate his willingness to discharge neutral aliens in certain circumstances, after they have been brought within his jurisdiction as Commander in Chief of the Army, by induction into the military service. Such inductions, however, which is a necessary prerequisite to discharge by the President, constitutes, in reality, a violation of the treaty obligations and the asserted international practice upon which the protests of foreign diplomatic officers have been based. And while the action of the President has afforded a means whereby the department might, in a limited way, meet the most urgent requests of the representatives of foreign countries, it does not afford an adequate solution of the question involved, because, though discharged from the Army, neutral aliens were nevertheless liable under the selective-service act to military service, and therefore subject to all the restrictions and conditions of persons liable under the act in respect to further service if required, departure from the United States and otherwise.

Moreover, the act as it now stands has given rise to the report abroad that this Government is impressing neutrals into its armed forces—a report which has apparently been seized upon and advertised by enemy propagandists with a view to irritate the sensitive feelings of certain foreign Governments.

Finally, I inclose for your information a memorandum containing estimates of the number of persons who would be affected by the proposed bill. From these estimates you will observe that, counting out citizens or subjects of treaty countries, who it is assumed should be exempted, the proposed amendment would exclude about 30,000 men, of whom not more than 50 per cent, and probably not more than 30 per cent, would be found eligible for military service. Of the 30,000 it is estimated that one-half are citizens of our neighboring Republic, Mexico, and about 40 per cent are subjects of Scandinavian countries. It seems highly probable that the actual loss of man power would be still further reduced through the waiver of some of the aliens in question of their right to claim exemption, as is understood to be the case at the present time with respect to nondeclarant aliens. The loss of man power involved seems to me inconsequential in view of the other considerations at stake in our foreign relations.

The War Department and the State Department, therefore, concur in recommending the passage of the proposed amendment in the interest of efficient administration of the selective-service act and of meeting the treaty obligations of the United States and of maintaining cordial relations with the neutral countries of the world.

Very sincerely, yours, ROBERT LANSING.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT].

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, this bill is for the purpose of rectifying a violation of the treaty. Gentlemen got up on their hind legs and howled a few weeks ago about the sanctity of treaties when we were proposing to make alien slackers fight or get out of the country. But nobody seems to have observed that the draft act passed last year was itself a violation of treaties.

Mr. Speaker, I am not going to vote against this bill, but I have reached the point where I think the bill ought to be amended so as not only to permit the drafting of alien cobelligerents with first naturalization papers, but alien cobelligerents whether they have any naturalization papers at all or not, any treaty to the contrary notwithstanding. An alien with first papers is no more a citizen than an alien without first papers. We have just as much right to draft an alien without first papers as we have to draft an alien with first papers, and surely the countries that are cobelligerents could not object to our doing so. I believe that the bill ought to be so amended as to strike out, in line 5, the words "all male citizens or male persons who have declared their intention to become citizens," and insert in lieu thereof the words "all male aliens who are citizens or subjects of cobelligerent countries, if they are here."

Then exempt alien enemies; exempt those of neutral countries and draft those that are here from cobelligerent countries.

What has become of the treaties in the Senate? Echo answers, What? What has become of the alien-slacker bill? Echo answers, What? I went before the Senate Committee on Immigration twice for the purpose of urging the passage of the alien-slacker bill. The chairman, Senator HARDWICK, and three other members of the committee were there at one of the meetings. No quorum. No doubt those present were ready to act, but could not without a quorum. Gentlemen can look in the directory and see who the members of that committee of the Senate are. The people of the States can look in the directory and see whether their Senators on the committee have been there trying to get a report on the bill. I talked with the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs in the Senate last Friday, and he told me that the treaties were not now before the Senate; that they had been withdrawn for the purpose of making some kind of amendments. I see in the press that there were some amendments that had to be made as to exemption of the Irish. My friends, some of the Irish objected to being drafted by treaty, but I never heard the voice of an Irishman on this floor or in this country against our alien-slacker bill, which put them on the same footing as our own people.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURNETT. I will.

Mr. McKENZIE. I would like to ask the gentleman from Alabama if it is not his understanding, under the arrangement entered into between Great Britain and France, that their subjects can be drafted in this country at the present time?

Mr. BURNETT. Whether they have first papers or not?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. BURNETT. That would have to be by treaty, they say, and that is what they are waiting for; and the bill being considered here does not provide it. The pending bill only provides that those who have the first papers may be drafted. Why not go further and provide for those who have not taken out first papers?

When I was before the Military Affairs Committee of the House last September it was stated, as the members of that committee well remember, by the Secretary of State that he was negotiating the treaties, and that they would be concluded by December, he thought; and if not, they would surely be concluded before the next draft was made. And yet 95,000 of our boys have already been called and gone under the second draft, and 150,000 more are to go, beginning, I believe, on the 29th of this month. Yet we have nothing to prevent the cobelligerent slackers from sitting here while our boys are sent to fight the battles abroad not only for our own country and for world democracy, but for the very existence of their countries themselves.

Gentlemen, it is an outrage that we are sitting here fiddling while Rome burns, as has been done in this case. Two hundred and fifty thousand men within the next month will be in the camps under the new draft; not one of the alien slackers there except those who have taken out first papers. Nearly one-third of the entire 800,000 that is to be embraced in this draft will be gone within the next few weeks, and yet we are assured when the Chamberlain bill was before the Committee on Military Affairs that when the draft came there would be treaties to enable us to take these aliens into the service by draft.

Mr. DENT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

Mr. DENT. Does not the gentleman recall the fact that in the report of the Provost Marshal General, out of the first draft of 680,000 men there were 123,000 aliens that were drafted and did not claim exemption?

Mr. BURNETT. That is true; and I remember the fact also that a large proportion of those aliens that did not claim exemption were Irish. A great proportion of those who claimed exemption were English and Italians. They are the fellows that the report of the Provost Marshal General shows claimed exemption. I repeat that I never have heard of an Irishman here or in any part of the United States ask for the defeat of the alien-slacker bill. As I said, I understand that the treaties have been withdrawn, I suppose, for amendment, but you gentlemen who were importuned by the State Department, and who fell to those importunities to postpone the consideration of the alien-slacker bill, will now see that what I predicted on the 30th of January in this House has come true. That is, that the second draft would come and the treaties still be up in the air.

This House did its duty in passing the bill by a vote of 344 to 21, and now it sleeps quietly in the Senate Immigration Committee and the treaties rest peacefully in the State Department. Whose fault is it?

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has 22 minutes.

Mr. McKEOWN. Is there any provision in this bill making a distinction between aliens of neutral countries who have their first papers of intention in States where they receive and exercise the right to vote and those where they have not the right?

Mr. DENT. Absolutely not.

Mr. McKEOWN. And in the States where they exercise the right to vote the same law applies?

Mr. DENT. It is bound to apply to every State alike. For instance, in my State, a man who has declared his intention to become a citizen has the right to vote.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, as has been stated, there are between 120,000 and by this time 140,000 aliens in our Army who could have claimed their exemptions and did not. If this bill is passed, that will not compel them to be eliminated from the service? If they desire, they can still remain whether they have filed a declaration of intention or not?

Mr. DENT. No man will be discharged from the Army except upon his own application.

Mr. SABATH. And that also applies to the thousands of so-called alien enemies who, however, are alien friends, but who unfortunately have been the subjects of one of the countries with which we are at war and against whom they are more desirous of fighting than are many of our American citizens.

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. SABATH. That will not exempt them from the service. They can remain in the service, if they desire?

Mr. DENT. Certainly. Everyone who is in the Army can remain there at his choice. It is just a question of not making them subject to draft.

I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY].

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I regret the fact that on a serious occasion like the present, when bills are being considered which have for their object the creation of efficient armies, the observing of our treaties, the execution in the future of our undertakings, of our contracts with other nations, that a Member of this House finds it necessary to indulge for partisan purposes in a criticism of an official of this administration. I listened in Chicago at a great convention to one of the greatest speeches ever delivered, in which Mr. William Jennings Bryan discussed the country and the city. I can not remember his words now, but he said, in effect, that if you destroy the country the grass will grow in the streets of the cities, and if you burn the cities the Nation will recover and proceed about as usual. A few days after that speech was made a newspaper of opposite political faith came out with a front-page article under a great black heading which read, "Mr. Bryan says burn our cities," and the article then followed with a vigorous denunciation of Mr. Bryan and the things that he stood for, characterizing them as socialistic and destructive, basing it all on a part of a sentence which Mr. Bryan had used—"burn our cities."

Mr. Speaker, in order that even a part of Mr. Creel's address may appear in the RECORD, the part which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] held in his hand but refused to read, I want to read the entire extract as it appears in the Evening Star of yesterday. I read, now, these garbled extracts from his speech, evidently rearranged so as to be sensational; and under the evidently changed order of even these few extracts, the sentence read by the gentleman from Ohio comes first:

"I will be proud to my dying day that my country was inadequately prepared when it entered the conflict," declared Mr. Creel. "To have been prepared would have given the lie to everything we ourselves believed in and to our self-avowed position before the world."

How far and how fast the country has gone since it started, he emphasized, is indicated by the fact that to-day, a year after our unprepared entrance into the conflict, a portion of our Army created since that time is bearing its full burden, notwithstanding the fact that European nations far more versed in war do not habitually give their men battle-front work before a year's training has expired.

"The liberty motor is to-day 100 per cent perfect, and within a week its critics will have to admit this fact," he asserted. "The aerial program," he added, "will be announced to the country within 30 days and will be a credit to this great Nation." He paid his respects to those who constantly demand 100,000 airships, explaining that 2,500 on one side has been the maximum so far.

The whole Nation owes Secretary Daniels an apology for its undeserved villification of that official, Mr. Creel told his hearers. Furthermore, the vast war expenditures have been made without one cent of graft, nor has a single life been lost by neglect, he asserted.

"What if a few overcoats were lacking at first?" he said. "Food has nowhere and at no time been lacking. We can all remember the typhoid camps, the 'embalmed beef,' and the paper-soled shoes of 1898."

Mr. Creel took up in detail the criticisms that have been made regarding the early lack of rifles for troops, the use of French machine guns while the Browning gun was being perfected, and the use of British and French made ordnance, which he said was done at the suggestion and request of those Governments, in order that they might keep their factories running and that the American transports might not be encumbered with cannon. England and France had more artillery than they could use and had the facilities to make more, he said. They preferred to keep on making them and have the benefit of the money the United States paid for them. They were really our guns, he explained, and not those of the allies.

"We could have put a rifle in the hands of every soldier from the beginning," he remarked. "Those who criticized the equipment of some of the men with broomsticks while better rifles than any we were making for our allies were being perfected were not trying to win this war, but another kind of war at a later date. Now we have a rifle that can shoot two bullets to the German Mauser's one."

In other words, these few extracts which I have just read indicate what the speech made by Mr. Creel was. His argument evidently, as disclosed here, was this: If we had been prepared with rifles for every man manufactured after the models heretofore in use in this country, they would not have been prepared as well as they will be now with this new rifle that we have prepared and put into their hands.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. Does not the gentleman know that the Springfield model of 1903 is used in our Army and is considered by experts just as efficient as the Enfield rifle which England is using?

Mr. RAINEY. The gentleman may be correct about that. Mr. Creel is discussing here the new rifle which will shoot two bullets to the German Mauser's one.

Mr. KAHN. Our Springfield rifle was considered the best rifle in the world by our Army experts, but we could not turn them out fast enough at the beginning of this war. There were many factories turning out the Enfield rifle for England. This Government then entered into contracts with those factories to take over the Enfield rifle. Because we could get them in quantities, this country contracted for them, but they are no better than the Springfield rifle which originally we were manufacturing.

Mr. RAINEY. I thank the gentleman for his contribution to my speech, and I do not take issue with him. I have no doubt he is correct about it in his estimate as to the value of the Springfield rifle——

Mr. FARR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAINEY. But if we did not have enough Springfield rifles—I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FARR. Is it a virtue to say that we had not enough of them when we should have had enough?

Mr. RAINEY. Oh, if we were manufacturing the Springfield rifle of the model of 1903, we were making them during nine years of time when the gentleman's party was in power, and it was as valuable an arm then as now, and if it was so valuable, why did not your party make some Springfield rifles? If I wanted to be partisan, as gentlemen on that side insist upon being, I might ask why did you not prepare a little by making a few Springfield rifles so as to have them on hand when this war started? You had nine years to do it in. This war started two years after the present administration commenced the control of affairs.

Mr. FARR. This is not a partisan matter——

Mr. RAINEY. I can not yield again. Just before this war started we came in power. What became of the billions of money you expended in 16 years' time? Our preparation for this war occurred after the present administration made its advent upon the world's scene of activities.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAINEY. I am not criticizing or finding fault with what you did not do during the 16 years of time, and it would require too much time to do that, and I am too busy with more important matters. Some patriotic gentleman on that side ought to assume the difficult task of explaining what your administrations did along these lines before, in these perilous times, you indulge in these violently partisan and viciously unfair efforts for partisan gain. Let us win the war first and then resort to these methods if you feel that your duty to your country requires a doubtful service of that character.

Mr. FARR. What has that got to do with the question?

Mr. RAINEY. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] might explain what you accomplished with the expenditure of the millions and billions that you made, which at least failed to produce the result which you say ought to have been apparent when this war started. This speech of Mr. Creel evidently announces the fact that a Republic can fight; that a Republic need not be a great military power in order to maintain its place in this world; that it need not prepare as militaristic Germany prepared, at the expense of the millions of people controlled by that Government; that a Republic can go on quietly, as a Republic ought to go, and maintain its place in the sun when the crucial hour in its history comes. [Applause.] This speech indicates that this great Republic has been able to place men on the fighting line——

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAINEY. I decline to yield—can place men on the fighting line in France, trained men, and trained in less time than Imperial Germany has ever been able to train men.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAMLIN. I want to ask consent that the gentleman be permitted——

The SPEAKER. Can not do it.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. All right.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendment to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider and——

Mr. KAHN. Before that is done it is necessary to amend the title.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the title will be amended to conform to the text.

There was no objection.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend section 2 of an act entitled 'An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States.'"

On motion of Mr. DENT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. DENT. I ask unanimous consent that H. R. 8409 be laid on the table, a similar Senate bill having been passed by the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Is that all of the gentleman's budget?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10169, the river and harbor appropriation bill.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia makes the point of order that there is no quorum present and evidently there is not. The Doorkeeper will lock the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. This is on the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 300, nays 1, answered "present" 2, not voting 127, as follows:

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, I voted "yea." I have a pair with my colleague from Maryland, Mr. TALBOTT. If he were present he would vote the same as I have voted, and therefore I will let my vote stand.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, am I recorded?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WATSON of Virginia). Yes; in the affirmative.

Mr. GOOD. I have a pair with the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. BORLAND, and therefore I desire to answer "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10069, the rivers and harbors bill, with Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10069) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the order of the House all time for general debate has expired, and the Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Delaware River, Pa., N. J., and Del.: Continuing improvement and for maintenance from Allegheny Avenue, Philadelphia, to the sea, $1,100,000; completing improvement above Lalor Street, Trenton, $150,000; in all, $1,250,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I would like to have it known, Mr. Chairman, that the Delaware River, which item we have just passed, is now the shipbuilding center of the United States. I question whether any river in the world has given a better account of itself industrially and commercially than the Delaware River. The agitation for the improvement of this river has been on for some time. Its situation along the coast is geographically favorable, and if connected with inside waterways north and south it would be the commercial keystone of waterway activity in the United States. The Schuylkill River is one of its tributaries. I am happy to note that at last the importance of the Schuylkill River is being recognized by Congress. There is always careful scrutiny in international shipping circles with regard to the depth of waterways of the United States. Although we do not fully realize it, the failure of a suitable depth has its significance in international trade. A great community here may be seriously hurt by rumors in foreign commercial centers concerning the incapacity of any of our streams. Fortunately, the Delaware River is in good standing abroad, and we hope to make it more so.

As showing the importance of the Delaware River at the present time, I wish to make a brief statement of its war activities; its shipbuilding activities in particular. I am going to put some figures in the RECORD, and will challenge a comparison of them with those of any other river in the world.

In due course, when the present improvements are completed, we will have upon the Delaware River, in the Hog Island Shipbuilding Yard alone, the greatest plant for the construction of vessels in the world. This without regard to what may have been said heretofore concerning contracts or the manner in which the work has been promoted. There are now completed on the Delaware River in old plants or approaching completion in new plants 146 separate ship ways.

The Merchants' Shipbuilding Co., which is being aided by the Government, at Bristol, Pa., has 12 ways. They are approaching completion, and in short order ships will be turned out from that yard. I trust that my distinguished colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. WATSON], who represents the district in which this yard is located, will in due course tell the House something about this great enterprise.

The Trayler Shipbuilding Co., which is also near Bristol, has 10 ways. The old and long-established Cramp's Shipbuilding Co., which happens to be in the district which I represent, has 13 ways, every one operating to the full for the Government. The New York Shipbuilding Co., on the New Jersey side of the river, opposite Philadelphia, has 14 ways; that company has already made a splendid record in the construction of large vessels of war. It has, in addition, another plant with 10 ways, so that its importance is constantly increasing.

On the New Jersey side of the river, opposite Philadelphia and the League Island Navy Yard, the Pennsylvania Shipbuilding Co., a new concern, has six ways. The New Jersey Shipbuilding Co. has seven ways. Down at Hog Island, on the Pennsylvania side, in the district represented by my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER], they have 50 ways, now rapidly approaching completion. The Sun Shipbuilding Co., at Chester, has five ways. The Chester Shipbuilding Co., at Chester, has seven ways; the Harlan & Hollingsworth Co. has four ways; the Pusey & Jones Co., at the same place, four ways; and the Jackson & Sharp Co., also at Wilmington, four ways. That makes the total of 146 shipbuilding ways between Bristol, about 16 miles above Philadelphia, and Wilmington, about 30 miles below.

Employed at these various yards at the present time are no less than 61,950 workmen, skilled mechanics of one kind and another.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent for five minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The Merchants' Shipbuilding Corporation has 6,500 men. That is a city in itself. Each man is the mainstay, according to modern methods of calculation, of a family of five. At the Trayler Works they have 900 men; at Cramp's Shipyard, which carries 5,000 men in times of peace, they have now working 8,250 men; at the New York Shipbuilding yard they have 8,000 men; at the Pennsylvania Co., 2,200; and at the New Jersey Co.'s yard, 800. At Hog Island they have 22,500 men, and the problem of housing them is so acute that the Government is now arranging to build houses for some of them, so that the work may be facilitated.

Conferences are on this very day, and I hope the contracts will soon be closed for the completion of 1,600 houses near Hog Island. The plans, I understand, contemplate permanent houses, which the workmen may have opportunity to buy. Of course, however, these plans may be changed. The great number of these workmen, who support a population of between 75,000 and 100,000, live in the city of Philadelphia. Some of them are from Chester, and some live across the river in the city of Camden and elsewhere.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. FESS. That was the question I was going to ask, about the transportation, when there are so many people there without housing facilities. How are they transported?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. They are transported mostly in trolley cars and in railway trains. Some of them use boats to cross the river. Some go to the New Jersey side—Camden, or Gloucester, or Paulsboro in boats. Many go south to Chester, and some as far as Wilmington, Del. Improved transportation facilities are now being considered.

Mr. FESS. How far down from Philadelphia is Hog Island?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Hog Island is within a rifle shot of the Philadelphia County line. It is in Delaware County, on the Delaware River, just below Philadelphia. The boundary line between Philadelphia County and Delaware County is Bow Creek, and the yard runs up close to Bow Creek.

Mr. FESS. Will 22,000 men be the maximum number of laboring men there when that yard gets into full operation?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I understand they have been dispensing recently with a number of employees who have not fitted in properly to the work to which they were assigned, and that the 22,500 now there constitute a real live working force where every man fits the job. They have begun to systematize and specialize on hard, practical lines. Folks up there now are boasting not only of the magnitude of the work but also of the facility with which it is being done.

Mr. FESS. There was a great deal of criticism there formerly to the effect that an unnecessary number of men were maintained?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; there was that criticism, and the people of Philadelphia were regretful that that criticism should hold. But my latest information is that there has been a vast improvement not only in the personnel in the yard but in the rapidity with which the work is being done and with which those great structures have been reared.

Engineers have told me that the work at Panama presented no greater engineering problems, particularly in the mobilization of men and forces and material, than did the work at Hog Island. They believe now they have passed the crucial stage—the stage of preliminary disorganization—and that they now have a workmanlike organization which has weeded out the incompetents. And this organization, I will say to the gentleman, includes welfare work of the highest possible order. There are men there speaking the languages of various countries, but welfare specialists are working under one head in the yard now, caring for the Spaniard or the Italian who may not be able to make himself understood, just as if he were an American; and if any are hurt while helping the Government there they are being cared for by those who understand their wants. This, at least, is my latest information.

Below the Hog Island yard, near by Chester, is the Sun Ship Co., which has 3,700 men. Then comes the Chester Co., with 3,500 men; Harlan & Hollingsworth, at Wilmington, have 2,800 men; and Pusey & Jones have 1,800 men. That makes a grand total of men employed in shipyards on the Delaware River of 61,950—substantially 62,000 men—and I am told that that force is going to increase as the ships come upon the ways. In addition, there are other, but smaller, yards doing their part.

On this same river—the Delaware—between the points I have mentioned—Wilmington on the south and Bristol on the north—we have reared in the last three or four years some of the most extensive industrial plants on the face of the globe—oil refineries, electrical appliances, arms and ammunition, iron and steel factories and foundries, and powder plants, a catalogue of which would cover pages. As a matter of fact, gentlemen, the Delaware River has actually become the center of the world for shipbuilding and munition making. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the Delaware River.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to recur to the bottom of page 2. I was in the House at the time the bill was read, but I was talking with the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] about the form of an amendment I was about to offer to the East River item. We reached the present point five minutes after we had gone into Committee of the Whole, and although I was here I did not realize that the item had been reached.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to return to lines 23 and 24, on page 2, for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I supposed when the gentleman made his statement that he had abandoned the thought of offering any amendment.

Mr. DEMPSEY. There was not any reason for thinking that. In all my talks with the gentleman I told him that I had this matter very much at heart. It is not a light matter. It is not a matter that I intended at all to omit. I was in the Chamber for this purpose, and I told the chairman that I intended to proceed, and as seriously as I knew how.

Mr. SMALL. I am indebted to the gentleman for his explanation, but I think it would be better to recur to this item later.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I would say to the gentleman that I have a matter at home of vital importance, and I really have to leave here to-night. The item might not be reached at all, and I can see no way in which it will discommode either the chairman of the committee or the committee itself. I hope the gentleman will not, under these circumstances, take advantage of a slight inadvertence on my part. That is all.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, in view of the statement of the gentleman as to his personal wishes, I will withdraw my objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes with reference to this item. It is the only item that I will debate in the bill. It is a very important item. I do not think I can cover it in less time than that.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman an amendment prepared?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes. I have sent it to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DEMPSEY: After the figures "$2,200,000," on page 2, line 24, add the following: "And the Secretary of War is hereby directed to prosecute the work of improvement with a view to securing a depth of 40 feet in the channel through East River and Hell Gate as soon as practicable."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the amendment which I ask is one which simply makes the law that which was intended to be made the law by the action of this House on the 8th day of August, 1917. Now, let us take in chronological order the events in regard to this proposed amendment. On the 4th day of February, 1917, the board of engineers of the Army and the Navy made a report by which they recommended a 40-foot channel through Hell Gate, 35 feet to be obtained now, 5 feet more to be obtained later on. I would like you gentlemen to keep these dates in mind. That was on the 4th day of February. On the 6th day of April the United States declared war on Germany. On the 7th day of May the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of War united in joint letters to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and the effect of these letters was that whereas they had recommended 40 feet through Hell Gate, 35 feet to be obtained now and 5 feet more later on, they now for war purposes, on account of the change of conditions, recommended the present immediate securing of a depth of 40 feet.

The reasons which they gave were these: They said that woould double the effectiveness of our fleet; that Montauk Point and Ambrose Channel, the two entrances to New York Harbor, were so far apart that an enemy in order to bar the egress or ingress of our fleet would have to double the guarding fleet. They said not only would it double the effectiveness of our fleet but they said also that a battle was more likely to occur between Long Island and the Connecticut shore than anywhere else, and that we should provide for the ingress and egress of our fleet at all stages of the tide up through Hell Gate, and that 35 feet would not take our largest battleships. On that account the two Secretaries united in this recommendation, and the Secretary of War asked that an amendment be made. On the 8th day of August we passed that amendment.

And now, gentlemen, I want to call your attention to what occurred at the time that we passed the amendment. The amendment was presented by the chairman of the committee [Mr. SMALL], and in presenting it he said this:

Mr. Chairman, just a brief statement. As the item for East River was originally reported it provided for 40 feet from the lower bay to the navy yard in East River, but did not provide for 40 feet through Hell Gate at the upper end of East River running into Long Island Sound. The naval officers and the Secretary of the Navy were quite insistent for strategic reasons that we should have also 40 feet from East River into Long Island Sound. They took it up with the Secretary of War, resulting in a general recommendation. The committee then considered it and agreed to it.

By reason of 40 feet through Hell Gate it became necessary to adopt another project and refer to another document, thus requiring the paragraph to be rewritten; but the amendment offered only changes the paragraph in the bill by increasing to 40 feet the depth through Hell Gate to Long Island Sound.

And that explains something to which I am going to refer later, the clumsy language which was employed, and the effect of it. Now, gentlemen, I want you to mark these words—

But the amendment offered only changes the paragraph in the bill by increasing to 40 feet the depth through Hell Gate to Long Island Sound.

There is much more in the report of the proceedings, but that showed clearly that this committee as a whole, and its chairman speaking for it, were presenting by this amendment a proposition to increase the depth through Hell Gate, from Long Island Sound to the bay, to 40 feet. They so understood the language which they wrote. The House so understood it, because they so explained it. No one challenged that statement. The entire discussion centered around the proposition that that was what was intended.

For instance, Mr. FREAR, of the committee, came in, as he often does on the question of expense, and asked how this increased expense was to be met, and in asking about the increased expense he spoke about the expense of a 40-foot channel through Hell Gate. Now, bear in mind the chronological order in this matter. First there was the recommendation of the board on the 4th of February, then the declaration of war on the 6th of April, then the recommendation of the two Secretaries on the 7th of May, our consideration of this bill in June, and on the 9th of June the chairman of the committee explained the matter, and said that whereas we had provided for only 35 feet, with 5 feet more later, now they wanted 40 feet, and gave the reasons which impelled him to ask it, the discussion leading up to the vote, and the vote in Committee of the Whole and in the House resulting in the adoption of the proposition.

Following that, what happened? It went down to the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of War, through his subordinates and assistants construed this provision, which was drawn in a clumsy way, by referring to another document, as meaning 35 feet, with 5 feet later on, meaning precisely that for which the bill provided before it was amended, and meaning not 40 feet but meaning 35 feet; because on the 4th day of January Col. Newcomer came before the committee and testified that there was no present intention on the part of the engineering force to secure 40 feet at all, that their intention is to secure only 35 feet, and if Congress sees fit, at some future time, to secure 40 feet, then and in such event only to do it. Now, what I say is this: First, that this amendment is of as vital importance as any measure which can be proposed in this bill. Nowhere else in this great country, as the Secretary of the Navy well says, is there concentrated the great wealth and the enormous commercial activity which mark the country to the north of Long Island Sound. Nowhere else is there the likelihood of a battle that there is there, because an enemy could work greater destruction by an attack there than elsewhere. The effectiveness of our fleet can be doubled by this simple amendment. And I am not asking for a cent of additional money.

A disabled battleship to-day has only one way to get into New York City. If an engagement is fought in Long Island Sound a battleship can not go up through Hell Gate at all, because it will draw too much water. So it is a vital matter, and not only is it vital but it has been so recognized by Congress. The letters to this committee stand unchanged, unchallenged, unmodified to-day as they were written. When these letters were presented the House did exactly what the Secretary asked us to do. The able chairman of the committee presented the letters and urged that the change be made and told why the rather clumsy language was used in making the amendment. But that language, instead of accomplishing that which the Secretary urged that the necessities of the situation demanded, that which the safety of the metropolis, and that which the war exigencies loudly called for—instead of accomplishing that it comes down to the department and is construed by a subordinate officer as not changing the situation at all. It is construed as meaning the same as if we had not amended it; it is construed as meaning the same as if the chairman had not on the floor, as he did, advocated the 40-foot project, to comply with the wishes of the two Secretaries.

Now, gentlemen, aside from the necessities of the situation, this House can not afford, when in a matter of such grave and vital importance as this it has legislated upon the request of two great officers of the Government—two Cabinet officers charged with the responsibility—it can not afford to allow legislation subsequently to be made null and of no effect by misinterpretation by a subordinate officer of the department.

I say that these letters remain to-day as much in force, as much in effect, they call as loudly to-day upon us for their performance as the day they were written. There has been no change in them; they stand to-day as they did then, and I ask this House, because of the war necessity, because of these letters, because of the fact that we passed the act then, to reenact it now in plain and unmistakable language—to adopt this amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. CLEARY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, in the few words I shall have to say I will not go into any great particulars. I assume, and I think correctly, that every gentleman in the House understands the importance of the port of New York. Coming down from the Lakes from the West, coming down from the North from the St. Lawrence River, coming down from the South and all parts of the country, the commerce flows to New York. It is well worth while to do all you can to serve that commerce, and it is well worth while to make room for it in New York Harbor, and therefore I think you can afford to be rather liberal with the port of New York.

New York is the center of commerce of the country which comes in by canal, by Sound, by river and harbor, bringing thousands of tons of coal every day between the North River and coming up through Ambrose Channel by Jersey. I suppose there are a hundred thousand tons, not counting the foreign commerce comes into the port of New York every day.

Another thing that I might mention is that the dock commissioners and authorities of New York have given the Nation over 20 of their best piers, 12 in the Hudson River, 7 piers and docks acknowledged to be the best in this country. They have given some new piers also to the Government. They have at present some piers on the East River, and I have letters in my pocket that Commissioner Hulbert wrote, calling attention to the fact that they would have to have some improvement on the East River to make way for these docks that the city has turned over to the Government. But I am not going to press that here now. I am only calling your attention to the fact that the whole country can well afford to be liberal to the port of New York because of various reasons. I think my colleague [Mr. DEMPSEY] went over the ground thoroughly, so it is unnecessary for me to repeat it. I have letters in my pocket from the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy asking the very thing that the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY] has spoken of. But I will not go into these matters. I only wanted to call attention to the fact that the great port of New York needs all that you can give her and ten times as much as you have any notion of giving her or that she has asked for. I hope that the House will be liberal in this matter. Do not try to stint too closely, but give a little leeway to the central port of this great country. [Applause.]

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Chairman and gentleman of the committee, when this matter was under discussion in the House some time ago I favored a proposition for a 40-foot channel throughout the length of the East River, and especially at the point where Hell Gate is situated. I did that because I recognized that New York was the commercial and financial center of the Nation. I recognized that it was a city in which we are all interested, a city to which we all point with pride, a city that we all frequently visit, a place upon whose prosperity we are in a measure more or less dependent, because it is barometrical, indicating the prosperity and the activity of the Nation.

I was conscious of the immense tonnage brought in there—91,000,000 tons. The thought came to me of the tremendous appropriations made for not what I would be pleased to call questionable enterprises, but what the press throughout the country stigmatizes as peculiar river and harbor enterprises. In the consideration of real big propositions our own localities should give way. When we consider a great port like the port of New York we should think and vote in a national not local way.

Now, there is evidently a contradiction between the proposed action of the committee and the attitude assumed by the Secretaries of Navy and War, respectively. I take it for granted that neither Secretary Daniels nor Secretary Baker wrote these letters, dated, respectively, the 7th of May, 1917, and the 15th of May, 1917, without being sufficiently informed. I quote from the letter of the Secretary of the Navy to the chairman of the River and Harbor Committee:

> While deepening and straightening the channel through Hell Gate will be of unquestioned advantage to the commercial interests of the country, the strategic value to the Navy is so great that I believe consideration should be given to securing this channel of 40 feet depth at the present time. While in the beginning a concession was made to obtain a depth of 35 feet and ultimately 40 feet, it is considered that it would be highly desirable, both from an economical standpoint and from a strategical standpoint, to have the work, after it was once begun, continued until the depth of 40 feet had been obtained throughout, and the straightening of the channel, in order to allow the easy and free passage of large ships as well as to prevent the formation of tidal eddies and currents, had been accomplished.

At the time that this bill was under consideration, before and later on when a delegation from the city of New York waited upon the President at the White House, I felt like asking the question, if I had been one of those who were charged with interrogation: If a 40-foot channel is desirable and if a 35-foot channel is to be dug, why, when you have all of the apparatus, do you withdraw all of the apparatus, knowing that 40 feet is necessary, and come back at a later period to engage in the work again? [Applause.] Of course, I am not an engineer; I am not a dredger; I am simply a Member of Congress, and perhaps gentlemen who are more familiar with those things can readily explain.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield right there, I will say that Col. Newcomer before the committee testified that digging piecemeal instead of as one job would increase the expense substantially and increase the time it would take to get the 40-foot channel largely.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Then, if we want to increase the expense and increase the labor, we want to hang to the 35-foot proposition; but if we want to decrease the expense and promote efficiency of the harbor, we want to vote for the 40-foot proposition. Of course, I understand Congress frequently votes for those measures that cost more rather than less money.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, how much will it delay the 35-foot channel to go ahead with the 40-foot channel at one time?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I shall leave that to the chairman of the committee to answer. I am not a member of the committee. I am merely a man who looks beyond the confines of Rhode Island, and I would like to do something for a port that deserves something to be done for it.

Mr. LINTHICUM. It ought not to be so hard to do that, because Rhode Island is not very big.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Rhode Island has expired.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. The Secretary of the Navy very pertinently suggests that from an economic standpoint and from a strategical standpoint this work should be done to the extent of 40 feet. While speaking on this proposition I have in mind the constructing of public buildings in the United States. I have frequently seen, and no doubt many members of the committee have also seen, public buildings outrun their usefulness and their capacity before they were a month old—money wasted, in a sense, and the question is this: Are we ever as a Nation to have prevision, are we ever to have the necessary foresight? I submit this as an economic proposition. If it is going to cost more money to go back there and dig 5 feet more, let us vote for the 40-foot proposition to-day. I find a letter dated the 15th of May, signed by Secretary Baker, and I do not suppose he signed it without knowing what it contained, to this effect:

> I am seconding the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy, and I trust that you and your associates on the committee will find it possible to make this one change in the proposed measure.

The change was made in the proposed measure, and neither the Secretary of the Navy nor the Secretary of War has uttered one word or written one line in contravention of these things expressed in these respective letters by them. What, therefore, is the answer? Merely that one of the engineers has expressed the belief or the opinion that 35 feet are necessary and only necessary at this particular time. New York, as was pointed out by the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY] a few days ago, has a tonnage of 91,000,000 tons, certainly something that should recommend it to the generous consideration of this body. We are at war. We are proud of our Navy. We are conscious that our battleships cost $14,000,000 each. We do not want to see them wrecked. We all remember when the Panama Canal legislation was under consideration how we spoke of the effectiveness of the Panama Canal in the preservation of the Navy—how it would double the efficiency of our first line of defense, because the Navy could readily come from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean. Here is a similar proposition. The Secretary of the Navy, evidently advised by fighting men in the Navy, says, "If we are going to have a sea fight, we are going to have it in Long Island Sound."

The rich possessions of the city of New York and the territory lying to the north of it are an inviting field of enterprise for an enemy's guns. He says we are going to have a fight there, if we are ever going to have a naval fight, and in order to make our Navy an effective and efficient fighting force, in order to conserve that force, he says, "Let us open this eastern channel leading out to Long Island Sound, and instead of waiting for the tide—and there is a rise of 5 feet in the tide twice in 24 hours—do not let us take the chance of having any ships crippled and at the mercy of the enemy waiting 11 hours for the tide, but let us make this channel whereby these ships can run into the East River and find shelter in the Brooklyn Navy Yard. We have expended millions of dollars in the Brooklyn Navy Yard, millions upon millions of dollars. Why should we impair its usefulness? The way to impair its usefulness is to deny a proper channel of exit and inlet to that great yard. [Applause.]

Mr. SWITZER. Mr. Chairman, no one, I believe, recognizes the importance of New York City as a port more than myself, but I desire to call attention of the committee to the fact that the great tonnage of New York Harbor has nothing whatever to do with this proposition. The tonnage in New York Harbor is amply accommodated with the water facilities that are there to-day. From the lower bay up there will be soon 40 feet. There will be in two years 35 feet coming down through Hell Gate to Long Island. There are no vessels, you might say, that require a depth of 40 feet engaged in commercial transportation that go up through Long Island, and to impress upon you that this harbor has nothing to do with this proposition I want to call your attention to the fact that this gets into a rivers and harbors bill by reason of the fact that in 1916 the Naval Committee carried a provision creating a joint board composed of officers appointed from the Navy and from the Army Engineers to report upon a project. For what? To get to the Brooklyn Navy Yard from the ocean. Not a commercial proposition, but it is a naval proposition. And this joint board made its report as a war measure, and the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of War concurred in that report, and we put it in the rivers and harbors bill last year, a project reported upon by a former survey, a 35-foot project, and the bill was introduced in the House and when this report came in from the joint board, as I recollect, that the committee on amendment adopted 40 feet, as provided in House Document 140, Sixty-fifth Congress. I want to call the attention of this committee to the fact that we do not propose to cease work upon this project for 40 feet when we acquire the 35-foot depth; that is, in the river and harbor bill at this time. The report of the joint board is for a 35-foot depth and an ultimate 40-foot depth, and the gentleman who just preceded me is in error when he states that we are going to quit work when we attain the 35-foot depth. Ultimately we are to have 40 feet.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWITZER. I yield.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I just ask the gentleman if he is familiar with the testimony that Col. Newcomer gave before the committee on the 4th day of January on that matter, found on page 6 of the hearings, as follows:

> We understand that the question of when the 40-foot depth could be provided should be left to the future entirely. In other words, whenever circumstances develop which indicate a need for that, then the estimates could be submitted under authority already given and Congress will determine, of course, whether it is ready to proceed with the 40-foot project.

Mr. SWITZER. Why, certainly, gentlemen of the committee. The estimates now are to carry on the 35-foot project, which will be completed in two years. If we adopt the 40-foot now, it will retard the 35-foot project. Col. Newcomer testified as to the estimate. Of course we will never attain the 40 feet unless some future Congress makes provision or an appropriation for it. He is correct in that; he is making estimates now for the 35 feet, and he says when we attain that depth we will not, of course, have 40 feet in the future unless some future Congress provides an appropriation to dig this channel to a depth of 40 feet. That, of course, is correct, is it not? The whole proposition in this particular is to complete the channel in five years. It is not something to be done within a few days.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SWITZER. I would ask for three minutes more, as I have been interrupted frequently.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to speak for three minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SWITZER. I expect to see some day or other a 40-foot channel to the Brooklyn Navy Yard. There is 40 feet from the sea one way, and we will soon have 35 feet on the other way, and with the high tide it will be 40 feet from Long Island in. Now, as to the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of War. While it is true that through some one importuning, I presume pretty strongly, at some time or other, they got them to sign those two letters which came in last May; but there is nothing from the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy so far in this respect since this bill has been prepared. This is strictly a naval proposition for the benefit of the Brooklyn Navy Yard, and if the Navy wants it, if the Secretary of the Navy wants this, why has not he appeared before our committee at this time? Why has not he sent some representative before that Committee on Rivers and Harbors? Why has not the Secretary of War? We asked the Secretary of War to submit a list of all war measures before we began consideration of the bill, and he has not suggested anything of this kind. No naval or military official has suggested anything of the kind. It is merely representatives of the good people of New York City who are anxious to get this 40 feet. They have come over here, the mayor and delegation from the city and an ex-member of this committee [Mr. Hulbert], and they visited the President of the United States.

I have no doubt they visited the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of War, but they got no letters this time, gentlemen; keep that in mind. There are no letters now before our committee at this time and no requests.

Mr. SIEGEL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWITZER. I will yield.

Mr. SIEGEL. On February 5 the Secretary of War, in writing me, stated, in the course of a long letter:

> In this connection you may be interested to observe, on page 2 of the document, that the improvement actually adopted was not only recommended by the general board of the Navy and the draft board but was also duly approved by the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of War, and the President.

And this letter was written by the Secretary in February, previous to his leaving to go abroad.

Mr. SWITZER. That was last year.

Mr. SIEGEL. Oh, no; this year.

Mr. SWITZER. That is a late letter?

Mr. SIEGEL. It is a late letter, just written.

Mr. SWITZER. Not since we have introduced this bill?

Mr. SIEGEL. This is a late letter, of date of February 5.

Mr. SWITZER. I understand that.

Mr. CLEARY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWITZER. I will.

Mr. CLEARY. The gentleman from Ohio stated that we already had 40 feet up to the navy yard. What is the gentleman's authority for that statement?

Mr. SWITZER. That is from the lower bay. That is provided for through Buttermilk Channel.

Mr. CLEARY. That is a mistake. It is not dug out at one end any more than the other, but Col. Newcomer told me yesterday that that is what they are going to do now—dig out on this end. It is not finished. I want the gentleman to understand that, because——

Mr. SWITZER. But appropriation is made for that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, there are two very good reasons why this particular improvement should be made. The first, and to my mind the most important, is the military value of having a complete passageway for capital ships, or ships of any probable draft, all the way around Long Island.

Last year we had a number of battleships in Long Island Sound. Some of them were at the Brooklyn Navy Yard prior to that time, and, as I recall it, it took them three days to get around into Long Island Sound, where the celebration was held, opposite the district of my friend from the fourth district of Connecticut [Mr. MERRITT]. If this improvement were made, we should have a sort of super-Kiel Canal all the way from the eastern end of Long Island Sound around by way of New York and out to the open ocean again.

Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. I will.

Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa. Does not the gentleman think that a 40-foot channel ought to be provided at the earliest possible date?

Mr. TILSON. As early as can be. It can not be provided day after to-morrow, but I think we ought to set the plans right and work toward them.

Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa. Do you not know that a 35-foot channel at ebb tide means a 40-foot channel at high tide?

Mr. TILSON. Yes; but I can easily imagine a situation in which we might not wish to wait for high tide.

Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa. We can complete the 35-foot channel a year earlier than a 40-foot channel.

Mr. TILSON. The time is important, of course, but we ought to have it right, and the time consumed in making it 40 feet will be less if we do it all at once than if we have to do it twice; that is, if we make it 35 feet and then again stop all commerce and make it 40 feet.

The commercial factor is an important one. New York is our greatest port. Its harbor is used more than any other harbor in our country, and it is destined to be used more and more as time goes on. It is already congested. We need the additional room above Hell Gate for large ships. True, there are no ships that will require this draft running through Long Island Sound at the present time, but if we have the channel deepened so that ships of great draft can go above Hell Gate, docks will be built above Hell Gate. The city of New York is building northward; it is building along this shore. The Bronx has doubled in population in a very short time.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The Bronx has grown to be the sixth city in population in the United States in the course of the last two years.

Mr. TILSON. We need the wharfage room all the way up this channel. As soon as this part of the channel is made the depth of 40 feet we shall be in a position to extend the wharfage indefinitely, so far as the business of the city will justify it.

Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. TILSON. I will.

Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa. The gentleman knows, of course, as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWITZER] has well said, that this 35-foot project, with ultimately a 40-foot depth, was adopted on a report by a joint board of Army and Navy officers, as an Army measure, and not as a commercial proposition.

Mr. TILSON. As I started out by saying, it is quite worthy even as a purely military matter.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. I will.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The report was made on the 4th day of February. The declaration of war was on the 6th of April, and the two letters came about one month later, on the 7th and the 15th days of May. So there was not any report of the Navy and Army engineers.

Mr. TILSON. Whether there was war actually going on or not, or whether we shall ever have another war, we ought to have the facilities for commerce which a channel of 40 feet in depth through Hell Gate will furnish us. National defense and international commerce demand this improvement, and we ought to have it as soon as we can get it. [Applause.]

Mr. SMALL and Mr. MADDEN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] is recognized.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I am glad to say at the threshold that if this were a matter of accommodating the personal wishes of my amiable and attractive friend from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY], he would only have to make the request. While I have not had so long an acquaintance with the other gentleman from New York, a member of the committee [Mr. CLEARY], a request from him would induce me to go a long way in compliance. I am sorry I can not yield to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY] that I should withhold opposition to this amendment. A strong sense of duty, a duty to this bill, a duty to the House, induces me to oppose it and to say that it is absolutely without justification.

If I could be so fortunate as to express myself so clearly as I think in opposition to this amendment, there would be no difficulty in convincing the House.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield for a question? I want to know how you managed to secure those two letters from the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy if it was absolutely unnecessary?

Mr. SMALL. I did not secure any two such letters from those officials. They did not consult me. However, I will later refer to those letters.

In 1913 a report was submitted for the improvement of the East River and Hell Gate to a depth of 35 feet, at a total estimated cost of $13,400,000. That is known as House Document No. 188, Sixty-third Congress, first session. Prior to the adoption of that report as a whole, by a resolution in 1915, we provided for the removal of Coenties Reef, between the Battery and Governors Island. And then, again, in the river and harbor act of 1916 we provided for the deepening of Diamond Reef in accordance with this project, Diamond Reef being just a little above Coenties Reef or near it. When the bill, which was approved August 8, 1917, was reported, it came in with this language:

East River, N. Y.: For improvement in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 188, Sixty-third Congress, first session, $1,250,000.

That is the way the bill was brought into the House. Perhaps I had better divert here if perchance there should be any Member not acquainted with the physical characteristics of the East River. It extends from the upper bay, below the Battery, around the east side of Manhattan Island, separating Manhattan Island from Brooklyn, through Hell Gate and Throgs Neck to Long Island Sound. The controlling depth in Hell Gate now is 26 feet, and any deepening has to be through solid rock. We have heretofore provided for 40 feet from the upper bay to the navy yard on East River, which included the removal of Coenties Reef and Diamond Reef as a part of the 40-foot channel to the navy yard. There is an existing depth of 40 feet in East River from the navy yard to Hell Gate. Hell Gate may be said to extend from the upper end of Blackwells Island to Negro Point Bluff, a distance of about 1¼ miles. Beyond Negro Point Bluff and thence through Long Island Sound a depth of 40 feet exists.

So that we have in East River between the navy yard and Hell Gate 40 feet plus, through Hell Gate a minimum depth of 26 feet, and beyond Hell Gate 40 feet, so that the crux of this project lies at the deepening of Hell Gate, and when you deepen Hell Gate to 35 feet it means you are going through solid rock, getting 9 feet of depth more than the present depth of 26 feet. Of course, even where 40 feet now exists in East River the channel will have to be greatly widened, say, to 900 feet.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman states that the controlling depth at Hell Gate now is 26 feet?

Mr. SMALL. Yes; 26 feet.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. What can be had there on tide?

Mr. SMALL. Five feet, making 31 feet.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. May I ask what the present authorized project is?

Mr. SMALL. Forty feet.

Mr. DEMPSEY. One minute, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. SMALL. I object. I would rather answer the question that is propounded to me. The present project is for 40 feet, 35 feet to be secured as soon as practicable and 40 feet ultimately. That is the project we have adopted.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. To what extent have appropriations been made for the 35 feet?

Mr. SMALL. We carried $1,250,000 in the last bill, and we carry $2,200,000 in this bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Has any appropriation been made for the 40-foot project?

Mr. SMALL. No. The estimates are for the 35-foot project.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMALL. Now, Mr. Chairman, if I may develop my case——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield for one more question?

Mr. SMALL. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Can he state what percentage of the 35-foot project has been completed?

Mr. SMALL. The depth across Coenties Reef is about completed, if not entirely so, and the depth of 40 feet up to the navy yard is about completed, not entirely completed, as the gentleman from New York said.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. How long would it take to complete the through channel to 40 feet?

Mr. SMALL. Estimated from four to five years, and two years for the 35 feet.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Four years, to be done as one job, and five years if done piecemeal, the way the law is and contemplates. Is not that it?

Mr. SMALL. Substantially.

Now, as I said, when the river and harbor bill was reported last session it came in with a paragraph adopting that 35-foot project. A distinguished Member of this House at that time, Mr. Hulbert, was not satisfied, but wanted 40 feet depth through East River and Hell Gate, and through his persistence he secured two letters, one from the Secretary of the Navy and one from the Secretary of War.

Now, I am willing to concede, for the purpose of entire frankness, that those letters might bear an interpretation of asking for 40 feet immediately, but they did not correspond with the official records of both the Navy and the War Department; and therefore, for the sake of consistency and in conformity with the policy of Congress, we adopted the 40-foot project, in accordance with the report of the joint board. And what were those official records? In the naval appropriation bill of 1916 there was a provision authorizing the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of War to investigate, with a view to making any recommendations for the improvement of harbors or channels for the operation of the fleet, and they brought in this report, submitted March 29, 1917, known as House Document No. 140, Sixty-fifth Congress, first session. I now quote from that document:

Under date of November 14, 1916, the joint board submitted the following report, which was duly approved by the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of War, and the President.

I now quote from this document the recommendation of the joint board for the improvement of East River:

The only connecting channel the construction or improvement of which the Navy Department considers necessary is the channel through Hell Gate and East River between New York Harbor and Long Island Sound.

The channel should be given a depth of 35 feet as soon as practicable and an eventual depth of 40 feet.

I ask you to observe the concluding language. Based on those letters from the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of War, an amendment was offered by Mr. SMALL, the chairman, while the bill was under consideration in the House. The amendment followed the provision for 35 feet, as reported by the River and Harbor Committee, and was in the following language:

And for a 40-foot channel through East River and Hell Gate, in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 140, Sixty-fifth Congress, first session.

As above stated, the appropriation was not increased. This amendment authorized "a depth of 35 feet as soon as practicable and an eventual depth of 40 feet."

That is the way the bill was passed in the House. It passed the inspection of Mr. Hulbert and had his approval. In fact, I might say it is my best recollection that Mr. Hulbert drafted this amendment himself. The bill after it passed the House went to the Senate. It passed the inspection of the Senate Committee on Commerce, the eagle eyes of the two New York Senators, and the Senate itself, and became a law, adopting this project of 40 feet in accordance with Document No. 140.

There was not a word of complaint about the matter all during last fall, until we met here in December or in January, when the distinguished Member at that time, Hon. Mr. Hulbert, came before the committee. What was his complaint? Not that he wished this amendment. He was satisfied with the law which he had drafted, but he said the Chief of Engineers had willfully misconstrued that law. The Chief of Engineers had said that, in obedience to the law, he was proceeding to make estimates and plans for 35 feet as soon as practicable and ultimately 40 feet. And then recently, my distinguished friend, whom I love very much, Mr. DEMPSEY, made a discovery of what he thought were these two letters, sent to the chairman of the committee last session while the river and harbor bill was under discussion. He concluded that these letters recommend providing 40 feet immediately and is now insisting on amending this bill.

The trouble about my distinguished friend is that he is thrashing over old straw. The committee went into all this matter and discussed it thoroughly in the last bill. I thought it was forever behind us. We had a hearing this session in January, at which Mr. Hulbert and other distinguished gentlemen from New York City were present, and also my distinguished friend who offers this amendment was there. Every argument that he has produced to-day was produced in that hearing before the committee. We had everything before us. We have considered it carefully.

Let me say another thing: If you adopt this amendment, you go directly in the face of a report which has been submitted to you by a joint board of the Army and the Navy——

Mr. DEMPSEY. On the 4th day of February, 1917, before the declaration of war about two months.

Mr. SMALL. Well, my friend says that these letters from the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of War were written after we had declared war. But assume this to be true. That was all discussed pro and con when the bill of last session was under consideration, and the House adopted the amendment to the previous bill, which amendment I have read.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMALL. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I thought I heard the gentleman say something about a depth of 26 feet at Hell Gate and the difficulty of getting down to the depth provided in this project.

Mr. SMALL. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Because they had to go through rock.

Mr. SMALL. Solid rock.

Mr. MADDEN. What depth is it proposed to make this channel?

Mr. SMALL. Ultimately 40 feet.

Mr. MADDEN. What depth is it proposed to make it now?

Mr. SMALL. Thirty-five feet.

Mr. MADDEN. What is the depth of the channel in other places now?

Mr. SMALL. Hell Gate extends from the northern end of Blackwells Island, around the southern end of Wards Island, and up to Negro Point Bluff, as I remember, about a mile and a quarter, and the minimum controlling depth there is 26 feet.

Mr. MADDEN. It is proposed to cut it down to 35 feet immediately?

Mr. SMALL. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. So as to make it in accordance with the rest of the channel?

Mr. SMALL. Yes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The rest of the channel is 40 feet.

Mr. MADDEN. I thought I understood the gentleman to say it was proposed to cut it only 5 feet more, because of the difficulty of cutting through the rock?

Mr. SMALL. No; it is proposed to deepen it 9 feet more.

Mr. MADDEN. There is no more difficulty about cutting through rock than there is through mud, not a bit.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The depth outside of Hell Gate, except at Diamond Reef, is 40 feet, and work at Diamond Reef is being done to make it 40 feet, so that the entire channel except at Hell Gate would have a depth of 40 feet.

Mr. MADDEN. And if that mile and a quarter was made 40 feet, the whole channel would be 40 feet deep?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. SMALL. The whole channel would be 40 feet. Of course, it is not sufficiently wide now. It would have to be widened, you understand, which is very expensive work. Now, if I may proceed, the gentleman is depending entirely upon these two letters, sent by the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of War at the last session.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Before the gentleman proceeds, just following up the question of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY], will he state what the estimated cost would be of a 40-foot channel?

Mr. SMALL. The estimated cost of a commodious channel 40 feet deep would be $36,000,000.

Mr. DEMPSEY. What would be the cost of a practicable channel, which it is intended to secure first?

Mr. SMALL. The cost of a practicable channel 35 feet deep would be $13,400,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I would like recognition.

Mr. SMALL. I would like five minutes more.

Mr. MADDEN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to follow the gentleman from North Carolina.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee). The Chair will endeavor to recognize the gentleman. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I should like to ask whether this depth of 26 feet is at high tide or low tide?

Mr. SMALL. At mean low tide. At high tide it is 5 feet more. Now, I will ask not to be interrupted until I finish this one point.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL] has a letter, which seems to me——

Mr. SMALL. I am coming to that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. All right.

Mr. SMALL. Now, as I stated, these two letters were considered at the last session, and the bill was amended accordingly, so that it is past history, and as my distinguished colleague from Ohio [Mr. SWITZER] said, there is no letter here at this time from either the Secretary of the Navy or the Secretary of War asking that this amendment be adopted. There is, however——

Mr. ROWE. Has either one of these letters been withdrawn?

Mr. SMALL. Of course they have not been withdrawn that I know of, except by inference. They have been withdrawn substantially by the Secretary of War. I asked the Chief of Engineers for any correspondence that had been had on this subject since the enactment of the last river and harbor act, and he referred me to a letter from a distinguished Member of this House, Hon. ISAAC SIEGEL, addressed to the Chief of Engineers on January 31, 1918, upon this very subject.

This letter was as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., January 31, 1918.

MY DEAR SECRETARY: Before the Rivers and Harbors Committee yesterday Col. Newcomer testified that on the East River and Hell Gate project the War Department had advertised for the letting of contracts for 35-foot channel.

Congress at its last session placed the following language in the act:

"East River, New York: For improvement in accordance with the report submitted in House document No. 188, Sixty-third Congress, first session, for a 40-foot channel through East River and Hell Gate, in accordance with the report submitted in House document No. 140, Sixty-fifth Congress, first session, $1,250,000."

Under these conditions may I ask you to immediately take such action as you deem necessary so that the intent of Congress as expressed by the act may be executed, and let the advertising be done for 40-foot channel.

Very sincerely, yours, ISAAC SIEGEL.

So it appears that the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL] had the same thought as the former Member of the House, Mr. Hulbert, not to amend the act, but to secure an interpretation of the law in the river and harbor act of August 8, 1917, in accordance with his contention. Now, here is the reply of the Secretary, who, they say, recommends the present securing of 40 feet immediately:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 5, 1918.

Hon. ISAAC SIEGEL,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. SIEGEL: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of January 31, asking me to take such action immediately as may be necessary, so that the intent of Congress may be executed by at once advertising the work of a 40-foot channel instead of a 35-foot channel through Hell Gate in accordance with the following provision in the river and harbor act of August 8, 1917:

"East River, N. Y.: For improvement in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 188, Sixty-third Congress, first session, and for a 40-foot channel through East River and Hell Gate, in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 140, Sixty-fifth Congress, first session, $1,250,000."

You will observe that the law authorized a 40-foot channel in accordance with the report submitted in the document specified. It is necessary, therefore, to consider the terms of the document in order to ascertain the full legal status of this improvement. By referring to this report you will find, on page 3, paragraph 61 (c), that the improvement proposed at this locality is as follows:

"61 (c) The only connecting channel the construction or improvement of which the Navy Department considers necessary is the channel through Hell Gate and East River between New York Harbor and Long Island Sound. This channel should be given a depth of 35 feet as soon as practicable and an eventual depth of 40 feet."

The authorization of the 40-foot channel, therefore, through East River and Hell Gate, in accordance with this document, obviously authorizes the immediate provision of only the 35-foot channel, to be increased ultimately to 40 feet. The course you propose is not deemed permissible, unless some change is made in the law to authorize it.

In this connection you may be interested to observe, on page 2 of the document, that the improvement actually adopted was not only recommended by the General Board of the Navy and the Joint Board, but was also duly approved by the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of War, and the President.

Very respectfully, NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

The committee at the beginning of this session invited the Secretary of War to recommend any project as intimately associated with the prosecution of the war and which ought to be included in this bill. The Secretary of War not only did not make a recommendation to enlarge this project as this amendment proposes, but he wrote to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL] the letter which I have just read, indicating inferentially if not directly that he was opposed to the amendment. And, at any rate——

Mr. SIEGEL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMALL. I can not yield. The gentleman can put his own interpretation upon it. This letter indicates, inferentially and directly, that he is satisfied with this provision in the last river and harbor act.

Now, that is the letter of the Secretary of War to the gentleman from New York. If I had the time I would like to read a long memorandum from the Chief of Engineers, dated February 13, 1918, addressed to the Secretary of War upon the same subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SMALL. May I have one minute more?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMALL. But, gentlemen say, if we are to have 35 feet as soon as practicable and 40 feet eventually, why not have it all at one time? That is an engineering problem, and I doubt not there are good engineering reasons; but I submit this additional reason: Thirty-five feet can be secured in two years. At high tide, that will mean 40 feet. It will take at least four years, and probably five years, to get the 40 feet, and until the whole 40 feet is accomplished it will not be available.

That in itself would constitute a good reason. One other reason: This 35 feet is absolutely all that is necessary for the commercial needs of the great port of New York and East River. My friend, the gentleman from New York, Mr. CLEARY, will not deny it; everybody familiar with the subject will admit it. The only reason we want 40 feet is for the Navy, and the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of War are not here protesting against the provision that we put in the last bill, which was in accord with the report adopted under the paragraph of the naval bill approved by the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of War and the President. Your committee have endeavored to give you a consistent provision and to deal fairly with the great port of New York, and I ask you to sustain the action of the committee. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, during the consideration of the river and harbor bill last year the chairman of the committee, the gentleman who has just taken his seat, introduced an amendment which is published on page 3986 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of June 15, 1917, and it provided for the improvement of the East River in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 188, Sixty-third Congress, first session:

And for a 40-foot channel through East River and Hell Gate, in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 140, Sixty-fifth Congress, first session, $1,250,000: Provided, That the unexpended balances of appropriations heretofore made and authorized for the improvement of East River and Hell Gate are hereby made available for improvement in accordance with the report submitted in said document: Provided further, That a depth of 40 feet is authorized across Diamond Reef: And provided further, That so much as may be necessary of this and any other appropriations made herein or hereafter for specific portions of New York Harbor and its immediate tributaries may be allotted by the Secretary of War for the maintenance of these waterways by the collection and removal of drift.

Mr. SMALL, chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, in that connection made this statement:

Mr. Chairman, just a brief statement. As the item for East River was originally reported it provided for 40 feet from the lower bay to the navy yard in East River, but did not provide for 40 feet through Hell Gate, at the upper end of East River, running into Long Island Sound. The naval officers and the Secretary of the Navy were quite insistent for strategic reasons that we should have also 40 feet from East River into Long Island Sound. They took it up with the Secretary of War, resulting in a general recommendation. The committee then considered it and agreed to it.

What has changed the mind of the gentleman from North Carolina, chairman of this great committee? He assumes a different attitude to-day from the attitude that he then assumed.

Mr. SMALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Certainly.

Mr. SMALL. "The gentleman from North Carolina" is assuming the same attitude to-day that he did then. We say now that a 40-foot project for East River has been adopted.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman says in the course of his discussion that under the present law it will not be possible to make an appropriation for a 40-foot channel at Hell Gate.

Mr. SMALL. Because the project requires 35 feet first.

Mr. MADDEN. That difficulty is proposed to be remedied by the amendment pending in the House, and that is the reason it is here.

Mr. SMALL. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. MADDEN. Certainly.

Mr. SMALL. Does the gentleman think it a wise policy for the Rivers and Harbors Committee or the House to adopt a project or a modification of a project without having first had it examined?

Mr. MADDEN. If there is anything that could have been examined, judging from the amendment adopted by the House June 15, 1917, and expatiated on so eloquently by the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina, who quoted the urgent recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy, I do not know how we could get a better recommendation than the gentleman and the Secretary of the Navy gave if what he said on June 15, 1917, had any bearing on the case.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Does the gentleman from Illinois always abide by the recommendations of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. MADDEN. No; and I do not abide by them now; I am calling attention to his inconsistency and the necessity of doing something to rectify the wrong that exists now under which we are unable to get consideration for a proposition that he says deserves consideration. Now, we have the great East River project in New York that has already been adopted, on which it is proposed to spend $13,400,000, to which would be added

$2,000,000 more if we adopt the 40-foot project, and upon which we have already appropriated $1,250,000. I do not know the total length of East River, but whatever the length may be there is only 1¼ miles at the point known as Hell Gate that has not already 40 feet depth, as I understand it.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The gentleman is absolutely correct.

Mr. MADDEN. There it has a depth of 26 feet, and the proposition is to make it 35 feet, and the opposition to making it 40 feet is because of the cost, as it will go through rock. It is no more difficult to go through rock than it is through mud. Science has found a way to cut through any material. I can show them how, if they do not know, to get the depth without any excessive cost or difficulty or serious delay. I do not see any reason why we should spend $13,400,000 to deepen this river unless we need it. If we needed 35 feet and there is only a mile and one-quarter obstruction, which is 26 feet, that mile and one-quarter obstruction impedes the progress of the whole movement. It seems to me that there ought to be some consistency in a problem like this. The Secretary of the Navy says it is one of the essential things. He says that we need a land-locked harbor for the Navy.

And he thinks we can find it in Long Island Sound, if they can pass through this channel, and everybody admits they can not pass through this channel unless we deepen it at Hell Gate. Hell Gate is an obstruction of only a mile and a quarter in length, and yet we are afraid to proceed with the improvement because it will violate some rule that has been adopted by the Rivers and Harbors Committee in the procedure which it adopted. Procedure and rules are only invented to prevent people from getting what they ought to have and to give other people what they ought not to have. That is what rules are for. Regulations! Go up to one of these departments and they will tell you that the regulations are violated if they do the thing that you want to have done. That is simply because they do not want to do what you want, but these regulations can always be set aside when they want to do what you want. They are there for the purpose of turning people out they do not want in and for letting those in behind the bars whom they want in, and so with the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. If they have friends anywhere that they want to favor, they make the rules accordingly. If there are those that they do not want to favor, they cut them out by making a new rule, and then they will call attention to document 140 or 148 or some other number [laughter], and they will tell you that you must read the whole document to understand what the law is.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. SMALL. The gentleman has attempted to characterize this committee as formulating its bill through personal favor and prejudice. I repudiate that for the committee, and I say that the gentleman is in error.

Mr. MADDEN. Of course. That is characteristic of the gentleman. When anybody disagrees with him he always repudiates everything that he does not agree with. He repudiated the statement just a few moments ago that he made last year upon the floor of the House by taking a different position. Therefore I do not feel bad at all at being repudiated when he repudiates himself. I am in good company when I stand beside the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL]. If the chairman of the committee can not agree with his own attitude last year upon the subject that is pending now before the House, what right have I to complain because he does not agree with me? [Laughter.] I am mighty glad to be in his company. He is a very nice man; he has a very persuasive way. He knows how to get what he wants when he wants it, and that is a good deal more than a lot of us know. I am glad that I am considered of sufficient importance to be repudiated by the gentleman from North Carolina, because if he can afford to repudiate himself then I am delighted to be able to stand beside him, even if for a few moments only. I have not any thought at all of insinuating there is any ulterior purpose on the part of any member of this committee in the establishment of rules and regulations upon which the bills they report are formulated, but they are not infallible any more than anyone else is, and this great harbor of New York, the greatest harbor in America, if not in the world, ought to be given the consideration which its importance justifies. [Applause.]

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, since this report was written, and since, in fact, the appropriation was made last year, there has been a development on the east of this waterway, known as Flushing Bay, which gives this proposition an added importance. Practically the whole of the harbor of New York has become overcongested with the operations of the war. More than 60 per cent of our matériel and men sent across to France is going through New York Harbor, and it has filled up all the available space. Here, within the last few days—not weeks, but days—Flushing Bay, which is just east of Hell Gate, has been taken for the purpose of building concrete ships to carry our men and munitions across to fight for us. This work can not go on in Flushing Bay to the extent it should go on unless this waterway is opened as it should be opened. Understand, Flushing Bay is a part of—or, rather, is connected with—Long Island Sound, just at the entrance into the East River at Hell Gate, and if the matériel and ships that are to be constructed in Flushing Bay are to be used and not to be subjected to the danger of passing through these Hell Gate rocks, then the Hell Gate rocks must be removed, and it is now for us to do that which we tried to do in the last session of Congress—appropriate the necessary money and put in the necessary words to enable this work to be done. Understand, we are right now collecting for the next few weeks $3,000,000,000 to carry on the war, and I am proud of the fact that on the first day of the campaign New York City subscribed more than 10 per cent of its maximum allotment, and on Long Island town after town has already subscribed every bit of its maximum allotment. This is the place that the money is to be spent, and I say that it is only fair to this country, it is only fair to these patriotic people who have given up their sons and who are now pouring forth their money, that this development go on and that the country be given that which we can give it at this time. I therefore favor the amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, with all the pleasure in the world I rise to support the proposition before the House, and I do it on the broad principle that the benefits that may accrue locally to the harbor of New York and vicinity from this improvement are at the same time a direct benefit to the interior of the United States. The Middle West will be benefited, practically the entire country will be benefited, by improving this harbor which serves the Nation. I speak, representing the second largest port and harbor in the world, in favor of the largest in the world, which is New York City.

There may be some items in the usual river and harbor bill subject to criticism—at least, criticism has been offered somewhat to the bill in times past—but I believe it is an absolute truth, not subject to denial, that every dollar that has been expended in the improvement of harbors in places where great transportation lines center has been the best money ever expended by this Government on any improvement. [Applause.] Now, just let me cite an exact illustration: Before the Government undertook the 20-foot channel, or even the 14-foot channel, from Duluth to Buffalo, it would cost a farmer of Minnesota, of Dakota, Iowa, Wisconsin, and elsewhere from 10 to 15 cents a bushel to take a bushel of grain from one of the terminal markets to New York. That same grain is now being carried at not to exceed a cent and a quarter a bushel, and is often carried at five-eighths of a cent. That is a direct benefit to the men who grow the grain. New York City contains the greatest harbor in the world, and it does not belong to New York City, but it belongs to the Nation. [Applause.]

In the improvement of facilities in New York Harbor, making cheaper transportation, we are improving and making more serviceable to the Nation a national institution. In doing this we benefit every section of the country, wherever a farmer grows and wherever industry produces. Transportation has a direct connection with production and every dollar that cheapens transportation by that much enhances the value of that which is produced. So whatever we spend in the improvement of New York Harbor, improving transportation facilities there, is money well spent. Although New York City unquestionably is in point of commerce the greatest port in the world, many of the port facilities are the poorest in the world. They are nowhere near as modern as many places on the Great Lakes and many places in Europe. One of the crying needs of the hour is improved port facilities at New York. I remember when this item was up a year ago looking into it with some interest and I was firmly impressed with the desirability of a 40-foot channel opening up an eastern entrance to the harbor, not simply for the benefit of New York but for the general benefit of the United States. This is rightly termed a war measure, but in a larger sense it is vital to the proper economical development of the industries of America. [Applause.]

Mr. LUNN. Mr. Chairman, I heartily agree with the remarks of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER]. We must all admit that whatever benefits New York Harbor as a commercial center is of distinct benefit to the whole Nation. I want to speak very briefly regarding the attitude of the Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of War. These eminent gentlemen carefully considered this matter of depth one year ago, and both of them definitely favored a 40-foot channel. Having listened attentively to the chairman of the committee and to others, I failed to hear anything that showed a change of mind on the part of the two Secretaries. In his letter to the chairman, Mr. SMALL, the Secretary of the Navy gave cogent reasons why the channel should be made 40 feet.

After referring to the plan for a depth of 35 feet, and eventually to 40 feet, Secretary Daniels said:

> While deepening and straightening the channel through Hell Gate will be of unquestioned advantage to the commercial interests of the country, the strategic value to the Navy is so great that I believe consideration should be given to securing this channel of 40-foot depth at the present time. While in the beginning a concession was made to obtain a depth of 35 feet and ultimately 40 feet, it was considered that it would be highly desirable, both from an economical standpoint and from a strategical standpoint, to have the work, after it was once begun, continued until the depth of 40 feet has been obtained throughout, and the straightening of the channel, in order to allow the easy and free passage of large ships as well as to prevent the formation of tidal eddies and currents, had been accomplished—

Has Mr. Daniels receded from the position taken last year? Not at all. He then goes on to show the strategic value—

> It will be readily understood that a 40-foot depth of channel leading into the navy yard from the south and an equal depth through Hell Gate would practically double the strength of our fleet if concentrated in Long Island Sound, for the reason that the exits at Ambrose Channel and Montauk Point are so far apart that it would take double the force to contain our fleet in these waters in order to guard the outlet at both of these points to prevent the egress of our fleet.

He has not changed his mind on that point. I submit also that New York is a natural war base. It must be protected at all hazards, not to the exclusion of other points, but that there is a vital necessity for her protection we all recognize. Even if it were for commercial purposes alone, we ought to have a channel that will best serve the whole country, and when we add to that the military and naval necessities I can not escape the force of the simple argument advanced that when you are digging a channel of 35 feet go on and dig 5 feet more, not eventually, but at the time. It sounds most reasonable, and I can not accept the argument against the proposition.

As to the Secretary of War, we find that in a letter to Chairman SMALL, written May 15, 1917, he agrees with the Secretary of the Navy as to the importance of going to a depth of 40 feet. He writes:

> As the result of mature reflection and in view of the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy, I beg leave to concur in the suggestion that an amendment be introduced providing for the present increase in this proposed depth to 40 feet. In other words, I am seconding the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy, and I trust that you and your associates on the committee will find it possible to make this one change in the proposed measure.

It was clear as to just what the Secretary of the Navy, seconded by the Secretary of War, considered to be the most desirable depth. They have not changed their opinions, and I am of the number who accept their judgment.

Mr. SIEGEL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUNN. I will yield.

Mr. SIEGEL. I want to state the exact language the Secretary quoted to me when I saw him after he had written me the letter of February 5, 1918. I never thought and did not think up until to-day that any man would take the floor and state that it requires a letter from the Secretary in order to show that there has been a modification of the language.

Mr. LUNN. One more point, and then I am through, and that is this: Some members of the committee with whom I have argued privately, because I wanted to be right on this question, have said that the work for a 35-foot channel could be done in two years, and possibly at the end of that time the war would be over and materials be very much reduced and the cost thereby reduced for the extension. That argument does not appeal to me. I am in favor of making our plans on the basis that we are in war and that we do not know when we will get out of war. It would be far better to plan for four years or more of war and have it end in two years than to plan for two years and have it continue for four years. The project is a worthy one. We all agree that military necessity demands that the channel be opened up, and all are practically agreed that the depth should ultimately be 40 feet. Then why not now? The Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of War, who should know—and I believe they do know—have agreed as to the commercial and strategic necessity of the 40-foot channel, and they want it accomplished as soon as possible. I therefore favor the amendment and hope the committee will adopt it.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, representing in part an interior State, I am interested just as much as the gentlemen who represent New York State and Connecticut in ample harbor facilities for New York. And I understand that we are proceeding under the present plan to obtain in two years of time a depth of 35 feet, and I understand that the engineers of this Government, every one of them trained at West Point, all capable of looking at these improvements from a military standpoint, are in favor of proceeding with the development of this project to a depth of 35 feet. And I prefer to have their judgment as to military necessities than to have the judgment of these gentlemen from the vicinity of New York City who are advocating now the immediate adoption of a 40-foot project.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAINEY. I yield; yes.

Mr. HUSTED. Does the gentleman know that that is the present position of the engineers of the Army or the prewar position, as stated in the report which has been referred to?

Mr. RAINEY. I know that the engineers approved this bill just as it is. I know the Chief of Engineers has stated that these moneys provided herein are as much as can profitably be expended for these purposes at the present time.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York does not increase the appropriation one cent? The only change is to adopt a 40-foot project in accordance with the two letters of the Secretary of the Navy and of the Secretary of War.

Mr. RAINEY. I understand this to be the case from the statement, the very clear statement, of the chairman of the committee, and—if I am mistaken the gentleman will correct me—I understand that we are proceeding now with the development of a 35-foot channel through Hell Gate, and I understand that it will cost $13,400,000. I am correct so far. And I understand that if we proceed now, changing the plans of the engineers, and adopt now a 40-foot channel, that that means a total expenditure before that project is realized for this purpose of over $36,000,000. Am I right about that?

Mr. DEMPSEY. The gentleman is entirely in error. He has two things confounded. The $13,400,000 is for a practicable channel through East River. The $36,000,000 is for a commodious channel. The one has no relation whatever to the other. The East River is 40 feet deep everywhere except at Hell Gate and Diamond Reef, and it is being made 40 feet at Diamond Reef, and the only obstacle to the depth of 40 feet is the mile and a quarter at Hell Gate.

Mr. RAINEY. Then the gentleman does not stand for a commodious channel through this section?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Not at present. A commodious channel is not what is contemplated at this moment.

Mr. RAINEY. Neither do I.

Mr. DEMPSEY. What is contemplated is a 40-foot practicable channel.

Mr. RAINEY. That is, a narrow channel, without widening it sufficiently to be of value?

Mr. DEMPSEY. It will be of value sufficient so that the Secretary of the Navy says it will make the Navy twice as efficient as it will be without it in that it will enable battleships to come up that way.

Mr. RAINEY. The gentleman made that speech a while ago, and has made it four or five times.

Mr. DEMPSEY. And it was interesting each time, because it was a fact and a vital fact.

Mr. RAINEY. It was intensely interesting, but the gentleman made it perfectly plain the first time, and he is only taking up valuable space in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD when paper costs so much, and I must protest against putting it in so many times.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. RAINEY. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAINEY. I have supported all these bills as they came from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. I voted for them always, even in the dark days when they were bitterly criticized, and I never had an item for my section of Illinois in any of these bills. And I expect to vote for this bill, and I congratulate the committee upon having reported out a particularly moderate bill, carrying only $19,227,900. And I protest against a proposition being injected into this bill at this time which means in order to get a commodious channel, and that is what they will be after when they come here next, an increase on this one item alone of $4,000,000 more than the total amount carried in this bill, upon the theory, first, that New York needs this channel for commercial purposes, because they say the port of New York is congested.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I got the impression somehow last year that we were then providing for a 40-foot channel at this point; that that was the interpretation that the House placed upon it, and it was then agreed to.

Mr. RAINEY. I can explain that to the gentleman. It has been explained a good many times here, but——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I have not heard all of the discussion, I will say.

Mr. RAINEY. It has been explained very clearly by the gentleman from North Carolina, the chairman of the committee.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I am very sorry I did not hear the statement.

Mr. RAINEY. Ultimately, when the needs of commerce demand it, the policy is to dig this channel out to a 40-foot depth. The engineers are proceeding upon that theory now. At the present time there are no craft, according to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON], navigating Long Island Sound which need a channel deeper than 35 feet.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAINEY. No; I regret that I can not.

Mr. HUSTED. Just for one question. Does the gentleman think it would be practical for any vessels to navigate Long Island Sound that could not go through Hell Gate? The very reason they are not there is because they can not get through. If they could get through, they would be there.

Mr. SMALL. The gentleman says that vessels can not navigate through Hell Gate? There is a draft of 31 feet there now at high tide.

Mr. HUSTED. If the gentleman will permit, the argument was that this improvement is not needed because there are not any ships navigating Long Island Sound which require a greater depth than the present depth of Hell Gate.

Mr. RAINEY. I wish the Chairman would advise me who has the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois has the floor.

Mr. RAINEY. There are no craft navigating Long Island Sound requiring a greater depth than they have now at Hell Gate. On account of the peculiar war conditions which exist to-day and the effect of the German submarine war, I doubt whether there is more than one ship sailing the seas of all the world that will require more than 35 feet. Perhaps the Leviathan, formerly the Vaterland, but sailing now under our flag, requires that much, but I can think of no other ship requiring that much water. We are building now in our navy yards and shipyards on both coasts an enormous number of ships. We have contracted for a great emergency fleet, to consist of nearly a thousand ships, destined to carry our khaki-clad soldiers to France while this war is on and our supplies, and after the war is over intended to carry our flag, floating over American cargoes, to all the seas of all the world, and I do not believe a single one of them will draw as much as 35 feet. The commercial necessities for a 35-foot channel have faded away into the distant future and as the demands for a 35-foot channel, the legitimate commercial demands for it, decrease, the energy and the oratory of these gentlemen who advocate now a 40-foot channel increase.

This is a sane river and harbor bill. It has been carefully considered by the committee; it is moderate in amount; it meets with the approval of the engineers; it would be exceedingly unfortunate to commence its consideration by adding to it an amendment which means an ultimate expenditure of $20,000,000 more on this one project than is now contemplated. This is a larger amount than the total carried by this bill. I congratulate the committee upon having well performed a difficult task. The bill they have reported out ought not to be burdened with this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has again expired.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, in order to——

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit me, may we not have some understanding as to the length of time this debate shall continue? I ask that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I would like to have at least five minutes.

Mr. FREAR. Reserving the right to object, I would like to speak about seven minutes.

Mr. SMALL. Then in 30 minutes, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that all debate on the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. SIEGEL. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I asked the chairman before for time. I desire to have three or four minutes in that time to speak in reference to some letters I have here.

Mr. SMALL. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. There is no objection, I will say to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. SMALL. Then I will withdraw my motion, Mr. Chairman, and renew my request for unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, in order to deprive the discussion of all possible partisan character I thought it necessary to take up the defense of the project and the support of the amendment.

I always approach the river and harbor bill with a great deal of hesitation and circumspection. Somehow the prejudices which prevail throughout the country against this sort of legislation have lodged in a corner of my mind. I have been trying hard to dispel those prejudices. I do not believe I have given enough time to the study of all the projects involved. I do not believe it is physically possible for one to make a thorough study of every project involved in the river and harbor bill. But this I do know, that you will dignify this legislation, that you will make it worth while, that you will make it something that a man can honestly and unequivocally and unhesitatingly support by adopting the amendment.

It deals with a permanent improvement. It deals with something that will be of lasting value to the greatest city on the continent. Do not forget that while Boston claims to be the center of American civilization it is New York that is the center of this country. [Applause.] New York has the best schools, the best colleges, the best universities, and, all in all, New York is a miniature edition of America.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I want to add, "the best Congressmen."

Mr. LONDON. Of course, when you take me as the type. [Laughter.]

Mr. DUPRÉ. I must dissent from that part of it. [Laughter.]

Mr. LONDON. I am in favor of widening and deepening Hell Gate. We should promote the plan to remove an obstruction which is only 1¼ miles long, when the removal of that obstruction is essential to creating an improvement that will last for all time. You are not dealing with an expenditure that will be wasted in a year. You are dealing with a permanent and lasting improvement—something that will be of value to the generations to come.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. I do.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Does the gentleman know enough about the engineering propositions to know whether or not if this engineering channel is cut the tides would wash and keep it open or whether they would close it up?

Mr. LONDON. I have enough to do to study the onrush of ideas. I do not know enough about the onrush of the tides to be able to tell the gentleman.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Would the sand wash in and close up the channel?

Mr. LONDON. I know that both the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy look upon this as an improvement of permanent strategic value.

Mr. RAINEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. I do.

Mr. RAINEY. Does the gentleman favor this as a war measure?

Mr. LONDON. I do.

Mr. RAINEY. This is the first war measure the gentleman has favored.

Mr. LONDON. The gentleman is entirely mistaken. I have always stood for everything that will make the American people permanently stronger.

The deepening of this channel at Hell Gate is of permanent strategic value, and I am certainly in favor of anything that will make the United States permanently stronger, that will enable the resources of the country to be utilized more effectually. The Secretary of the Navy says that this improvement will make the American Navy stronger. So that from every standpoint I should favor it. This amendment, calculated as it is to add permanent strategic value, to promote the interests of the greatest port in the country, and, therefore, necessarily to promote the interests of the entire country, should not be obstructed now, and the amendment should be adopted.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, Hell Gate runs from Ninety-second Street, East River, New York, to approximately One hundred and sixteenth Street, East River, New York; in other words, from the northern end of Blackwells Island to the southern end of Wards Island.

When this question was up in June, 1917, the Members of the New York City delegation properly felt that having Mr. HULBERT, one of our colleagues, on the Rivers and Harbors Committee, he should prepare the amendment, having a distinct understanding at that time that it was to be a 40-foot channel. With the exception of the distance which I have described to you, from Ninety-second Street to One hundred and sixteenth Street, East River, there is now a 40-foot channel either actually in existence or shortly to be completed. That applies also to the Diamond Reef, to which reference has been made in the debate. So the whole question boils down to whether you are going to have this mile and four blocks, as we call it in New York City, to be 40 feet deep, so that a battleship leaving the New York Navy Yard, which is located in Brooklyn, may be able to pass through into Long Island Sound and then make its way out, or at a time like this, when submarines may possibly attack any ship, to have a 40-foot channel there, so that battleships may be able to come in through Long Island Sound and then through this channel, and through East River into the harbor of the city of New York, and then make their way up the Hudson, if necessary. The commerce of New York is constantly growing and the best interests of the Nation require this improvement.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. SIEGEL. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. What is the draft of our largest battleship?

Mr. SIEGEL. It will be 35 feet. Now, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] has in his speech pointed out the statement made by the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, at page 3986 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on June 15, 1917, and I would quote the following language:

> The naval officers and the Secretary of the Navy were quite insistent for strategic reasons that we should have also 40 feet from East River into Long Island Sound. They took it up with the Secretary of War, resulting in a general recommendation. The committee then considered it and agreed to it.

At page 3987 of the RECORD we find the letter from the Secretary of the Navy dated May 7, 1917, and also the letter from the Secretary of War dated May 15, 1917; and the first time that the Members from New York learned that this was not to be a 40-foot channel was when we appeared before the Rivers and Harbors Committee on January 30, 1918; whereupon I wrote the letter which has been read by the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL], chairman of the committee, and the response of the Secretary of War. Later the Secretary——

Mr. SMALL. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. SIEGEL. Yes.

Mr. SMALL. Do I understand the gentleman to admit that this project was adopted in the last river and harbor bill in accordance with Document 140, Sixty-fifth Congress, first session, and that the gentleman did not read that document?

Mr. SIEGEL. I do not yield any further, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. SMALL. Does the gentleman admit that he did not read it?

Mr. SIEGEL. No; I do not. I read it, but I state that we had a right to rely on the statement of the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors that it would be 40 feet, and we have a right to rely to-day that he will stand by it.

Mr. SMALL. I appreciate the gentleman's confidence——

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, I do not yield any further as I have not the time. The gentleman has had every opportunity to offer his version of the matter, and I have had a hard time to get a few minutes.

The Secretary of War states in his letter:

> As the result of mature reflection and in view of the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy, I beg leave to concur in the suggestion that an amendment be introduced providing for the present increase in this proposed depth to 40 feet. In other words, I am seconding the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy, and I trust that you and your associates on the committee will find it possible to make this one change in the proposed measure.

After I received the letter, which has been read here to-day, in February previous to the Secretary's leaving the country, I saw him, and the Secretary said that we all understood that it was going to be a 40-foot channel. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I feel as if it were almost an impertinence to obtrude myself in the debate, living as far away as I do from the great commercial center, in a rural district, and I am afraid I can not make a sympathetic appeal to the House. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON], when he was bragging that the city of New York was the center of civilization, almost pursuaded me to reverse my opinion of this amendment. There are two things influencing me in reaching the conclusion that I have in reference to this measure. First, the commercial view; my training has been commercial. I have been in the course of my life a very considerable shipper of heavy commodities, like cotton. I have always appreciated the value of ports and the value of improved navigability of the streams. I know how directly it influences and increases the prosperity of the producers of the country, with whom I confess my sympathies go very largely.

Then there is the military point of view, and about that I have but very few words to say, because I am compelled to accept the opinions of distinguished gentlemen who are presumed to know, and undoubtedly do know, very much more about it than I do. I dare say that Josephus Daniels, that distinguished of all our sailors [laughter], had consulted technical experts when he gave the opinion in the letter that he signed. And that eminent warrior from out of the Lakes in Ohio, Mr. Baker, I dare say had the advantage of professional opinion before he gave out his letter. It is specially the commercial view that appeals to me now, because I accept at once what they state as the military view of it as conclusive. I am in favor of increasing the navigability of Long Island Sound if, as the Secretary of the Navy says, the efficiency of the Navy will be doubled, and without delay.

Unfortunately in the consideration of this rivers and harbors bill we are confronted with one difficulty that we can never get over, a condition that we can not cure, and that is the regular growth in the size of the vessels that come into our ports. Why, I have seen the commerce of Galveston built up largely on water not over 15 or 16 feet deep, and it now has over 30 feet, and it is not adequate to accommodate the traffic that comes to that port, which, by the way, is the second port in the United States in the value of its exports.

I remember, too, in my business career of an incident that occurred in 1900 when we were moving the great cotton crop of Texas, and had just begun to do so. The prices were good. The people were satisfied and they were turning out a crop very rapidly when that great calamity came to the city of Galveston in September, 1900, killing one-third of the population and destroying the commerce of the port for weeks. That left 265,000 square miles of territory in this country without a port from which to send the produce to the markets of the world. We were compelled to send the cotton to New Orleans, and that port was blocked almost immediately by a strike, so that on account of the delay the people of Texas alone lost enough money in the decline in the value of their crops in the next 30 days to have completed the project at Hell Gate and made a good port in Texas in addition.

We have not always had the sympathy of the good people of New York in our endeavors to get more facilities for the ports of Texas. The press of that great city has jeered at us and denounced us as grafters, and said that we were endeavoring to get ports where there was no commerce. If you make that a condition before granting assistance, no new ports will ever be provided. It is unfair and unreasonable, but it does not affect my opinion of the supreme importance of doing all we can for the harbor of New York. Right now the Government of the United States is making an examination of the facilities of Gulf ports with an idea of relieving the freight congestion, due to the fact that it has nearly all found its exit up at New York or Boston or Philadelphia. I am not jealous of the prosperity and of the facilities for trade these ports have. I rejoice in their prosperity. It is American commerce, and it is my commodities and the commodities of my constituents that have their values largely fixed by the conditions at the ports of New York, Boston, and Philadelphia.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to proceed for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Texas be extended for one minute.

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, is not the time all taken?

Mr. SLAYDEN. If the gentleman objects——

Mr. STAFFORD. I believe the time is not sufficient for those who desire to speak.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair feels that he should recognize some one opposed to the amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I desire recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, there seems to be some difference of opinion as to what will be accomplished by the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY]. As I understand the argument advanced here to-day and a year ago, it is that a 35-foot channel is adequate for all commercial needs, and that it would not improve the commercial advantages of the port of New York if the channel were greater, and that it might as well be 80 feet deep as 40 feet.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Not at present. I decline to yield. And that the——

Mr. DEMPSEY. I would like to propound one short question.

Mr. STAFFORD. I hope the gentleman will not take up my time, as I have indicated that I decline to yield.

And that the 35-foot channel was founded on the report made to the Congress that that was sufficient for all commercial needs. Then came a later report from the Secretary of the Navy that for strategic reasons he advocated a 40-foot depth, and because of that demand the Congress last year provided for the prosecution of the work, first, of a 35-foot channel, with the ultimate end of making a 40-foot channel. Bids have been let and this is the point I wish to impress on the committee: It is a practical question of great urgency, as I view it, especially if this war is going to continue. Bids have been let for a 35-foot channel and the work is proceeding under contract in Hell Gate at the present time for that depth of water through that narrow channel. If we now go ahead and authorize a 40-foot channel, we not only postpone the attainment of a 35-foot channel in two years, which during three or four hours of the day will enable any vessel of our Navy to go through Hell Gate from either end, but to change now would postpone that desired end for five years. It stands to reason, known to anyone who knows anything about submarine channeling, that if you are going to proceed on a 40-foot channel you will necessarily go at it piecemeal, and they will not remove it to a depth of 35 feet over the entire length all at once, but you will have 40 feet in places, with a barrier of 26 feet, as now existing, over the passageway, which at no time during the day will permit our naval vessels to go through that channel. Our largest naval vessels have a draft of 33 feet and only require 40 feet when they are disabled.

The depth of 40 feet will be obtainable at high tide, and at high tide it will permit of the passage of the largest naval vessel when disabled. I submit that it is a practical question, and I submit it to the Members outside of the State of New York as to whether it is not feasible from a strategic standpoint, because we are all in sympathy with the idea of having a 40-foot channel there ultimately—whether it is not practical, common sense at the present time to let the contractor go ahead with the 35-foot channel, complete it in two years, and thereby enable our vessels in time of need to avail themselves of it during four hours of the day rather than to delay the work entirely and not be able to get any of our naval vessels through there until five years hence.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. SMALL. The only harbor in the United States which has been improved to a greater depth than 35 feet is that at New York, from the lower bay to the upper bay, up through the Hudson River. There is no harbor in the United States which has been improved beyond that except New York.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is generally conceded, so far as commercial advantages are concerned, that if the navy yard was not located at Brooklyn and that was removed from the consideration, that 35 feet would be adequate for all commercial needs, but there is some special reason why, because of the location of the Navy Yard at Brooklyn, it should be 40 feet. That is the position of Secretary Daniels, but I emphasize the practical, pressing needs of completing the job we are on now. Contracts have been let, and let us complete that 35-foot depth, and when we have that the channel will be available for even disabled naval vessels of the largest size to pass through during three or four hours in the day. If you adopt the amendment, you will not have any channel during any part of the day until five years from now adequate for such an exigency.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I dislike very much to oppose the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors on this proposition, who is my personal friend, but I am one Member of this House, at least, who is very strong on deep channels to the great cities along the seaboard. I think that Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Norfolk all ought to have 40 feet of water just as soon as we can give it to them. [Applause.] Why, here is a proposition which requires the deepening of Hell Gate to 40 feet, and I thoroughly understood, as a Member of this House, that we were authorizing that depth last year when we passed the bill. Just why it was placed in this doubtful position I do not know. There is one advantage in deepening Hell Gate that has not been mentioned, and that is, while we know it is rock, yet when it is eventually deepened we do not have any more trouble in keeping it in repair and in keeping it deep, because it will remain so.

Mr. SLAYDEN. We will not have to dredge it.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Quite true. We will not have to keep on dredging at a large expense each year. I want to see New York have a splendid channel. I want to see us comply with the request of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, as most of us, at least, thought we were doing last year. I heard the arguments of gentlemen as to deepening the channel to 35 feet at this time and then later on perhaps 40 feet, but I can not see why the contractors, if they want to do so, can not deepen to 35 feet and then proceed at once to 40 feet; that is their business. It seems to me Congress ought to try to comply with the request of those gentlemen who are conducting this great war in which we are engaged and deepen this channel to 40 feet just as soon as we can. [Applause.]

If we go on with the 35-foot channel and then after a while want to make it 40 feet, it will cost a great deal more money. You have to assemble the machinery and men and everything of that kind just as if the job had started as a new proposition, and I think we can save a very large expense by going ahead with the 40-foot proposition at this time. I want to see these Atlantic seaport cities have 40-foot channels. I want to see us try to keep our Nation's ports to the front in the world, and we ought to take care of them as best we can. [Applause.] Now, in our city of Baltimore we have a 35-foot channel, with only 14 inches of tide. We want a 40-foot channel. We do not want to wait until the boats grow so that they can not get up the channel. We want to improve the channel in advance so that when the boats do reach that draft we can accommodate them. [Applause.] That is what New York wants to do. Now we all realize the importance of New York to this Nation, we realize the importance of all of these Atlantic seaport cities to the Nation, we realize they are the great gateways through which our commerce passes to the ports of the world, and we want to improve them and put them in shape that they can carry on our commerce at least expense and have just as many terminal facilities as it is possible to provide. Now, I notice the report says that we are to deepen it to 35 feet and "eventually" to 40 feet, and I am reminded of the sign which confronts me on Pennsylvania Avenue every time I go up the Avenue there which says, "Eventually, why not now." That is what I think of this proposition. [Loud applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I am placed in a position where I feel I ought to support the action of the committee, and I expect to vote for the bill when it is finally reported out by the committee. I say this because it is the first bill I have supported for several years, if memory serves me correctly. My reason for that is, Mr. Chairman, that the committee as a whole has worked arduously to get a bill before this House and before the country that would be a credit to us at this time providing for all immediate emergencies and which would meet all war necessities. There were many propositions proposed to the committee that have merit which were left out.

When it came to the question of new projects, and this is in that line, although not necessarily a new project, the committee had some very hard contests. And let me say this is the easiest part of it that we are going through now. We have had some hard contests in the committee, all good naturedly, but eventually we kept out the new projects, and we felt it was the necessary thing to do.

The situation that confronts us in respect to New York Harbor is briefly this: We all realize the benefit of New York Harbor to the country at large. It is not a local matter, and we all feel that whatever New York wants it is going to get eventually. If it needed it to-day I would vote for it, but there is no evidence that we need it to-day. When they have a 35-foot channel and, as has been repeatedly said, with a 5-foot tide, they have a channel sufficient to take any boat through. That is the testimony of the engineers themselves. Eventually, of course, we want to give you all you want. But the spectacle, Mr. Chairman, that you have here now will come all through this bill if you provide this. You will have men coming from every place that has a harbor that needs a greater depth, and they will stand together as they have in the past. That is the objectionable feature of an omnibus bill like this. What we ought to do is to remove that entirely from the floor of the House. It ought to be left to experts in commercial life as well as in war, and have the bill removed from political influences.

The reason I speak of that is not because of New York Harbor, but because all the way through this bill you are likely, if you break it down now, to have new projects added or efforts to have them. There are $18,100,000 left for this project. Two million, one hundred thousand dollars is the amount of the appropriation, making $4,000.000 with the amount on hand, with which to go on with this project.

It has not been shown but that that is sufficient so far as the commercial needs are concerned, and for that reason, and more particularly because as a member of the committee I desire to stand by our purpose in trying to keep out new projects and trying to prevent amendments to the bill made upon the floor by those who are directly interested in a particular locality, that I take the attitude that I do. That is not the correct theory on which to proceed. It ought to be done by the recommendation of the committee, based upon the recommendations of the engineers as nearly as we can comply with them. I have heretofore objected very strenuously to certain items that appeared in the bill. There are certain items in this bill that I would like to see stricken out or modified. But a compromise necessarily has to be had, and we have stricken out about $30,000,000 from this bill, and, compared with some bills, we have cut it down to a small amount.

And let me say this. There are amendments to be offered here by the committee that I do not believe in. If you put a 40-foot channel at Charleston with $5,000,000 in this bill, I say that you can not back up on the proposition of putting 40 feet in New York City. That is one of the propositions you will face before you get through with the bill, as I understand it. Without a word of testimony before the committee, without a single effort to show the necessity for it, an amendment will be proposed, as I understand, in this committee for a 40-foot channel, with $5,000,000 appropriated, to be added to this bill, for Charleston. Now, if that is put in, I can conceive that New York certainly has a good case here. I am opposed to it, and was opposed to it before, not because of Charleston, for they will have a 35-foot channel there when they get their high tide. But I am opposed to it because I want to adhere as near as I can to the action of the committee when we went through these different items. And in order to explain my position I have made this brief statement.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Will the gentleman yield for a moment? The gentleman will recall that when he asked for 30 minutes' debate I asked for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that there are two minutes remaining of the time.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman wishes to ask unanimous consent I will not object.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that there are two minutes remaining.

Mr. SMALL. Then the gentleman from Mississippi will only need three minutes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I think the debate——

The CHAIRMAN. What is the request of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS]?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I rose for recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Mississippi for two minutes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, I want to read briefly——

Mr. DEMPSEY. Just one moment. I wanted to ask the chairman a question before granting unanimous consent.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, I have only two minutes. I wanted to use that time in the interest of the gentleman.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I know that, but I wanted to ask the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] a question. We have had debate, Mr. Chairman, the whole afternoon upon this question. Now, those who are present here have heard this debate.

Mr. SMALL. I expect to move that the committee rise when the debate is concluded.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I ask, Mr. Chairman, in the interest of fairness and in the interest of everybody here who has heard this debate, that we have a vote of these gentlemen who have heard it before we adjourn. I say that is only fair.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my objection.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, I did not ask for unanimous consent. I yielded to the gentleman. Have I any time left?

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Mississippi may have five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Mississippi may have five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I will take the time. I want to read, Mr. Chairman, from the testimony of Gen. Black, who is now Chief of Engineers, and who at the time he gave this testimony was a colonel in charge of the work in New York, in which he uses this expression—and I would like to have order, if I can have it, Mr. Chairman; it occurs to me it is important. He says:

> Now, there is another phenomenon that should be taken into consideration, and that is that a ship underway draws more water than it does at rest. Sometimes an ocean liner underway at the rate of 12 or 13 miles an hour at low water will draw 43 to 44 feet of water. A ship may draw 26 feet lying at the wharf, but when she is underway she may draw 28 or 30 feet.

So that if we are to provide a channel for ships of 33-foot draft, as suggested by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], they can not navigate a channel of only 35 feet. This is rock, and the Navy Department very properly would not trust a ship that drew 33 feet of water in a channel with rock bottom of only 35 feet depth, because as it moves it will draw more than 35 feet of water.

If we are to provide a channel there that will accommodate the big ships it must have more than 35 feet of depth. Whether it ought to be provided or not is a matter for the committee to determine. They have, however, approved 35 feet. That will only carry a naval ship, at the outside, that draws 30 feet of water. So that if we want a channel that will carry the big ships we must have it more than 35 feet. You know there is a current across this particular reach in the river, a considerable current, so that the danger to navigation there is much greater than it would be in still water.

I thought that it would be well to have that fact presented to the House.

A few years ago, when we were undertaking improvements in New York Harbor the engineers—and Gen. Black was then colonel in charge of the work—stated to the committee that if we were ultimately to have a certain depth, whatever that would be—in this instance 40 feet—it was thoroughly uneconomical to start out with 35 feet and afterwards go back and make it 40 feet, for the reason that when you get the big contractors, if they are to do it, or say the Government is to do it, they assemble their large dredging and blasting plants and they bore down into the rock for 35 feet. Now, if it is ultimately to be 40 feet, it is much more economical, after we arrive on the scene and begin the work, to go to the ultimate depth you expect to obtain when you blast it.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Not now. And so it is when you are digging in the mud, but, of course, not to the same extent. You carry your ships there, your dredge boats, and your plant which you are to work with; it is very much cheaper to finish the job while you are on the point than it is to dig it 35 feet and go away, and afterwards come back and start the work all over and dig out 5 feet more.

In addition to that, Gen. Black testified that on this original project of $13,000,000 if you would go at it piecemeal it would cost at least, on the least estimate, 20 per cent more. In other words, $2,600,000 would be added to the cost of that project if you are going to take it just a little at a time. The same would apply to this other, except to a greater extent. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I object, and demand a vote on the amendment.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LONDON. If we vote down that motion to rise we can proceed to the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will dispose of that later. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. DEMPSEY and Mr. CALDWELL demanded a division.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is called for.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 49, noes 58.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I demand a vote on the amendment.

Mr. SMALL. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Tellers are demanded.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. SMALL and Mr. DEMPSEY to act as tellers.

Mr. SMALL. Will the Chair designate the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWITZER]?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I will ask that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] be named in my stead.

Mr. SMALL. The gentleman must not understand that it was personal in the least.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Not in the least personal, but I thought I would nominate the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] inasmuch as you had nominated the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWITZER].

The Chair appointed Mr. SWITZER and Mr. HUMPHREYS to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 53, noes 59.

Accordingly the motion was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. SMALL), there were—ayes 62, noes 51.

Mr. SMALL. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina demands tellers. Those in favor of ordering tellers will rise and stand until they are counted. Evidently a sufficient number, and tellers are ordered.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I want to know how many there were.

The CHAIRMAN. Considerably more than 20, the Chair will say to the gentleman. Those in favor of ordering tellers will again rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Twenty-nine Members, a sufficient number, and tellers are ordered. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY] will please take their places as tellers.

Mr. SMALL. I ask that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BOOHER] act in my place.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I ask that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] act in my place.

Mr. BOOHER and Mr. HUMPHREYS accordingly took their places as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 68, noes 43.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the rivers and harbors appropriation bill (H. R. 10069) and had come to no resolution thereon.

DISPENSING WITH CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with Calendar Wednesday to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to dispense with Calendar Wednesday. Is there objection?

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the reason.

Mr. KITCHIN. So that we may proceed with the rivers and harbors bill to-morrow and take up the quota bill Thursday.

Mr. PHELAN. Reserving the right to object, we have some bills coming up to-morrow from the Committee on Banking and Currency, and I should like to ask the gentleman if it is intended to give us next Wednesday for that purpose.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; we intend to have Calendar Wednesday next Wednesday. This is in order to make room for the quota bill on Thursday, and let the rivers and harbors bill have to-morrow, so that we can get through with it by Friday and begin the naval bill on Saturday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] to dispense with Calendar Wednesday to-morrow?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 37 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, April 10, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Acting Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on preliminary examination of the Kill van Kull from Shooters Island west to junction of channels with a view to dredging shoals between channels to provide anchorage grounds (H. Doc. No. 1031); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Acting Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, reports on preliminary examination and survey of Bayous Courtableau, Boeuf, and Cocodrie, La. (H. Doc. No. 1032); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with illustration.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. PHELAN, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11283) to amend and reenact sections 4, 11, 16, 19, and 22 of the act approved December 23, 1913, and known as the Federal reserve act, and sections 5208 and 5209, Revised Statutes, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 479), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. DOREMUS, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11284) to authorize aids to navigation and for other works in the Lighthouse Service, and for other purposes, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 480), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. MASON: A bill (H. R. 11315) to amend the act of February 4, 1887, regulating interstate commerce; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. BLANTON: A bill (H. R. 11316) to discourage prize fighting and to impose taxes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. EMERSON: A bill (H. R. 11317) to punish destruction, etc., of liberty loan posters; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. MASON: A bill (H. R. 11318) to amend the act of February 4, 1887, regulating interstate commerce, to foster and encourage knowledge of American institutions; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. FRENCH: A bill (H. R. 11319) amending section 100 of an act entitled "An act to extend protection to the civil rights of members of the Military and Naval Esablishments of the United States engaged in the present war"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. VOLSTEAD: A bill (H. R. 11320) to reimburse the governors of States and Territories for expenses incurred by them in aiding the United States to raise, organize, and supply and equip armed forces of the United States in the existing war with Germany and its allies and to protect citizens of the United States in Mexico and on the Mexican border; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HASKELL: A bill (H. R. 11321) to transfer the Commercial Economy Board from the Council of National Defense to the Department of Commerce; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11322) to transfer the Bureau of Navigation from the Department of Commerce to the Shipping Board; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11323) to transfer the Bureau of Fisheries from the Department of Commerce to the Department of the Interior; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11324) to transfer the Patent Office from the Department of the Interior to the Department of Commerce; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11325) to transfer the Bureau of Lighthouses from the Department of Commerce to the Shipping Board; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11326) to transfer the Coast and Geodetic Survey of the Department of Commerce to the Shipping Board; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11327) to transfer the Steamboat-Inspection Service from the Department of Commerce to the Shipping Board; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. FORDNEY: A bill (H. R. 11328) to promote the welfare of American seamen in the merchant marine of the United States; to abolish arrest and imprisonment as a penalty for desertion; and to secure the abrogation of the treaty provisions in relation thereto; and to promote safety at sea; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BACHARACH: A bill (H. R. 11329) for the relief of William H. Bozarth; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CLAYPOOL: A bill (H. R. 11330) granting an increase of pension to Thomas C. Rodgers; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. COX: A bill (H. R. 11331) granting an increase of pension to William T. Kimbrel; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CURRY of California: A bill (H. R. 11332) granting a pension to George Eicheldinger; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. EVANS: A bill (H. R. 11333) granting a pension to Charles F. Lufkin; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FORDNEY: A bill (H. R. 11334) granting an honorable discharge to Henry T. Shafer; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11335) granting an honorable discharge to William H. Sweet; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R.) 11336) granting a pension to Martha J. Comstock; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11337) granting an increase of pension to George Cook; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11338) granting an increase of pension to Oscar A. Adams; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11339) granting an increase of pension to Brainard D. Nelson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11340) granting a pension to Anna Anthony; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GARD: A bill (H. R. 11341) granting a pension to Michael Tahaney; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11342) granting a pension to James F. Davis; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11343) granting a pension to Henry M. Libbey; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11344) granting an increase of pension to Phillip M. Fudge; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11345) for the relief of Henry L. Biddle; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. GOODALL: A bill (H. R. 11346) to amend and correct the military record of Alvah B. Doble; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KING: A bill (H. R. 11347) granting a pension to James F. Kenney; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11348) granting a pension to Harrison Lantz; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11349) granting an increase of pension to John L. Williams; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11350) granting an increase of pension to Lewis C. Derry; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. NEELY: A bill (H. R. 11351) granting an increase of pension to Timothy K. Davis; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11352) granting an increase of pension to Alpheus N. Barnhouse; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PURNELL: A bill (H. R. 11353) granting a pension to Violette F. McCool; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ROBBINS: A bill (H. R. 11354) granting an increase of pension to W. C. Knox; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SCHALL: A bill (H. R. 11355) for the relief of the Atlas Lumber Co.; Babcock & Willcox; Johnson, Jackson & Corning Co.; and the C. H. Klein Brick Co., each of which companies furnished to Silas N. Opdahl, a failing Government contractor, certain building materials which were used in the construction of Burke Hall, at the Pierre Indian School, in the State of South Dakota; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SNOOK: A bill (H. R. 11356) granting an increase of pension to Oren Blain; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11357) granting an increase of pension to Augustus Brown; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. VINSON: A bill (H. R. 11358) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Mary E. Hellegeist; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11359) to construct a public building for a post office at the city of Sandersville, Ga.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. WHITE of Ohio: A bill (H. R. 11360) granting an increase of pension to Stephen Devol; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. CARY: Petition of the Milwaukee Association of Life Underwriters, proposing a change in the wording of the provision of the war-revenue bill relating to tax upon life-insurance premiums; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of the Merrill Study Class, Merrill, Wis., demanding repeal of the zone system of postal rates on second-class matter; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. DALE of New York: Memorial of River City Lodge, No. 108, Brotherhood of Railway Carmen of America, Portsmouth, Ohio, against increase in second-class postage; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of Pennsylvania College for Women, opposing increased rates of postage on newspapers and periodicals; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of Lapine Commercial Club, Lapine, Oreg., opposing the zone system of postal rates; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. DILLON: Petitions of about 125 South Dakota farmers, asking for a revision of wheat grades and asking for a minimum price of $2.75 per bushel for the 1918 wheat crop; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. ESCH: Memorial of Highway Officials and Good Roads Advocates, favoring more and better highways; to the Committee on Roads.

By Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan: Petition of George Ricket, F. H. Baker, and 75 other citizens of Dowagiac, Mich., favoring universal military training; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. PETERS: Petition of Castine Masonic Club, of Castine, Me., favoring repeal of zone system of postal rates on second-class matter; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. RAKER: Petitions of J. J. Pfister Knitting Co.; Buckingham & Hecht; Judson Manufacturing Co.; Standard Biscuit Co.; Gerson & Breyer; Meese & Gottfried; O'Rourke, Eubanks Hat Co.; California Wine Association; Marvin Shoe Co.; Shirek & Sons; Garcia & Muggins; Getz Bros. & Co.; L. Dinkelspiel Co.; L. Samter & Sons, of San Francisco; Hedges-Buck Co., of Stockton; Klein-Norton Co., of Los Angeles, Cal.; Illinois-Pacific Glass Co., favoring passage of Senate bill 3962, relative to payment of excess profits and taxes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. TEMPLE: Petition of First United Presbyterian Church of New Castle, Pa., favoring war emergency prohibition as war measure; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, April 10, 1918.

(Legislative day of Saturday, April 6, 1918.)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

PUNISHMENT OF SEDITIOUS ACTS AND UTTERANCES.

The Senate as in Committee of the Whole resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8753) to amend section 3, title 1, of the act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 15, 1917.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Henderson	Myers	Smith, Ariz.
Baird	Hitchcock	New	Smith, Ga.
Chamberlain	Hollis	Norris	Smith, S. C.
Culberson	Jones, Wash.	Overman	Smoot
Cummins	Kellogg	Penrose	Sterling
Dillingham	Kendrick	Poindexter	Thompson
Fall	King	Ransdell	Tillman
Fletcher	Kirby	Robinson	Trammell
France	Lodge	Shafroth	Underwood
Hale	McCumber	Sheppard	Walsh
Hardwick	McNary	Simmons	Williams

Mr. PENROSE. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. KNOX] on account of official business.

Mr. FLETCHER. I wish to announce that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] is absent on account of illness.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to announce that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] is absent in connection with the liberty-loan campaign.

Mr. NEW. I wish to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. WATSON] in connection with activities for the liberty loan.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-four Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. JOHNSON of California, Mr. NUGENT, Mr. SWANSON, Mr. WADSWORTH, Mr. WARREN, and Mr. WEEKS answered to their names when called.

Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. HARDING, Mr. BECKHAM, Mr. CURTIS, Mr. FERNALD, Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. COLT, Mr. MARTIN, Mr. NELSON, Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. THOMAS, and Mr. JAMES entered the Chamber and answered to their names

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-two Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I ask consent to present a report from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield to the Senator for that purpose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the report will be received.

AIRCRAFT PRODUCTION.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. From the Committee on Military Affairs, I submit a report in the matter of aircraft production. I ask that the report be printed, and also that it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I desire to present a minority report and ask also to have it printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I ask that the report made by the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs be printed in the RECORD, and I include in the request that the views of the minority be printed with it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That order has already been made.

The report and the views of the minority are as follows:

[S. Rept. No. 380, pt. 1, 65th Cong., 2d sess.]

INVESTIGATION OF THE WAR DEPARTMENT—AIRCRAFT PRODUCTION.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Military Affairs, being engaged under authority of the Senate in an investigation of the War Department, and having taken much testimony, herewith submits the following report in the matter of aircraft production, together with certain recommendations:

TRAINING SCHOOLS.

The Signal Corps has established and is now conducting 20 aviation training schools in the United States. Four additional schools are in process of construction and are expected to be finished in June next.

The aggregate capacity of the schools now in operation is something over 3,000 cadets. One thousand nine hundred and twenty-six have thus far been graduated from this primary training course and commissioned as reserve military aviators. Very few of these have received their advanced training in this country.

In addition to the above, the Signal Corps, acting upon the invitation of the several entente Governments dispatched some 1,200 cadets to England, France, and Italy last year, who were to receive primary and advanced training in aviation schools of those countries. The experience of a great many of these men has been most unfortunate in that at some of the schools a very serious delay has occurred in providing them with the training planes, which it was expected would be manufactured in foreign factories in sufficient number. As a result, several hundred of the American cadets have been practically idle and have made no progress. About 450 of them are reported as having completed the primary training, after long delay. The Signal Corps is giving serious consideration to the advisability of bringing the remainder back to the United States to be trained. With the exception of this severe disappointment, the primary training of our aviators, according to the testimony of the aviation officials, appears to be progressing favorably. The health record of the schools is excellent and the fatalities arising from aviation accidents, while always distressing, appear to be less frequent than in the schools of our allies, according to the testimony of the Chief Signal Officer.

TRAINING PLANES.

For some time after the inception of the work the output of primary training planes in this country for use in our schools gave ground for grave concern. In recent weeks, however, the output has been greatly increased and there seems to be no doubt of the Signal Corps having an amply sufficient number in the future. On April 1, 1918, 3,458 primary training planes had been completed. The planes are of two standard types developed for the purpose and are equipped with Curtiss and Hall-Scott motors, respectively. The advanced training planes are being turned out in accordance with the schedule and estimates laid down at the inception of their manufacture. In advanced training planes four types are being made, the total number up to date manufactured being 342. In these planes three types of engines will be used, of which 965 have been completed. These include the Gnome, Le Rhone, and Hispano Suiza, all of foreign design but American manufacture. The Liberty motor is not suitable for use in these planes.

THE LIBERTY MOTOR.

It is apparent from the evidence that the 12-cylinder Liberty motor is just emerging from the development or experimental stage. Since the original design and the setting up of the first completed motor in July, 1917, a large number of changes have been found necessary, many of them causing delay in reaching quantity production. Within the last two months changes of considerable importance have been made which, it is hoped, will make the motor serviceable for combat planes of the defensive type, and for bombing and observation planes. It is not designed for and can not be used in the swift, single-seater fighting machine. A few of the motors are being flown in appropriate machines. These reports, as recited to the committee, indicate that with the latest changes the motor will be satisfactory for the character of work expected of it, and that it bids fair to hold its own with foreign motors of similar power, weight, and purpose. For the campaign of 1919, the Liberty motor must undoubtedly be further improved in order to keep up with the evolution constantly going on along the front. The motor as now manufactured is of the direct-driven type, a type which has limits of usefulness in heavy machines.

Steps are being taken in the designing of a geared drive, in order that the usefulness of the motor may be further extended and further improvements attained. Twenty-two thousand five hundred Liberty motors have been ordered, 122 have been completed for the Army, and 142 for the Navy. Four have been shipped over seas. Some of those already delivered are being altered to overcome the defects ascertained during the last few weeks. It is understood, however, that these alterations will consume but a very short time.

The production of Liberty motors to date is, of course, gravely disappointing. The testimony shows that experts of the highest reputation and experience have, since last July, repeatedly warned the officials of our Government that the perfecting of a newly designed motor must inevitably involve many months of painstaking experiment, accompanied by many setbacks and disappointments. In spite of the unanimous testimony of motor experts along this line, the Government officials having the manufacture of the Liberty motor in charge have made the mistake of leading the public and the allied nations to the belief that many thousands of these motors would be completed in the spring of 1918. Information of this sort, not borne out by the facts, has been injurious, and its constant dissemination the committee regards as misleading and detrimental to our cause.

COMBAT PLANES.

The production of combat planes in the United States for use in actual warfare has thus far been a substantial failure and constitutes a most serious disappointment in our war preparations. We had no design of our own; neither did we adopt any one of the European designs until months after we entered the war. Much time was consumed in discussion as to types. Innumerable changes in designs and specifications of the types finally decided upon have cost further delay. In all, five types have, at one time or another, been adopted. Two of them have been abandoned after the expenditure of much time and money. The three remaining types still left upon our program are now in the course of manufacture. Of these, the largest and most powerful is the Handley-Page heavy bombing machine, designed to carry as many as six men, eight machine guns, and a heavy load of bombs, and to be driven by two Liberty motors. The history of the negotiations for the adoption and manufacture of this plane afford a remarkable illustration of procrastination and indecision, too long to recite. Suffice it to say that the designs and specifications of this plane which had been used with marked success by the British and placed in production by that Government, were offered to our officials as early as May, 1917. The testimony before your committee shows that the Signal Corps finally decided upon the manufacture of a number of sets of parts of this machine about January 1, 1918. Eventually the finished and tested parts will be shipped to England, where they are to be finally assembled in factories now being prepared for this work. Officials of the Aviation Section of the Signal Corps testify that they do not expect the completion of the first set of parts in this country before the month of June, 1918.

Another type of combat plane, known as the De Havilland, is included in our program. This machine habitually carries two men, four machine guns, a moderate load of bombs and other apparatus, and is to be driven by one Liberty motor. Fifteen have been completed; 1 has been shipped to France; the remaining 14 have been very recently completed in this country. Some of these have been tested, propelled by a Liberty engine, and appear to have given satisfaction. The third type upon the program is known as the Bristol fighter This machine is lighter and faster than the De Haviland. Its speed is expected to be in the neighborhood of 125 miles per hour. It is what is known as a reconnoissance machine. Another term which might be properly applied to it is "defensive fighter." It carries two men, four machine guns, and is driven by one Liberty motor. The decision to make this type was reached on November 7, 1917. The manufacturers completed the first of these machines during the week ending March 30, 1918. The machine was tested once during that week with a Liberty motor, and, according to the testimony of the aviation officials, met its preliminary test successfully. This machine, a few hours after its flight, caught fire while standing upon the aviation ground and was entirely destroyed. The officials of the Signal Corps assured the committee that another machine would soon be finished by the manufacturer and that if it met the tests satisfactorily quantity production might be expected within a reasonable period. The testimony as to this machine was given on April 2, 1918. This completes the list of machines now under manufacture and constitutes a correct statement of the situation in this country as of April 1, 1918. In addition to the American production of engines and aeroplanes as herein set forth, considerable orders for combat aeroplanes and engines were last summer placed with European manufacturers by Gen. Pershing, and we have furnished quantities of material and numbers of mechanics to aid in their construction.

Your committee has full information as to the number and quantity of machines and engines ordered here and abroad but does not feel justified in stating the number in this public report. The facts contained in this report are drawn from the testimony of the Chief Signal Officer, Gen. Squier, Col. Deeds, and Mr. Potter, the chief of the Equipment Division of the Aviation Section of the Signal Corps, and are confirmed from other sources official and otherwise.

Your committee, being devoid of technical knowledge of motors and aeroplanes, does not undertake to point out in detail engineering and manufacturing errors which may have been committed and which, in part, may account for this gravely disappointing situation. Your committee, however, is convinced that much of the delay in producing completed combat aeroplanes is due to ignorance of the art and to failure to organize the effort in such a way as to centralize authority and bring about quick decision. A certain aloofness in dealing with persons possessing information based upon experience, an apparent intention of confining the actual production to a restricted number of concerns, and a failure of the officials in charge of the work to grasp the situation in a broader way and seize upon the best approved foreign engines and planes and proceed promptly to build as many as possible for the campaign of 1918 has contributed to the failure. It is greatly to be regretted that the statements of Government officials have misrepresented the progress of the aviation program. This has misled the public, and your committee, cognizant of the facts, has, in the performance of its duty, made this report to the Senate.

Your committee believes that production of aircraft should be controlled by one executive officer, appointed by the President and responsible to him. He should be assisted by a corps of the best aircraft engineers and designers possible to obtain, both European and American. The matter of production should be taken out of the hands of the Signal Corps entirely, and no man who has any near or remote interest in a company manufacturing airplanes or engines should be permitted to act as adviser or be in authority. While we are developing American aircraft and American engines we should temporarily, at least, procure an abundant supply of approved types of aircraft and engines of European design.

Further, it seems to the committee that every encouragement should be given to the development of aircraft and that any action which retards progress, such as trust agreements or the prevention of those developing machines from flying, under proper restrictions, should be removed.

The committee also believes it to be its duty to point out that thus far no broad plan looking to future development has been laid down by the authorities. Warfare in the air is still in its infancy and it is inevitable that rapid changes will take place in both engines and planes. It is essential to our success that those in charge of the American aviation development shall be constantly looking ahead and devising plans for a continued expansion of the program, as well as the development of new types of engines and planes.

INVESTIGATION OF THE WAR DEPARTMENT—AIRCRAFT PRODUCTION.

Mr. SHEPPARD (for himself and Messrs. MYERS and KIRBY), from the Committee on Military Affairs, submitted the following:

VIEWS OF THE MINORITY.

We do not believe that the report of the majority of the Senate Military Affairs Committee on the aviation situation shows a proper estimate of what is being accomplished or that it is sufficiently complete to give an accurate impression of the facts.

Soon after the war began the Signal Corps arranged with the French Government for the making of 6,100 combat planes at a total cost of $127,000,000, the planes to be produced as rapidly as American flyers could be trained to operate them. As the American aero squadrons reach the front ready for duty, battle planes are being supplied them under this arrangement. To aid in this foreign manufacture of planes for American flyers, the Signal Corps has shipped to France 11,000 tons of various materials and has sent 7,000 mechanics to release for French factories making planes for our American flyers the French workers on motor transports. The Signal Corps then arranged for the making of about 11,500 combat planes in the United States, the term "combat plane" being here used to embrace all kinds of planes, both offensive and defensive, except training planes. The Curtis Aeroplane Corporation, the Dayton Wright Aeroplane Co., the Fisher Body Co., the Standard Aero Corporation, the Grand Rapids Aeroplane Co., W. H. Mullen & Co., and about 19 other companies throughout the country were engaged for the production either of completed machines or of spare parts.

Let it be said here that when the war began the United States Government had purchased altogether less than 200 aeroplanes in its entire history, and that of the few aeroplane factories in this country probably not one was making over five or six a month. It is hardly possible to grasp the magnitude of the task the factories contracting to make the 11,500 combat planes found before them. New plants had to be constructed, old ones fundamentally changed. Special tools for the making of the planes had to be devised and manufactured, and mechanics had to be trained to make the tools and also to make the planes after the tools had been completed. An aeroplane, especially the battle aeroplane, is one of the most highly technical, delicate, and complicated machines known to man. In no other form of machinery is absolute and painstaking accuracy in the smallest details more indispensable. It has about 4,000 parts and requires from 1,800 to 2,800 different drawings in the preparation for its manufacture, almost as many drawings as are required for a battleship. Every part is strained to the utmost while the machine is in the air, and the slightest break almost anywhere means instant disaster. When it is remembered how often the wheels of railway trains, due to hot boxes, etc., parts of railway and automobile engines, tires on autos, etc., go wrong, necessitating immediate repair, and that any similar breakdown in an aeroplane would mean, as a rule, death to its occupants, some part of the responsibility and difficulty involved in making a finished plane may be understood.

Remember further that every fighting plane must have machine guns, synchronizing devices, special telescope airplane sights, wireless apparatus, cameras of special type, electric heating devices for clothing, oxygen apparatus, speed indicators, special gauges, barometers, compasses, altometers, etc., to say that this complicated equipment is in steady and adequate production, and that factories are now about in shape for quantity production of combat planes, and have about completed the foundation for what is as difficult and responsible a task as has ever fallen to the hand and brain of man, is to state the truth and at the same time to recite an achievement unparalleled in all history for so short a time.

Remember again that when these combat planes were contracted for the only known lubricating oil adapted to their delicate parts was an oil made from the castor bean. There were not enough beans in this country to make anywhere near the amount of oil required. Neither were there enough seeds with which to grow the needed quantity of beans. The Signal Corps had to search the globe for seeds and finally secured a shipload from distant India. Then the corps had to contract for the planting of the seeds in this country and has succeeded in having about 110,000 acres planted. It is now claimed that a form of petroleum has been developed that will answer the same purpose. This, however, is still in the experimental stage, while the oil from the castor bean is known to be entirely adequate and reliable.

Remember again that the cloth used in the wings of the aeroplanes of all types had to be treated with a liquid substance which makes the cloth as fireproof as possible and also strengthens it for the immense strain to which it is subjected in the air. The Signal Corps is having this acetone distilled from wood under its own supervision on an enormous scale and at a cost of about $20,000,000.

The corps has had to find a substitute for Irish linen as the material for wing cloths on training planes, and has succeeded in adapting a certain form of long staple cotton to this need.

Coming now to the training plane, it may well be said that the completion of 3,500 to date, and the fact that they are now in quantity production, practically according to program, constitutes a remarkable achievement when the nature of the task is fairly weighed. The training plane is simpler than the battle plane and for that reason could be produced sooner, but the making of the training planes on a quantity scale is in itself a task of unprecedented difficulty and magnitude.

Let it be remembered, further, that the Signal Corps had to put regiments of workers in the forests to find the spruce needed in the making of aeroplanes. The spruce trees are found among fir and other trees, and of each 100 feet cut only about 15 per cent is found sound enough for aeroplane construction. Approximately a billion feet of lumber had to be cut and inspected and tested before the necessary 100,000,000 feet of spruce could be obtained.

Propellers are made of mahogany and other highly durable woods, and three or four must be made for each machine. This mahogany comes from the Tropics, and whether and when it can be brought to seaport depends on tropical rains, which swell the rivers so as to permit transportation.

Let us now consider the liberty motor. The liberty motor could not fairly have been called an experimental and untried device. It represented a combination of what had been demonstrated to be best in all motor construction. The Signal Corps, with its trained and skilled engineers, understood that a foreign motor could not be adapted to American manufacture and turned out in sufficient quantity in anywhere near the time in which the liberty motor could be produced. Foreign motors are based on the metric system of measurements, etc. American practice and American manufacture are not adapted to this system. All parts made under the metric system must be converted into inches and fractions of inches under our system. The foreign motor is so extensively the result of handwork that it is with great difficulty adapted to the machine work that dominates American factories.

Furthermore, the liberty motor is capable of 100 more horsepower than any foreign motor, except a few of one single type—the Rolls-Royce. The liberty motor develops 400 horsepower ordinarily and is capable of 465. The foreign limit, with the one exception above mentioned, is 300.

The liberty motor has become so well established that the British Government has asked for a large number. Sir William Weir, head of British aircraft production, stated recently in London that he considered the liberty engine the greatest single factor in the world's aviation program; that it was the most important single thing in the air program of England in 1918.

As soon as the liberty motor had been designed arrangements were made for the manufacture of a very large number before the close of 1918. The exact figures are withheld for military reasons. Henry Ford agreed to produce a substantial number of the total, the Packard Co. another portion, the Lincoln Motor Co., Nordyke & Marmon, General Motors, and the Trego Co. still other portions. These companies were notified to get ready last summer, and the actual contracts were signed later. They have spent the intervening time preparing plants, tools, and workmen for this unprecedented work and are now on the eve of quantity production. The very names of these manufacturers are sufficient assurance that they would not take a day longer than necessary to lay proper and efficient foundations.

The foreign planes which were accepted by the Signal Corps, known as light battle planes or single seaters, for which the liberty motor is too heavy in horsepower, were none of those offered by foreign concerns that came to America soon after the war began to sell their wares, except the Handley Paige, and that was not the plane which the Handley-Paige people first offered our Government on this side. Indeed, when the Handley-Paige plane was first offered here it was untried and undeveloped and had not been accepted by the British Government. The Signal Corps sent a commission abroad to study foreign planes on the ground and accepted certain ones only after careful and personal study.

On the whole, the record of the Signal Corps is one of which every American can be justly proud. In the face of unparalleled difficulty it is accomplishing an unparalleled task with characteristic American energy, capacity, patriotism and enthusiasm.

INDEMNITY FOR DAMAGES IN FRANCE.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, out of order I ask unanimous consent to present a report (No. 379) from the Committee on Claims, and I also ask for its immediate consideration. It is the bill (S. 4289) to give indemnity for damages caused by American forces abroad. It is an urgent matter. It was sent down some time ago by the War Department. The Judge Advocate General has sent me a letter explaining the necessity for prompt action concerning the bill. I am going to ask that the letter be printed in the RECORD. The necessity for the passage of the legislation is explained in a cablegram sent by Gen. Pershing to the War Department, and that will also be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to have the Senator read the cablegram, so that we may know just what the bill is intended for.

Mr. ROBINSON. The letter in which Gen. Pershing's cablegram is set forth is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE JUDGE ADVOCATE GENERAL,
Washington, March 27, 1918.

Hon. JOSEPH T. ROBINSON,
Chairman Committee on Claims,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR ROBINSON: When the Secretary of War left for Europe he charged me with the duty of looking after War Department legislative projects pending in Congress. Among these projects is S. 3781—a bill to provide for indemnity for damages caused by American troops abroad, now pending before the Committee on Claims. Cablegrams received from Gen. Pershing indicate the urgent necessity of the speedy passage of this bill in order that the reputation of the United States may not be seriously injured with the French people. The bill itself provides nothing beyond that which would secure justice and equity. Viewed alone from this standpoint some delay in its passage would not be serious, but when it is pointed out that under existing law the United States is absolutely unable to indemnify the French people for losses sustained by them due to injuries and accidents caused by the Government I believe that a situation is presented which calls for the speediest possible action upon the part of Congress.

Under date of January 17 Gen. Pershing cabled as follows:

"Subparagraph F, with reference to my indorsement of June 23 on Judge Advocate's letter, subject. Claims by inhabitants of France for damages caused by American military, and to paragraph 5, your cablegram 563, most urgently recommend immediate enactment of laws providing that hereafter appropriations for incidental expenses, Quartermaster Corps, shall be available for the prompt payment, under such regulations as the Secretary of War may make or cause to be made by the Commanding General of the American Expeditionary Force in Europe, of claims for injuries to persons and damage to property resulting from the acts or omissions of the United States military forces in Europe. Inability to pay claims for injuries due to accidents caused by Government motor vehicles and other causes result in much hardship and injustices to French people, and seriously injures our reputation as compared with British. Proposed legislation designed to authorize prompt settlement of the claims of inhabitants that would be paid by French Government under French laws if resulting from acts of French forces. We avail ourselves of French laws to quarter our troops in homes of their people, and should therefore conform to the French laws in our relation to them as nearly as practicable. Desire to inaugurate system employed by British, of district and division claim officers for the settlement of small claims and general claim board for large claims. Will have benefit of precedent of British claim board for guidance. Proposed legislation will not supersede One hundred and fifth Article of War, but will facilitate its enforcement. Have delayed making this recommendation pending decision of the comptroller in France. Comptroller holds no appropriation available and says, 'My regret is in not being able to find any authority of law for doing what would appear ought to be done.'"

Another cablegram from Gen. Pershing, of date March 21, is as follows:

"With reference to paragraph 1F, my cablegram 506, and paragraph 1, your cablegram 726, please advise us as to what progress has been made in the enactment of legislation authorizing settlement of claims. If bill does not conform precisely to my recommendation in paragraph 1F, my cablegram 506, desire to be informed of the exact text of the bill."

In view of the situation above set out, would it not be possible for you to have this bill immediately acted upon by your committee? An identical bill (H. R. 9901) has been favorably reported by the Committee on Military Affairs of the House and is now pending in the Committee of the Whole House. I have just addressed a letter to Mr. DENT, calling his attention to the situation as above explained to you, and have urged him to immediately secure the action of the Committee of the Whole House and the passage of the bill by the House. I am hoping that Mr. DENT will be able to secure the passage of this bill within the next few days. If, in the meantime, your committee would favorably report the Senate bill, then the House bill could be placed before the Senate for immediate passage upon its arrival from the House.

Very truly, yours,

E. H. CROWDER,
Judge Advocate General.

Mr. SMOOT. I am not going to object to the passage of the bill, but simply want to say to the Senator from Arkansas that similar legislation has been presented to the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, and in several cases they have already acted. As this affects an appropriation recommended by that committee, I can not see why the department did not send the bill to it.

Mr. ROBINSON. I will state——

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator——

Mr. ROBINSON. Let me make a statement.

Mr. SMOOT. Very well.

Mr. ROBINSON. The department evidently did not know what committee would have jurisdiction of it, and originally sent the bill to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, who introduced it. He did not call my attention to it. My attention was subsequently called to the matter in the letter of the Judge Advocate General, and I reintroduced the bill and now report it from the Committee on Claims. It is questionable whether the jurisdiction as to some sections of the bill might be divided, but in my opinion the Committee on Claims is the appropriate committee, and that is manifestly the view of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, it proposes to authorize money to be paid out of an appropriation that has already been made. But I shall not object to the consideration of the bill at this time, for I believe the legislation ought to pass; I care not very much how it reaches that stage.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That claims of inhabitants of France or of any other European country for damages caused by American military forces may be presented to any officer designated by the President, and when approved by such an officer shall be paid under regulations made by the Secretary of War.
